OSSAT (Arnaud d'), a cardinal, was born in the county of Armagnac, of poor parents, in 1536. By the kindness of a gentleman he received a good education, and was appointed tutor to some young noblemen. He afterwards practised the law; but forsook this profession, and became secretary to cardinal d'Este, and afterwards to cardinal de Joyeuse. In 1593 he obtained the papal absolution for Henry IV. for which he was made bishop of Rennes in 1596; and the year following counsellor of state. In 1598 he was made cardinal. He died in 1604. His Letters have been printed in 2 vols. 4to. and 5 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

OSSIAN, an ancient Scotch bard, was the son of Fingal, whom he accompanied in several military expeditions. He lived to an advanced age, and at the close of life became blind. Mr. Macpherson published a translation of poems, in a sort of poetical prose, which he ascribed to Ossian; but their authenticity has been disputed by several critics, and as zealously defended by others.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

OSTADE (Adrian van), a painter, was born at Lubec, in 1610. His subjects are people smoking and drinking in alehouses and kitchens, which he represented in a masterly manner. He died at Amsterdam in 1685.—Houbraken. Pilkington.

OSTERVALD (John Frederic), a protestant divine, was born at Neuchâtel in 1663, and died in 1747. His works are, 1. A Catechism of the Christian Religion, 8vo.; 2. Arguments and Reflections on all the Books of the Bible, 2 vols. 8vo.; 3. Treatise against Uncleaness, 8vo.; these have been translated into English; 4. Treatise on the Sources of Corruptions, 12mo.; 5. A Collection of Sermons, 8vo. His son, John Rodolph Osterwald, was pastor of the French church at Basil, where he was greatly esteemed. He wrote a Discourse on the Duties of Communicants, 12mo.—Moreri.

OSTERWYCK (Maria van), an ingenious female artist, was born near Delft in 1630, and died in 1693. Her favourite subjects were flowers and still life, which she painted in a delicate manner, and with great freedom.—Pilkington.

OSWALD, king of Northumberland, was obliged, after the death of Ethelfrid his father, to take refuge in Ireland; his uncle, Edwin, having taken possession of the throne. He became a christian in his retreat; and returning to his own country, defeated Cerdowalla, king of the Britons, who lost his life. Oswald re-united the two kingdoms of Northumberland; but was slain in a battle with Penda, king of Mercia, A.D. 643. The monkish historians relate many miracles performed by his relics, for which he was canonized.—Moreri. Rapin.

OSWALD (Erasmus), professor of Hebrew and mathematics at Friburg. He published a translation of the New Testament into Hebrew, and other works. He died in 1579.—Moreri.

OSYMANDYAS, an Egyptian king, and the first monarch who formed a library. He caused a colossal statue of himself to be erected, on which was this inscription: "I am Osymandyas, king of kings: whoever will dispute this title with me, let him surpass my works."—Ibid.

OTHO (Marcus Salvius), Roman emperor, was born at Rome, A.D. 32, of a family which descended from the ancient kings of Tuscany. Nero, whose companion he was in his debaucheries, elevated him to the highest offices in the empire. After Nero's death he attached himself to Galba, but that emperor having adopted Piso as his heir, Otho excited an insurrection, murdered Galba and Piso, and ascended the throne in 69. He was opposed by Vitellius, who was supported by the German army, and, in a battle between the two rivals near Cremona, Otho was defeated, on which he slew himself, after reigning three months.—Crevier.

OTHO I. emperor of Germany, called the Great, was the eldest son of Henry the Fowler, and crowned in 936, at the age of 14. Berenger having usurped the title of emperor in Italy, Otho entered Rome, where he was crowned by John XII. That pontiff afterwards leagued with Berenger, on which Otho caused him to be deposed, and put Leo XIII. in his place in 963. On the emperor's return to Germany, the Romans revolted, and imprisoned Leo; for which Otho again visited Rome, where he severely exercised his vengeance on the senate. He next turned his arms against Nicephorus, emperor of the East, whose army he defeated, and, after cutting off their noses, sent the prisoners to Constantinople. John Zimisces, the successor of Nicephorus, made peace with Otho, who died in 973.—Univ. Hist.

OTHO II. furnished the bloody, succeeded his father, the preceding emperor, at the age of 18. His mother Adelaide opposed his accession, on which he expelled her from court. Her party proclaimed Henry duke of Bavaria emperor; but he was defeated by Otho, who also repulsed the Danes and Bohemians. He afterwards marched into Italy against the Saracens, by whom he was taken prisoner in 982, but ransomed for a large sum. He died at Verona the year following.—Ibid.

OTHO III. the son of the preceding, was only three years old at the death of his father. On coming to age he took the reins of government, and went to Italy, which was in a state of confusion, owing to the opposition of different popes. Otho having re-established order, returned into Germany, and made Boleslas king of Poland. He was obliged again to pass into Italy, to quell a revolt, and died there in 1002, aged 22 years.—Ibid.

OTHO IV. called the Superb, was the son of Henry duke of Saxony, and chosen emperor in 1197. He was excommunicated by the pope for seizing the lands which the countess Matilda bequeathed to the holy see. The princes of the empire elected Frederic king of Sicily in the room of Otho, who retired to Brunswick. He died in 1218.—Ibid.

OTHO (Venus), a painter, and the instructor of Rubens, was born at Leyden in 1556. After residing at Rome several years, he went to Germany, where he was employed by the emperor. He died at Brussels in 1634. He had two brothers, Gilbert, an engraver, and Peter, a painter.—Houbraken.

OTROKOTSKIPORIS (Francis), an Hungarian, who completed his studies at Utrecht, and became a minister in his native country. He afterwards renounced the protestant religion, and obtained some preferment in the state. He died at Tirmau in 1718. He wrote, 1. Origines Hungaricæ, 2 vols. 8vo.; 2. Antiqua Religio Hungarorum vere Christiana et Catholica, 8vo.—Moreri.

OTT (Henry), a Swiss divine, was born in 1617. He became professor of ecclesiastical history at Zurich, and died there in 1682.—Moreri.

OTTER (John), a learned Swede, was born in 1707, and died in 1748. He published Travels in Turkey and Persia, and an Account of the Expeditions of Kouli Khan.—Ibid.

OTWAY (Thomas), a dramatic writer, was born in Suffex in 1651, and educated at Winchester school; from whence he removed to Christchurch, Oxford, which he left without taking a degree, and went to London, where he became a performer and writer for the stage. The earl of Plymouth gave him a cornetcy in a regiment in Flanders, but Otway being disgusted with the army, returned to London, where he died miserably in 1685. Having been compelled by his necessities to contract debts, and haunted by the terrors of the law, he retired to a public-house on Tower-hill, where he died of want, by swallowing, after a long fast, a piece of bread which charity had supplied. Otway excels in touching the tender passions in tragedy, of which his Orphan and Venice Preserved are proofs. His works have been collected in 3 vols. 12mo.—Johnson's Lives of the Poets.

OUBENARDE (Robert van), a painter, was born at Ghent in 1663. He was the disciple of Carlo Maratti, after which he settled at his native place, where he painted many fine pictures for churches, convents, and noblemen's palaces. He died in 1743.—Pilkington.

ODIN (Cassim), a French monk, was born at Mezieres in 1638. In 1690 he quitted France, and went to Leyden, where he professed the protestant religion, and was made under-librarian of the university. He died there in 1717. His works are, 1. Commentarius de Scriptoribus Ecclesiæ antiquis, illorumque scriptis, 3 vols. folio; 2. Veterum aliquot Galliarum et Belgii Scriptorum Opuscula sacra nunquam edita, 8vo.; 3. Supplement to Ecclesiastical Authors, omitted by Bellarmine, 8vo.; 4. the Monk of Premontre unfrocked.—Moreri.

ODIN (Francis), a French jesuit, was born in 1679 at Vignori in Champagne. After professing theology and the languages at Langres with reputation, he settled at Dijon, where he died in 1752. His principal works are, 1. Somnia, a Latin poem of great merit; 2. Poemata Didascalica, 2 vols. 12mo.; 3. Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; 4. a Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans; 5. Celtic Etymologies; 6. Historia Dogmatica Conciliorum; 7. Lives of several persons in the Collection of Nicéron.—Nov. Dict. Hist.

ODINET (Mark Antony), a medallist, was born at Rheims in 1643. He was professor of law at his native place, and afterwards keeper of the royal cabinet of medals. He was also a member of the academy of inscriptions, and died in 1712. He wrote three Memoirs on Medals.—Ibid.

ODRI (John Baptist), a French painter, was born in Paris in 1686, and died there in 1755. He was the disciple of the celebrated Largillieres, and excelled in painting animals, and historical subjects, with landscape scenery.—D'Argenville.

OUCHTRED (William), a divine and mathematician, was born in Buckinghamshire in 1573, and educated at Eton, from whence he was elected to King's college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. About 1603 he was presented to the living of Albury in Surry, where he devoted himself to mathematical pursuits, and wrote several treatises, particularly his Clavis, the plan of which was adopted by sir Isaac Newton. In the rebellion he suffered considerably for his loyalty, and died of joy in 1660, on hearing that the king was about to be restored. His Opuscula were printed in 1676.—Biog. Brit.

OUSSEL (Philip), a learned protestant divine, was born at Dantzic in 1671, of a family which originally came from France. He was professor of theology at Frankfurt on the Oder, where he died in 1724. His works are, 1. Introductio in Accentuationem Hebræorum metricam, 4to. in this work he supports the singular notion, that the Hebrew points and accents are of equal antiquity with the sacred books; 2. De Accentuatione Hebræorum profana, 8vo.; 3. De Lepra, 4to.—Moreri.

OUWALER (Albert), a Dutch painter, was born at Haerlem in 1444, and died in 1515. He painted historical subjects.—Ibid.

OVERALL (John), a learned prelate, was born in 1559, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, in which university he became regius professor of divinity. In 1601 he was preferred to the deanry of St. Paul's, and in 1614 to the bishopric of Lichfield and Coventry, from whence he was translated to Norwich, where he died in 1619. Bishop Overall wrote a book on Convocations, and some other works.—Biog. Brit.

OVERBURY (sir Thomas), an English gentleman, was born in Warwickshire in 1581, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Temple, after which he attached himself to Car, earl of Somerset, by whose means he was knighted. Though he had assisted that unprincipled nobleman in his amour with the countess of Essex, he opposed his marriage with her, for which he incurred the hatred of both. On a frivolous charge he was sent to the Tower, where, by the contrivance of Somerset and his wife, he was poisoned in 1613. Two years afterwards the circumstance of Overbury's death was discovered, but though the instruments were executed, the noble delinquents received the royal pardon. Sir Thomas was the author of several pieces in verse and prose, which were reprinted in 1753 in 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

OVID (Publius Ovidius Naso), a Latin poet, was born at Sulmo in Italy, B. C. 43. Being intended for the law, he was sent to Rome for education, and from thence to Athens. He made a considerable progress in eloquence; but poetry had more charms for him than the art of pleading. Having settled at Rome, his accomplishments procured him many great friends, particularly Augustus, who, however, ordered him to be banished to the banks of the Euxine sea, where he died, A. D. 17. The occasion of his disgrace is variously related. Some assert that it was for having written his Art of Love; others say, that it was for having had an intrigue with Livia, the wife of Augustus; and there are those who maintain, that the true cause was Ovid's discovering the emperor's unnatural attachment to his own daughter Julia. The works of Ovid which are extant are, his Metamorphoses; the Art of Love; Elegies; Epistles; and Fragments. They are characterised by sweetness of style, glowing expression, and elegance of description, mixed, however, with much licentiousness. The best edition is that of Burmann, 4 vols. 8vo.

OVIEDO (John Gonfalso de), was born at Madrid in 1478. He became one of the pages of Ferdinand king of Arragon, and Isabella queen of Castile. He afterwards accompanied Columbus on his first voyage to Hispaniola. In the war of Naples he rendered great services to Spain, for which Ferdinand appointed him inspector-general of the commerce of the New World; in which capacity he went to Hispaniola, where he took great pains in enquiring into the causes and remedies of the venereal disease, which is supposed to have been carried thither from Naples, and the virtues of the guaiacum in that disease are said to have been discovered by him. On his return to Spain he published Summario de la Historia general y natural de las Indias Occidentales; printed at Salamanca 1535, folio.—Moreri.

OWAIN, son of Cadwygan ab Bleddyn, a prince of Powys. Having carried off Nest, the wife of Gerald, constable of Pembroke, he and his father were obliged to fly to Ireland, but they afterwards returned to their own country. Owain succeeded his father in 1110, and the year following was in Normandy with Henry I. who knighted him. He was killed by Gerald, the husband of Nest, in 1114.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

OWAIN, the son of Maren Wledig, an eminent character in the Welsh annals. He broke off the connexion between Britain and the Romans, and was in consequence chosen sovereign of the country. He was also accounted a saint in the British church.—Ibid.

OWAIN, commonly called Owen Tudor, lord of Penmynydd in Mona, or Anglesea, was born about 1385. He studied the law, which profession he abandoned, and went abroad. Catherine, the wife of Henry V. after her husband's death, fell in love with Owain, and privately married him in 1426. They had three children; the eldest entered into a monastery, Edmund became earl of Richmond, and Jasper was earl of Pembroke. After the death of Catherine, Owain was confined in Newgate, from whence he effected his escape, but was retaken; however he soon obtained his liberty, and died on his estate.—Ibid.

OWAIN CYVELLOG, a prince, a warrior, and a poet, who made war against Hywel ab Cadwygan and Rhys ab Gruffydd. He died in 1197. A fine specimen of his poetry is in the Welsh Archæology.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

OWAIN GLANDWR, commonly called Owen Glendower, the last of the descendants of the Welsh princes who struggled for their independence, was born in 1348. He was bred to the law, and became esquire to Richard II. but Henry IV. confiscated his lands, which he gave to lord Grey, who had represented Owain as a disloyal subject. On this Owain assembled his friends, burnt the town of Ruthyn, and took lord Grey; whom, however, he ransomed for a considerable sum. In 1402 Owain defeated Edward Mortimer in Radnorshire, and made him prisoner; after subduing Glamorgan-shire, he assembled a Welsh parliament, by which he was acknowledged sovereign of Wales. In 1404 Owain solicited and obtained some succours from France, but the capture of Caermarthen was the only consequence. His affairs soon declined, and Owain was obliged to lead a secluded life; and died in the disguise of a shepherd in 1415.—Ibid.

OWEN (John), the epigrammatist, was born in Caernarvonshire, and bred at Winchester school, and from thence elected to New college, Oxford, after which he became schoolmaster, first at Trylegh in Monmouthshire, and next at Warwick. He died in 1622. His Latin epigrams possess great point, and are little inferior to those of Martial.—Wood.

OWEN (George), a physician, was educated at Oxford, and became fellow of Merton college in 1519. Henry VIII. to whom he was physician, left him a legacy of one hundred pounds. He served in the same capacity Edward VI. and queen Mary, and died in 1558. Dr. Owen wrote, A Meet Diet for the New Age, 1558, folio.—Aikin's Biog. Ann. of Medicine.

OWEN (John), a learned independent divine, was born at Hadham in Oxfordshire in 1616, and educated at Queen's college. In the civil wars he was a zealous advocate of the parliament against the king, and obtained some preferment. Cromwell made him his chaplain, and gave him the deanry of Christ church, Oxford, where he served the office of vice-chancellor in 1652, and the year following took his doctor's degree. He is said to have been of very tolerant principles, though a rigid Calvinist. At the restoration he was deprived of his deanry; on which he retired to his estate in Essex. He died in 1683. Dr. Owen was a very voluminous writer. His greatest works are, an Exposition of the Hebrews, 4 vols. folio; Discourse on the Holy Spirit, folio; The Use of Original Sin, 8vo.; and Sermons and Tracts, 1 vol. folio.—Calamy. Wood.

OWEN (Charles), a native of Montgomery, was ordained minister of a dissenting congregation at Bridgenorth in Shropshire, which place he was forced to leave, till king James published his declaration granting liberty of conscience. He died in 1712, aged 58. Mr. Owen wrote several pieces in defence of the nonconformists.—Ibid.

OWEN (Henry), a learned divine of the church of England, was born in Monmouthshire, and educated first at Ruthin school, and next at Jesus college, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.B. but afterwards he entered into orders, and obtained the vicarage of Edmonton in Middlesex, and that of St. Olave, Hart-street. He died in 1795, aged 80. His works are, 1. Observations on the Scripture Miracles; 2. Remarks on the four Gospels; 3. An Enquiry into the Septuagint Version; 4. Sermons preached at Boyle's Lecture, 2 vols.; 5. An Introduction to Hebrew Criticism; 6. The Modes of Quotation used by the Evangelical Writers explained and vindicated; 7. Posthumous Sermons, 2 vols.—Europ. Mag. Gen. Biog. Dict.

OWTRAM (William), a learned English divine. He was prebendary of Westminster in the reign of Charles II. and wrote an excellent treatise De Sacrificiis. He died in 1679. A volume of his sermons was printed after his death by bishop Gardiner.—Preface to his Sermons.

OZENSTERN (Axel), grand chancellor and prime minister of Sweden, was born in 1583. He became the confidential favourite of Gustavus-Adolphus, which distinction he merited by his ability and integrity. After the death of that monarch he had the entire management of the affairs of the Swedes, and of their allies in Germany, in the quality of director general. He died in 1654. The History of Sweden, written in German, has been attributed to him. He had three sons who came to distinguished rank. John was ambassador and plenipotentiary at the peace of Munster. Gabriel became grand marshal of Sweden; and Benedict was grand chancellor of that kingdom.—Moreri.

OZANAM (James), a French mathematician, was born in 1640. He was educated for the ecclesiastical state, which he renounced for the study of mathematics and philosophy, which he taught with great reputation at Paris, where he died of an apoplexy in 1717. His principal works are, 1. a Dictionary of the Mathematics, 4to.; 2. a Course of Mathematics, 5 vols. 8vo.; 3. Mathematical Recreations, 4 vols. 8vo.; 4. Use of the Compass of Proportion, 12mo.; 5. Elements of Algebra, 4to.; 6. Practical Geometry.—Moreri. Hutton.

OZELL (John), an industrious writer, was born in Leicestershire, and educated at the school of Athby de la Zouch. He was auditor-general of London, and of the accounts of St. Paul's cathedral, and St. Thomas's hospital. He died in 1743. Mr. Ozell translated Moliere, and other French authors, and wrote some poems. Mr. Pope gave him a place in the Dunciad.—Cisber.

PAAS (Crispin), an able engraver, was a native of Cologne, and the disciple of Cornhard. The king of Denmark invited him to his court, and he died there about the commencement of the 17th century. He engraved plates of the History of the Bible, and a great number on other subjects. His daughters, Magdalena and Barbara, inherited his talents. There were two other engravers of this family, namely, Simon and Crispin Paas, called the younger.—Sandraart.

PAAW (Peter), a physician and botanist, was born at Amsterdam in 1564. He became eminent as a professor at Leyden, where he died in 1617. His works are, 1. Commentary on Vesalius, 4to.; 2. a Treatise on the Plague, 4to.; 3. Hortus-Lugduno-Batavus.—Holleri Bibl. Anat. Moreri.

PASQ, a British prince and distinguished warrior in the latter part of the fifth century, was defeated and sought refuge in Wales, where he was hospitably entertained by the king of Powys, who gave him lands. He afterwards led a religious life, and was accounted a saint. He founded a church in Mona, where his monument with an inscription yet remains.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

PACATIANUS (Titus Julius Marinus), a usurper, who excited the Gauls to revolt in his favour in the reign of the emperor Philip; but he was defeated and put to death, A. D. 249, by the troops which raised Decius to the throne. There are medals of Pacatianus existing.—Moreri.

PACZ (Richard), a learned divine, and dean of St. Paul's, London, was employed by Henry VIII. in several embassies, but Wolsey being jealous of his rising merit, procured his disgrace. He died of chagrin in 1532. Pace was held in great esteem by the most learned men of his time, particularly Erasmus, sir Thomas More, cardinal Pole, &c. He wrote, 1. Epistles; 2. De fructu scientiarum, 4to.; 3. De lapsu Hebraicorum Interpretum, &c.—Erasmii Epist. Pilfius.

PACHECO (John de), marquis de Villena, the favourite and prime minister of Henry IV. king of Castille. His authority was so great that he disposed at pleasure of all places in the kingdom. Louis XI. of France corrupted him by a pension, and this perfidious minister betrayed his master's interests in the peace of 1443, by many articles prejudicial to the kingdom of Castille. Henry having discovered his treachery reproached him with it, which so provoked Pacheco that he conspired against him, and proclaimed prince Alphonso king of Castille in 1465. But this infamous minister caused the young king to be poisoned soon afterwards, and was reconciled to Henry, who continued him in his high authority and favour till the death of Villena, which happened in 1473.—Mariana's Hist. of Spain.

PACHYMERUS (George), a Greek writer, was born at Nice. His eminent talents introduced him to the favour of Michael Palæologus, who conferred on him several offices both in the church and state. Pachymerus died in 1310. He wrote a valuable History of the East, which is inserted in the collection of Byzantine historians, and was published at Rome in 1669, in folio, with a Latin translation.—Moreri.

PACIAUDI (Paul Marie), a religious, of the order of Theatins, correspondent of the academy of belles-lettres at Paris, and librarian to the duke of Parma, was born at Turin in 1710, and died of an apoplexy in 1785. His works are, 1. Monumenta Peloponnesiaca, 2 vols. 4to.; 2. Memorie de gran maestri dell'ordine Gerofolimitano, 3 vols. 4to.; 3. Letters between him and count Caylus.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PACIFICUS MAXIMUS, a Latin poet, was born at Alcoli, of a noble family, in 1400. His poems were printed at Florence in 1489, 4to. under the title of Hecatelegiam sive Elegiarum; this is a very scarce edition. That of Parma, with his other works, in 1691, 4to. is purged of many licentious passages, which occur in the former. Pacificus mentions the venereal disease in his poems, before the voyage of Columbus.—Tiraboschi.

PACIUS (Julius), chevalier of the order of St. Mark at Venice, was born at Vicenza in 1530. He wrote a Treatise on Arithmetic at the age of thirteen, after which he studied the law, and professed it with reputation in various universities. He died in 1635. His principal works are, 1. De Contractibus, folio; 2. Synopsis Juris, fol.; 3. De Jure Maris Adriatici, 8vo.; 4. Decretales, lib. v. 8vo.; 5. Corpus Juris civilis, fol.; 6. Aristotelis Organum, 8vo.; this last is a translation of Aristotle's Logic. Pacius was a zealous protestant, and his friend Peiresc endeavoured in vain to recover him to the roman catholic religion.—Tiraboschi.

PACORUS, the son of Orodes king of Parthia, signalized himself by the defeat of Crassus, whose army he nearly cut to pieces, B. C. 53. He took the part of Pompey, and declared himself for the assassins of Cæsar. After ravaging Syria and Judæa, Ventidius defeated him, and Pacorus was slain in the battle, B. C. 39.—Justin. Florus. Eutropius.

PACUVIUS (Marcus), nephew of the poet Ennius, distinguished himself both in poetry and painting. He wrote satires and several dramatic pieces, among the rest one entitled Orestes. Some of his fragments are in the Corpus poetarum Latinorum of Maittaire. Pacuvius died at Tarentum, B. C. 154, aged 90.—Moreri.

PADARN, a British bishop and saint, to whom several churches in Wales are dedicated. He is ranked with Dewi and Teilo, under the appellation of the three blessed visitors; because they went about preaching the Gospel to all ranks of people.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

PADERNA (Paul Anthony), an historical and landscape painter, was born at Bologna in 1649, and died in 1708. His pictures are executed in a fine style, and much valued.—Pilkington.

PADUAN (Louis Leo, surnamed the), a painter, was a native of Padua, and died about 1615, aged 75. He excelled in portrait painting, and was also skilled in engraving of medals. His son Octavian was also a good portrait painter.—Felibien. De-pules.

PADUANINO (Francisco), an historical painter, was born in 1552, and died in 1617. There is a fine picture of his at Venice, representing the deliverance of two malefactors at the intercession of a saint.—Pilkington.

PAEZ (Francis Alvarez), a Portuguese divine. He was of the order of cordeliers, and became a favourite with pope John XXII. who gave him several dignities, and appointed him his nuncio in Portugal. Paez wrote a famous book entitled De Planctu Ecclesie, in which he supported the authority of the pope in the highest degree. He was also the author of a Summary of Divinity, and other works. He died in 1352.—Moreri.

PAGAN, or PAGANUS (Peter), a German poet, and professor of poetry and history at Marburg, was a native of Wanfrid in the Lower Hesse, and died in 1576. He wrote, Praxis Metrica; the history of the Horatii and Curiatii, in Latin verse, and other poems in the same language.—Moreri.

PAGAN (Blaise-Francis), a celebrated French mathematician, was born near Marseilles in 1604. He bore arms in his early youth, and demonstrated a valour beyond his years, particularly in the passage of the Alps, and at the barricade of Susa. Louis XIII. for his merit made him field marshal, and sent him envoy to Portugal in 1642. The same year he became entirely blind by the loss of his eye at the siege of Montauban, having before been deprived of the sight of the other by a disorder. He now turned his attention to mathematical studies, and wrote, 1. a Treatise on Fortifications; 2. Geometrical Theorems; 3. Theory of the Planets; 4. Astronomical Tables; 5. an Historical Relation of the River of the Amazons, 8vo. He died in 1665.—Moreri.

PAGANI (Gregorio), an eminent painter of Florence, was born in 1529, and died in 1560. His pictures have been sometimes taken for those of Michael Angelo Buonarroti.—Pilkington.

PAGANO (Paul), a painter, was born at Milan in 1661, and died in 1716. There is a beautiful picture by him at Venice, representing one of the works of mercy, viz. that of cloathing the naked.—Ibid.

PAGE (William), a learned divine, was a native of Middlesex, and educated at All Souls college, Oxford, of which he became fellow in 1619. He suffered considerably in the civil wars, and died in 1669. He wrote, 1. Genusflexionis ad nomen Jesu defensio, Oxford, 1631; 2. Animadversiones on John Hales's Tract of Schism; 3. a Translation of Thomas à Kempis de Imitatione Christi into English.—Wood, A. O.

PAGET (William, the first lord), was the son of a serjeant at mace in the reign of Henry VIII. who taking a liking to the son, made him clerk of the signet, afterwards of the council, and of the privy seal. He conducted himself with so much discretion and skill that Henry sent him ambassador to the French court, and on his return conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He also made him secretary of state, and appointed him one of the executors of his will. At the beginning of Edward's reign he was sent on an embassy to the emperor Charles V. and on his return received new dignities, of which he was deprived and sent to the Tower in consequence of his connection with the duke of Somerset. Paget was re-established in his employments by queen Mary, and continued in favour by Elizabeth. He died in 1564, and was magnificently buried at the public expence.—Dugdale's Baronage of England. Collins's Peer.

PAGI (John Baptist), a painter and engraver, was born at Genoa in 1555, and died there in 1629. He wrote a book on painting entitled, Definizione & divisione della Pittura, folio.—De Piles.

PAGI (Anthony), a cordelier, was born at Rogné in Provence in 1624. He became provincial of his order, and undertook the laborious work of examining the Annals of Baronius. The first volume of his critique appeared at Paris in 1669, folio, with this title, Critica Historico-Chronologica in Annales Ecclesiasticos Cardinalis Baronii. The three remaining volumes were printed after his death at Geneva. Father Pagi died at Aix in 1699. Besides the above he wrote Dissertation hypatica, seu de Confusilibus Cœfareis, 4to. His nephew Francis Pagi was born at Lambesc in 1654, and died in 1721. He assisted his uncle in his critical examination of Baronius, and published the three posthumous volumes. He was the author of a History of the Popes, 4 vols. 4to. There was also an ex-jesuit of this name who was nephew of the last mentioned, and wrote a History of Cyrus the younger, Paris 1736, 12mo. and a History of the Revolutions in the Low Countries, 1727, 12mo.—Moreri.

PAGNINUS (Sanctès), a learned dominican, was born at Lucca in 1466. He employed twenty-five years in examining the Vulgate Bible by the originals; in the course of which he completed an entire new translation from the Hebrew and Greek. He also compiled a Hebrew grammar and Lexicon of great merit. Pagniaul died in 1586.—Moreri.

PAJON (Claude), a French protestant divine, was born at Ramorantin in 1626. He became professor of divinity at Saumur, and minister at Orleans. Pajon had a warm controversy with Jurieu upon the efficacy of grace, and on the manner of conversion. He died in 1685. His other works are a Defence of the Calvinists, 2 vols.; and Remarks upon the Pastoral Advertisement—Bayle.

PAJOT (Louis-Leo), count of Ofembray, was born at Paris in 1678. He studied philosophy and mathematics with great success; and enjoyed the particular confidence of Louis XIV. His cabinet was enriched with a great number of curiosities, particularly in mechanics and natural history, on which account it was visited by Peter the Great and other princes. In the memoirs of the academy of sciences, of which he was a member, are several of his papers. He bequeathed his museum to that learned body on certain conditions. Pajot died in 1753.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PAKINGTON (Dorothy, lady), an ingenious Englishwoman, was the daughter of Thomas lord Coventry, and wife of sir John Pakington of Worcestershire. She was the intimate friend of Dr. Henry Hammond, bishop Fell, Dr. Sanderson, Dr. Hickes, and other eminent divines. She died in 1679, and was buried in the church of Hampton-Lovet, Worcestershire. There seems to be little doubt but that she was the author of the whole Duty of Man, of which we have the testimony of no less a man than Dr. Hickes.—Ballard's British Ladies.

PALEMON (Q. Rhemmius), a celebrated grammarian, was originally a slave at Rome in the reign of Tiberius, but by attending his master's son to the academy he acquired so great a stock of knowledge that his master gave him his freedom. He then became a preceptor, and gained great reputation both as a rhetorician and poet. His piece de Ponderibus et Mensuris was printed at Leyden in 1587, 8vo.—Juvenal. Vossius.

PALEPHATUS, a Greek philosopher, of whom remains a treatise on incredible things, printed at Amsterdam in 1688, 8vo., and by Elzevir in 1649, 12mo. He lived before the christian æra and after Aristotle. Vossius de Hist. Græc.

PALAFOX (John de), a Spanish prelate, was born in the kingdom of Arragon in 1600, of a noble family. He studied at Salamanca, after which he was appointed a member of the council of war, and next of that of the Indies; but he renounced civil distinctions for the ecclesiastical state, and was made a bishop in Spanish America with the title of judge of the administration of the three viceroys of the Indies. While there he administered justice with strict impartiality, and had a sharp contest with the jesuits. His conduct gave such satisfaction to the king of Spain that he made him bishop of Osma. This excellent prelate died in 1659. Palafox wrote, the History of the Siege of Fontarabia, 4to.; History of the Conquest of China by the Tartars; Sermons, and a variety of religious pieces amounting to 13 vols. folio.—Moreri.

PALAPRAT (John), a French lawyer and poet, was born at Toulouse in 1650. He distinguished himself at the bar, and was made chief of the consistory in 1685. He was also employed in state affairs, which he discharged with reputation. He died at Paris in 1721. Palaprat wrote some dramatic pieces of the comic cast, and poems, making in all 5 vols. 12mo.—Ibid.

PALATI (John), a Latin historian, was born in the states of Venice, and died about 1680. His principal work is entitled, Monarchia Occidentalis, five Aquila inter lilia, et aquila Saxenica, 2 vols. folio. This book is ornamented with figures of medals, &c.—Ibid.

PALAYE (N. de la Curne), member of the French academy, and of that of inscriptions and belles lettres, was born at Auxerre in 1697, and died at Paris in 1781. He wrote Memoirs of Antient Chivalry, 3 vols. 12mo.; a work full of curious research. He is also the author of a Memoir upon the Chronicle of Glaber in the memoirs of the academy of inscriptions.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PALEARIUS (Aonius), a learned writer, was born at Veroli in Italy, and after studying at different places he became professor of Greek and Latin at Sienna, but being suspected of favouring lutheranism, he found it necessary to withdraw to Lucca, and from thence to Milan, where he was arrested and sent to Rome. Being tried by the inquisition, he was condemned to be burnt as a heretic, which sentence was executed in 1570. He wrote a Latin poem on the Immortality of the Soul, the best edition of which is that of Amsterdam, 1696, 8vo.—Tiraboschi.

PALEY (William), a learned divine of the English church, was born at Peterborough, in Northamptonshire, in 1743, and educated under his father, who was master of Giggleswick school in Yorkshire. Afterwards he was sent to Christ's college, Cambridge, where in 1763 he took the degree of B. A. Soon after this he became assistant in the school at Greenwich, where he continued three years, and then returned to his college, of which he was elected fellow. He distinguished himself eminently as a tutor, and had for his coadjutor Dr. John Law, now bishop of Elphin; by whose recommendation Mr. Paley was patronized by his father, Dr. Edmund Law, bishop of Carlisle; who gave him a living in Cumberland, and afterwards that of Appleby in Westmorland. He also obtained a prebendal stall in the cathedral of Carlisle, with the living of Dalston. About 1780 he became chancellor of Carlisle. In 1785 he published his Elements of Moral and Political Philosophy, in one vol. 4to.; since frequently printed in 2 vols. 8vo., and above all praise. His next work was Hore Paulinae, or Observations upon the Epistles of St. Paul, in 1 vol. 8vo. In 1789 the bishop of Ely offered him the mastership of Jesus college, Cambridge, which he politely declined; but in gratitude to his lordship he dedicated to him in 1794 his incomparable work on the Evidences of Christianity, 2 vols. 8vo. After this Dr. Paley obtained a prebend of St. Paul's from the bishop of London; the sub-deanry of Lincoln from the bishop of that diocese; and the very valuable living of Bishop Wearmouth from the bishop of Durham. To the last-mentioned prelate he dedicated his book, entitled, Natural Theology, in one vol. 8vo. Besides the above excellent and original productions Dr. Paley published some sermons and tracts. He died at Bishop Wearmouth May 25, 1805.—Monthly Mag.

PALEIN (John), an eminent surgeon, was a native of Ghent, where he gained a great reputation as a lecturer, and died in 1790. His principal works are. 1. An Osteology, which is much esteemed; 2. Anatomy of the Human Body, translated into French by Devaux, 1753, 2 vols. 12mo.—Halleri Bibl. Amst.

PALINGENIUS (Marcellus), a latin poet of the 16th century, whose true name was Peter Angelo Monzoli. He was a native of Stallada, in Italy, and was entertained at the court of the duke of Ferrara, to whom he dedicated a very curious and elegant poem entitled, Zodiacus Vitæ; which contains many severe strokes against the Romish clergy, for which the poem was publicly burnt and proscribed.—Elys.

PALISSI (Bernard de), a French potter and chemist, was born at Agen, and for his ingenuity in painting on glass and other works was patronized by Henry III., who endeavoured to persuade him to become a roman catholic. But Palissi was an inflexible calvinist, and would not comply. He wrote several works, which were printed at Paris in 1636, in 2 vols. 8vo.; and again in 1777 in quarto, with the notes of M. Faujas de St. Fond. Palissi made considerable discoveries in natural history, and is said to have been the first who gave a true theory of fountains. He died in 1590.—Nov. Litt. Hist.

PALLADINI (Arcángela), an ingenious female artist, was born at Pisa in 1599, and died in 1622. She learnt the principles of the art of painting from her father, and afterwards became distinguished as a portrait painter.—Pillington.

PALLADINO (James), an ecclesiastical author of the 14th century, known by the name of Jame de Tarant, on account of his being born in that city in 1349. After receiving several preferments he became archbishop of Speleita, and legate in Poland, where he died in 1427. He wrote a pious romance entitled, Jacobi de Teramo per breve, Consolatio peccatorum nuncupatum, et apud nonnullos Belial vocitatum; id est, processus Luciferi contra Jesum, printed at Augsburg in 1572, folio.—Moreri.

PALLADIO (Andrew), a celebrated architect, was born at Vicenza in 1508. His parents were in middling circumstances, but he rose by his merit to the rank of nobility. He began with sculpture; but Trissino the poet perceiving his inclination for the mathematics, explained to him the architecture of Vitruvius, and made with him three journeys to Rome, where Palladio studied and designed after the ancient monuments of that city. In these pursuits he discovered the true principles of an art which, in his time, was buried in gothic barbarity. Among the noble structures which this illustrious architect built, one of the principal is the theatre called Degli Olimpici at Vicenza. He published a valuable treatise on architecture in 1570, in folio, with plates; and after his death, which happened in 1580, was published a work of his on the antiquities of ancient Rome.—D'Argenville. Felibien.

PALLADIUS (Rutilius Taurus Æmilianus), a Latin writer and physician, who lived after the decline of letters at Rome, but in what year is uncertain. He left a treatise de Re Rustica, which is in the collection of ancient writers who have treated on rural affairs, at Leipzig, 2 vols. 4to.—Vander Linden, de Script. Med.

PALLADIUS, a native of Cappadocia, became a hermit in 388, and in 401 was chosen bishop of Helenopolis, in Bithynia. On account of his attachment to St. Chrysostom he was greatly persecuted and driven from his diocese. At the desire of Lausus, governor of Cappadocia, he wrote the History of Anchores, to which he gave the title of Historia Lusitana. It was printed at Paris in 1555, 4to. There is also attributed to him the Life of Chrysostom, in a dialogue, Greek and Latin, printed at Paris in 1680; but this is supposed to be the work of another bishop of the same name.—Dupin.

PALLAJUOLO (Antony and Peter), two painters of Florence, who were among the first that painted in oil. They were remarkable for their affection as brothers, and worked together. They both died in 1498, aged above 70.—De Piles. Pillington.

PALLAS, the freedman of the emperor Claudius, over whom he had so great ascendancy as to persuade him to espouse Agrippina his niece, and to adopt Nero for his successor. Pallas, in concert with Agrippina, is charged with having hastened the death of Claudius. Nero caused him to be put to death secretly, but erected a superb monument to his memory. Pallas was brother to the Felix before whom St. Paul pleaded.—Suetonius. Tacitus.

PALLAVICINI (Antony), a cardinal and bishop of Pampeluna, was born at Genoa in 1441 of a noble family, from whence has issued many great men. He rendered eminent services to the papal see, and was employed by several popes in important concerns. He died in 1507.—Lives of the Cardinals, 8vo.

PALLAVICINI (Sforza), a cardinal, was born at Rome in 1607. Though the elder son of a noble family, he renounced the advantages of birth, and entered among the jesuits. After his noviciate he professed philosophy and theology in his society. Pope Innocent X. employed him in several important affairs, and Alexander VII. made him cardinal. He died at Rome in 1667. His principal work is a History of the Council of Trent, written in opposition to that of father Paul. The style is good, but the book is partial. The best edition is that of Rome, 1656, 2 vols. folio. Besides this history, Pallavicini wrote a treatise on style, and on dialogue in Italian; also letters, 12mo.—Tirab.

PALLAVICINI (Ferrante), an Italian writer, was born at Placentia about 1615. He became a canon regular of the order of St. Augustine, of the congregation of Latran; but having written some severe satires against pope Urban VIII. and the whole family of Barberini, he found it expedient to retire to Venice, as a price was set upon his head. A perfidious Frenchman, who pretended to be his friend, persuaded him to go to France, with the offer of great advantages. Ferrante followed his advice, but was no sooner out of the Venetian territory, than he was seized and conducted to Avignon, where he was beheaded in 1644. The traitor who had betrayed him was assassinated some time after by a friend of Pallavicini's. His works were printed at Venice, in 4 vols. 12mo. 1655. The principal is entitled, The Celestial Divorce, or the Separation of Jesus Christ from the Roman Church.—Bayle.

PALLIOT (Peter), a printer and bookseller of Dijon, was born at Paris in 1608, and died in 1698, in the former city. He had a great knowledge of heraldry and genealogy, and published two works, embellished with plates of his own engraving, one on the genealogies of Burgundy, and the other on the science of heraldry and emblazoning of arms, both in folio. He also left 13 folio volumes in manuscript on the same subjects.—Moreri.

PALLISER (sir Hugh), an English admiral, was born in 1721. He early distinguished himself in the navy, was with admiral Matthews in the Mediterranean, in 1744, and made post captain in 1746; he was also at the taking of Quebec, and was made comptroller of the navy, and created a baronet in 1773. Serving as second in command under admiral Keppel in the famous engagement off Ushant, July 27th, 1778, a misunderstanding arose between them; and sir Hugh preferred a charge against Keppel, who was acquitted. Sir Hugh was then tried in his turn, and reprimanded. He was, however, a very brave and experienced officer, and was made governor of Greenwich hospital, where he died in 1796.—Cent. Mag.

PALLUZZI (Francis Crette de), an eminent agriculturist, was born at Dugny in France in 1742. After receiving an ordinary education at Paris, he returned to his father, the post-master of St. Denis, who appointed him at the age of seventeen superintendent of his farms at Dugny, which he very greatly improved. He became one of the first members of the society of agriculture at Paris on its revival under Maleherbes in 1779; and he discussed very ably a prize question offered by the society at Laon, on the best mode of draining marshes. The records of the society contain a number of his memoirs and observations. In the revolution he became a member of the legislative assembly, and was also appointed a justice of peace, in which latter capacity he formed a collection of the laws relative to agricultural police, which was printed with reflections on the office of a justice of peace. This useful man died in 1799.—Memoir read before the Society of Agriculture.

PALMA (James), called the elder, a painter, was born at Sermaletta in Italy in 1548. He studied under Titian, whose manner and that of Giorgione he adopted, but in an inferior degree. His talents, however, were respectable, and his pictures are in esteem. He died in 1588.—D'Argenville, Felibien.

PALMA (James), the younger, was nephew of the above, and born at Venice in 1544. Tintoret was his master, and Palma added considerable elegance to the style of that master. His figures are very expressive, and the draperies beautiful. He died in 1628.—Ibid.

PALMER (Samuel), a learned printer, who exercised his profession with great reputation in London, and in whose office the celebrated Dr. Franklin was employed. Mr. Palmer died in 1732. He wrote a History of Printing, in quarto.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

PALMER (John), an eminent actor, was born in 1741. His father was door-keeper of Drury-lane theatre, by which means the son had every opportunity of gaining an inclination for the stage. He was at first placed with a fruiterer, which profession he quitted, and became an under performer at so low a salary that he went to Norwich, where he played with credit, and married. On leaving that place he became an itinerant performer, and also a lecturer on heads. After pursuing this course some time he returned to London, and was engaged, first at the Hay-market, and next at Drury-lane, where he rose to the first order as a comedian; but he involved himself in embarrassments by building a theatre near Wellclose-square, for which he could not obtain a license. Owing to this, and other extravagancies, he was reduced to low circumstances, and died suddenly while playing in the Stranger at Liverpool, July 29, 1798.—Monthly Mao.

PALMIERI (Matthew), a native of Florence, who distinguished himself with great applause at the council held at that place. He died in 1475, aged 70. His works are, 1. a Continuation of Prosper's Chronicle to 1449; 2. a Treatise on Civil Life, in Italian, 1529, 8vo.; 3. a Poem, entitled, Citta Divina, in 3 books; in this piece he supposes, that our souls are those angels which in the revolt of Lucifer neither preserved their allegiance to God, nor joined with that apostate, and in consequence were sent hither to pass through a probationary state. This poem was condemned to be burnt. There was one Matthias Palmieri, a native of Pisa, in the same age, who translated Aristæus's History of the Septuagint Version, printed with the Bible at Rome in 2 vols. folio, 1471. He also continued Prosper's Chronicle to 1481.—Moreri.

PALOMINO (Anthony), a Spanish painter, was a native of Cordova. He embraced the ecclesiastical state, and many of his paintings are in the cathedral of Valencia. He wrote a work on Painting, and the Lives of Painters, in 2 vols. folio.—Pilkington.

PALSGRAVE (John), an English divine, who studied at Cambridge and afterwards at Paris. He became tutor in the French language to princess Mary, on her marriage with Louis XII. of France; and after his return to his own country he obtained some considerable preferment. He translated a Latin comedy called Acæstus into English. He died about 1550.—Langbaine. Biog. Dram.

PALUDANUS (John), a learned divine of the Roman church, and professor of theology at Louvaine, where he died in 1630. He wrote, 1. Vindiciæ Theologicæ, adversus Verbi Dei corruptelas, 2 vols. 8vo.; 2. Apologeticus Marianus, 4to.; 3. De Sancto Ignatio Concio Sacra, 8vo.; 4. Officina Spiritualis sacris Concionibus adaptata, 4to. He is not to be mistaken for Bernard Paludanus, professor of philosophy at Leyden, where he died in 1634. He wrote Notes on Linschoten's Voyages, and other works.—Moreri.

PAMELIUS (James), was born at Bruges in 1536. He entered into orders, and became canon of Bruges and archdeacon of St. Omer's. Philip II. of Spain nominated him bishop of that diocese in 1587, but he died the same year. His works are, 1. Liturgica Latinorum, 2 vols. 4to.; 2. Micrologus de Ecclesiasticis observationibus; 3. Catalogus Commentariorum veterum Selectorum in universam Bibliam, 8vo.; 4. Conciliorum Paralipomena, &c. He also published the works of Tertullian and St. Cyprian with notes; the Treatise of Cassiodorus de divinis nominibus, &c.—Moreri.

PAMMACHUS (St.), a senator of Rome, who had also enjoyed the consular dignity. He espoused Paulina, the second daughter of St. Paula, the friend of St. Jerome, who speaks highly of the talents of Pammachus. He built an hospital at Porto, and attended the poor therein himself. He discovered and refuted the errors of Jovinian, and died in 410.—Dupin.

PAMPHYLIDIS, a painter of Macedon, who flourished under king Philip; he was the first who applied the mathematics to his art, which he honoured by his manners and his talents. He founded a school at Sicyon, and procured an edict that none but those of noble birth should be instructed in painting. The same law was afterwards extended throughout Greece. Apelles was the disciple of this master.—Sandraarti Academia Pictura.

PAMPHYLUS (St.), a priest and martyr of Cæsarea in Palestine, to which city he presented a large library, consisting of most of the works of the antients. He transcribed the Bible with his own hand, and with the utmost exactness. Montfaucon has published his Explication of the Acts of the Apostles. He was put to death under Maximian about 308.—Eusebius. Dupin.

PANAGIOTIS, a noble Greek, who was principal interpreter to the grand signior, was born in the isle of Chios, and died in 1673. He opposed the patriarch Cyril Lucar with great fury, and wrote a book in the modern Greek, which was printed in Holland under this title, the Orthodox Confession of the Catholic and Apostolic Eastern Church.—Moreri.

PANARD (Charles Francis), a French poet, was born at Courville near Chartres in 1691, and died at Paris of an apoplexy in 1765. He wrote several comedies and comic operas, fables, anacreontic pieces, and allegories, which possess considerable merit.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PANCIROLIUS (Guy), a celebrated professor of jurisprudence, was born at Reggio in 1523, of a distinguished family. He made a great progress in the study of the law, and in 1547 was named by the senate of Venice second professor of institutes at Padua. He filled the chair in that university with great reputation several years, and in 1571 was invited to Turin. He afterwards returned to Padua, where he died in 1597. His works are, 1. De rebus inventis et perditis; it was written in Italian, but translated into Latin by Henry Salmuth; 2. Commentarii in notitiam utriusque Imperii et de magistratibus, folio; 3. De numismatibus antiquis; 4. De Juris Antiquitate; 5. De claris Interpretibus, 4to.; 6. De magistratibus municipalibus et corporibus artificum; 7. De quatuordecim regionibus urbis Romæ, earumque ædificiis tam publicis quam privatis, &c.—Moreri.

PANCKOUCKE (Andrew Joseph), a bookseller of Lisle, was born in 1700, and died at Paris in 1753. He wrote, 1. Studies serviceable for Young Ladies, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. Chronological Abridgement of the History of the Counts of Flanders, 8vo.; 3. a Collection of Bon Mots, 2 vols. 12mo.; 4. Dictionary of French Proverbs, 8vo.; 5. Philosophical Manual, 2 vols. 12mo.; 6. Elements of Geography and Astronomy, 12mo.; 7. Essays on Philosophers, 12mo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PANCOUCKE (Charles-Joseph), son of the above, was born at Lille in 1736. He followed his father's profession at Paris with great reputation, and his knowledge of typography made him celebrated all over Europe. His works are, 1. Mathematical Memoirs addressed to the Academy of Sciences; 2. Translations of Lucretius, of Tasso's Jerusalem, and the Orlando of Ariosto; 3. Philosophical Discourse on Beauty, 8vo.; 4. another on Pleasure and Grief, &c. He died at Paris in 1799.—Ibid.

PANEL (Alexander Xavier), a jesuit, was born in Franche-comté, but resided the greatest part of his life in Spain, where he was preceptor to the children of the king, and died in 1777, aged 82. He wrote a number of works on antiquities and numismatics; the principal are, Dissertation on a Medal of Alexander; De Cistiphoris; De Coloniz Tarraconæ nummo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PANETIUS, a stoic philosopher of Rhodes, who flourished about 150 B. C. He studied at Athens with such credit as to be offered the rights of citizenship, which he refused, saying, "a modest man will be content with one country." He afterwards went to Rome, where he had numerous disciples, among the rest Lælius and Scipio. Panetius accompanied the latter in his various expeditions, and rendered eminent services to the Rhodians by his interest with that commander. Cicero mentions a work of his on the Duties of Man, which is lost.—Suidas. Moreri.

PANIGAROLA (Francis), an Italian prelate, was born at Milan in 1548. Sixtus V. made him bishop of Asti, and sent him with the jesuit Bellarmine and cardinal Gaetan to France, to strengthen the party of the league against Henry IV. On that occasion Panigarola displayed great zeal and eloquence. After his return he set about reforming his diocese, which is said to have given such offence that he was poisoned in 1594. His Sermons were printed at Rome in 1596, 4to.; but his principal work is a treatise in Italian on the Eloquence of the Pulpit, under the title of Il Predicatore, Venice 1609, 4to.—Moreri.

PANIN (Nakita Ivanowitz, count de), a Russian statesman, was born in 1718. His father, who was a lieutenant-general in the service of Peter I. was originally of Lucca in Italy. Young Panin commenced his career by being a soldier of the horse-guards of the empress Elizabeth; but by means of the prince Kourakin he became gentleman of the chamber. By his artful address he gained the favour of his sovereign, who sent him in 1747 to Copenhagen, and afterwards to Stockholm with the title of minister plenipotentiary. On his return he was made governor of the grand duke Paul Petrowitz, and lastly prime minister to Catherine II. He was a man of considerable powers, and of enlarged views; but during his stay in Sweden he conceived a great admiration of its form of government, which he wished to have introduced into Russia, but could not attempt it. He died in 1783.—Coxe's Russia. Tooke's Hist. Catherine.

PANINI (Paul), an Italian painter, was born at Placentia in 1691, and died in 1758. He painted subjects in architecture with great accuracy and beauty.—Pilkington.

PANNONIUS (James), or rather John the Hungarian, was born in 1434. He was a bishop, and died in 1472. His poems, elegies, and epigrams, were printed at Venice in 1553, 8vo.; they are also in the Deliciz poetarum Hungarorum, 1619.—Moreri.

PANOPION, a Roman, who was proscribed. A slave belonging to Panopion, hearing that the soldiers were coming, changed cloaths with his master, then went into his bed and suffered himself to be slain in his room.—Valerius Maximus.

PANORMITA (Anthony), an Italian poet of the 15th century, was a native of Sicily, and became private secretary to Alphonsus king of Naples. He is said to have sold an estate to purchase a copy of Livy. He died in 1471.—Tirabocchi.

PANSA (Caius Vibius), a Roman consul, and the intimate friend of Cicero. He joined Cæsar, and afterwards took the part of Octavius against Antony, but died of a wound received in a battle near Bologna.—Moreri.

PANTÆNUS, a stoic philosopher, was a native of Sicily, and became president of the school at Alexandria in the reign of Commodus. He was a christian, and was employed in the conversion of the Ethiopians. On his return to Alexandria he employed himself in writing Commentaries on the Scriptures, which are lost.—Eusebius. Dupin.

PANTIN (William), a physician of Bruges, who died in 1583. He wrote a Commentary on Celsus's treatise De Re Medica, Basle 1552, folio. His nephew, Peter Pantin, was professor of the learned languages at Louvain, and dean of the church of Brussels. He died in 1611. He wrote a Treatise De dignitatibus et officiis regni ac domus regiz Gothorum, folio.—Moreri.

PANZACHIA (Maria Helena), an ingenious artist of Bologna, was born of a noble family in 1668. She painted landscapes in a beautiful manner, and also historical subjects.—Pilkington.

PAOLI (Sebastian), an Italian antiquary, was born at Lucca in 1684. He became an ecclesiastic, and died in 1751. Several of the Italian Journals are enriched with papers by him on subjects of antiquity, sacred criticism and philosophy. He wrote the lives of some eminent Italians.—Tirabeschi.

PAOLI (Hyacinth), a native of Corsica, who was elected one of the chief magistrates of the island in 1735. On account of the revolutions which distracted his country, and the oppressions of the Genoese, he retired to Naples, where he died. His son Pascal made a considerable figure in the history of Corsica, which he endeavoured to rescue from the Genoese and French, but after a hard struggle was forced to abandon the island and seek an asylum in England in 1769.

PAOLUCCIO (Paul-Anafeste), the first doge of Venice. Before him that republic was governed by tribunes chosen every year. But in 697 the Venetians elected Paoluccio doge or duke. He died in 717.—Univ. Hist.

PAPEBROCH (Daniel), a jesuit of Antwerp, was born in 1628. He professed the belles-lettres and philosophy with great success, and was associated with the fathers Bollandus and Heuschenius in making a collection of the Acts of the Saints; the historical part of which fell to Papebroch, who was in consequence the subject of a violent persecution for having denied some of the most absurd legends of the Roman church. The Carmelites were his bitterest enemies, because he denied that Elijah was their founder. The inquisition condemned the work, but afterwards only prohibited any farther controversy on the subject. Papebroch died in 1714. He was also the author of an historical catalogue of the popes.—Dupin. Mereri.

PAPNUTIUS, bishop of Thebais in Egypt, who in the persecutions of Galerius and Maximinus suffered great tortures, and had his right eye wrenched out, after which he was sent to the mines. He assisted at the council of Nice in 325, and was lodged in the palace of Constantine. He opposed a motion for enforcing celibacy on the clergy; and strenuously defended the cause of Athanasius at the council of Tyre.—Eusebius. Tillemont.

PAPIAS, bishop of Hierapolis in Phrygia, is said to have been the disciple of St. John the Evangelist. He was the author of the millenarian notion, or the visible reign of Christ upon earth one thousand years before the resurrection. He is not to be mistaken for Papius a grammarian who lived about 1053, and wrote Vocabularium Latinum, printed at Milan in 1176, folio.—Dupin.

PAPILLON (Thomas), advocate in the parliament of Paris, and one of the greatest pleaders of his age, was a native of Dijon, and died at Paris in 1596, aged 82. He wrote, 1. Libellus de jure accrescendi; 2. De directis Hæredum substitutionibus, 8vo.; 3. Commentarii in quatuor priores titulos libri primi Digestorum, 12mo.—Mereri.

PAPIN (Isaac), a learned divine, was born at Blois in 1657. He studied at Geneva and Orleans, under his uncle Payon, whose sentiments on the doctrine of grace he espoused and defended against Jurieu. That violent controvertist in return accused Papin with being a papist. Being greatly persecuted by the Calvinists, Papin retired to England, from thence to Germany, and returned about 1690 to France, where he abjured the protestant religion. He died at Paris in 1709. In 1723 his works were collected into 3 vols. 12mo. His uncle Nicholas Papin was an able physician, and wrote a treatise on the saltiness of the sea, and its flux and reflux; the origin of rivers and fountains, &c. Denis Papin, the cousin of Isaac, was also a physician, and the author of some medical works.—Mereri.

PAPINIAN, an eminent advocate of the 3d century. He was prefect under the emperor Septimius Severus, who had a great esteem for him, and recommended to his care his two sons, Caracalla and Geta. The former of these having murdered his brother, required Papinian to vindicate the deed to the senate, and for his refusal put him to death in 212. He wrote Determinations of Questions of Law, and other works.—Ibid.

PAPIRIUS, surnamed Curfor, or the courier, from the swiftness of his course, was dictator of Rome about 320 B.C. He defeated the Samnites; and his son Lucius Papirius having obtained also a great victory over the same enemy, appropriated the spoils to the building of a temple to Fortune.—Livy.

PAPIRIUS PRÆTEXTATUS, a Roman youth, so called from an extraordinary stratagem which he practised. He was the son of a senator, and according to the custom of that period was taken by his father to hear the debates. On his return he was pressed by his mother to inform her what had passed in the assembly. After resisting her importunities a long time, young Papirius told her that the question then under the consideration of the senate was whether it would not be more advantageous to the republic for every man to have two wives instead of one? The mother immediately revealed this important secret to several Roman ladies, who assembled in a great body, and besieged the senate, uttering violent complaints. The senators were surprised, but on being made acquainted with the stratagem made use of by young Papirius, they passed a decree that no youths should be admitted into their assembly for the future, with the honourable exception of himself.—Aulus Gellius. Bayle.

PAPON (John Peter), an ingenious writer, was born at Pujet near Nice in 1736. He was a priest of the congregation of the oratory, and died at Paris in 1803. His works are; an Ode upon Death; the Art of the Poet, and the Orator, with an Essay on Education; this went through five editions; Funeral Oration for Charles Emmanuel III. King of Sardinia. 8vo.; Travels in Provence, 2 vols. 12mo.; History of Provence, 4 vols. 4to.; History of the French Government, from the Assembly of the Nobles, Feb. 22, 1787, to the end of 1788, 8vo.; Memorable Epochs of the Plague, &c.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

PAPPUS, a philosopher and mathematician of Alexandria in the 4th century. The most considerable of his works are. Mathematical Collections, a Latin version of which appeared in 1588; a Comment upon the Almagest of Ptolemy; Description of the Rivers of Libya, Treatise on Military Engines; Commentaries on Aristarchus concerning the Magnitudes and Distances of the Sun and Moon. An edition of this was published by Dr. Halley.—Vossius de Mathematicis. Martin's Biog. Phil.

PARABOSCO (Jerome), an Italian dramatic writer of the 16th century, was born at Placentia. He was the author of several comedies in prose; and some novels in the style of Boccaccio, printed in 8vo. at Venice, 1558, under the title of "Diporti di Girolamo Parabosco."—Tiraboschi.

PARACELSUS (Aurelius - Philip-Theophrastus Bombast de Hohenheim), was born at Einsiedlen, in Switzerland, in 1493. His father was the natural son of a prince, and gave him an excellent education. Paracelsus, who had a fertile genius, applied to the study of physic, in which he made a great progress. He travelled into France, Spain, Italy, and the empire, for improvement, and on his return to Switzerland settled at Basil, where he acquired a great name by his practice, in which he made use of those two powerful medicines mercury and opium, and was famous for curing the venereal disease. His charges, however, like those of empyrics in general, were exorbitant; and having recovered one John Lichtenfels, a canon, of a dangerous complaint, his demand was so great that the churchman refused to pay it, which produced a hearing before the council, who ordered the canon to pay only the accustomed fee. This so irritated Paracelsus that he left Basil and went into Alsatia, where he became noted as an alchemist, and pretended to have found not only the philosopher's stone, but also the art of prolonging life by an elixir. Notwithstanding his boast he died poor at the age of 48, in 1541. The best edition of his works is that of Geneva, 1658, 3 vols. folio.—Melch. Ad. Am. Vit. Germ. Med. Moreri.

PARADIN (William), an industrious French writer of the 16th century, who published, 1. Aristæus's History of the Sep-tuagint, 4to.; 2. History of his own Times, 1552; 3. Annals of Burgundy, folio; 4. De Moribus Gallie Historia; 5. Memoirs of the City of Lyons; 6. Historiz Ecclesiaz Galliarum, &c. Paradin was dean of Beaujeu, and died about 1581.—Moreri.

PARAMO (Louis de), a Spanish inquisitor, who published at Madrid in 1598, folio, a curious work called The Holy Office. It is a History of the Inquisition, written with great candour and accuracy.—Ibid.

PARCELLES (John), a painter, was born at Leyden in 1567. He excelled in painting sea pieces, particularly storms. His son Julius was also a good artist in the same line.—Houbraken.

PARCIEUX (Anthony de), a French mathematician and member of the academy of sciences, was born in the diocese of Uzès in 1703. He taught the mathematics at Paris with great reputation, and died there in 1763. His works are, a Treatise of Trigonometry, 4to.; Essays on the Probability of the Duration of Human Life, 4to.; Memoirs on the Practicability of bringing to Paris the Water of the River d'Yvette, 4to.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

PARCIEUX (Anthony), nephew of the preceding, was educated at the college of Navarre at Paris, where he studied the mathematics and philosophy with great diligence, and at the age of twenty-four gave lectures. In 1779 he began a course of experimental philosophy in the military school of Brienne, and lastly occupied the philosophical professorship at the Lyceum in Paris, where he died in 1798. He wrote an Elementary Book on Geometrical and Astronomical Calculations; and in his youth he composed a tragedy entitled, Ozorio.—L'Ecu. Dict. Hist.

PARDIES (Ignatius Gaston), a mathematician, was born at Pau in 1656. He entered into the order of jesuits at the age of sixteen, and became afterwards professor of rhetoric in the royal college at Paris. He died in 1673. His principal works are, 1. Horologium Thaumantium duplex, 4to.; 2. Dissertatio de Motu et Natura Cometarum, 8vo.; 3. Discourse on Local Motion, 12mo; 4. Elements of Geometry, 12mo.; 5. Discourse on the Knowledge of Beasts, 8vo.—Niceron.

PARÉ (Ambrose), a celebrated surgeon, was born at Laval in the province of Maine. Though a protestant he became surgeon to several kings of France, and at the time of the massacre of St. Bartholomew Charles IX. saved him by shutting him up in his own closet. Paré made several discoveries in anatomy, and wrote some esteemed books on surgery. He died in 1590.—Bayle. Moreri.

PARÉ or PARÆUS (David), a protestant divine, was born at Franckenstein, in Silesia, in 1548. He was apprenticed to a shoemaker, which profession he quitted and studied at Heidelberg, where he obtained the theological professorship, and died in 1622. He wrote several treatises against Bellarmine; and Commentaries on the Scriptures. That on the Epistle to the Romans, being translated into English, was publicly burnt by order of James I. for maintaining seditious principles. John Philip PARZUS, the son of the above, was a learned grammarian, and died in 1650. He published, 1. Lexicon Criticon, 8vo.; 2. Lexicon Plautinum, or a Vocabulary to the Comedies of Plautus, of which author he printed a good edition; 3. Galligraphia Romana, 8vo., and other works. His son Daniel published Mellificium Atticum, 4to.; Historia Palatina, 4to.; Medulla Historiz Ecclesiasticæ, &c.—Brundt's Hist. Ref. Bayle.

PARZA (Juan de), a painter, was born in the West Indies, and became the slave of Diego Velasquez. In the absence of his master, Pareja amused himself in drawing and copying his works, but secretly, for fear of giving offence. Philip IV. king of Spain, coming one day to visit Velasquez, Pareja contrived to place one of his own pictures in his way, with which his majesty was extremely pleased. The slave then fell on his knees, and besought the king to ask his master to forgive him. Philip not only did this, but obtained him his liberty; but the faithful Pareja would not quit Velasquez till his death. His portraits are very fine. He died in 1670, aged 60.—Cumberland's History of Spanish Painters.

PARENIN (Dominic), a celebrated jesuit, who was a missionary in China, where he was greatly esteemed by the emperor Kang-Hi, for whom he translated into Chinese several articles from the memoirs of the academy of sciences. A difference having arisen between the Chinese and Russian courts, Parenin was charged to negotiate the means of reconciliation, which he effected. He died at Pekin in 1741, aged 77, and was magnificently interred by order of the emperor. In the Letters, edifying and curious, relative to China, are several of this father.—Novi. Dict. Hist.

PARENT (Anthony), a mathematician, was born at Paris in 1666. He was bred to the law, which he renounced for the study of the sciences. He became a member of the academy, and enriched its memoirs with many valuable papers. He died of the small pox in 1716. His works are, Mathematical and Philosophical Researches, 3 vols. 12mo.; Theoretical and Practical Arithmetick, 8vo.; Elements of Mechanics and Natural Philosophy, 12mo.—Ecloga by Fontenelle.

PARFAIT (Francis), was born at Paris in 1698 of a distinguished family, and died in 1753. His works are, 1. General History of the French Theatre, 15 vols. 12mo.; 2. History of the antient Italian Theatre, two vols.; 3. Dictionary of Theatres, 7 vols. 12mo; 4. Some dramatic pieces never acted.—Novi. Dict. Hist.

PARIS (Matthew), an English historian, was a monk of the order of benedictines at St. Alban's in the 13th century. He was a man of general knowledge and integrity; and was employed in reforming the monasteries, which service he discharged with wisdom and zeal. His principal work is a History of English Affairs from the Conquest to the 4th of Henry III. It was published by archbishop Parker at London in 1571, folio, and since with additions by Dr. William Watts, in 1640, 2 vols. folio.—Cass Hist. Lit. Nicolson's Hist. Biog. Brit.

PARIS (Francis), was born at Chatillon, near Paris, of a poor family. He became a servant to the abbé Varet, grand vicar of Sens, by whose means he was ordained and obtained the benefice of St. Lambert. He died at Paris in 1718. He wrote the Lives of the Saints, and other works.—Moreri.

PARIS (Francis), a celebrated deacon of Paris, was the eldest son of a counsellor of parliament. He renounced the family estate to his brother, and embraced the ecclesiastical state, but refused a living, and led a recluse life in a religious house at Paris, where he died in 1727, aged 37. His brother erected a tomb to his memory in the cemetery of St. Medard; and so highly was his piety esteemed that many persons who had been edified by his instructions went to visit his monument and some pretended to be cured of maladies by it. The fame of this induced others to do the same, and so great was the delusion, that the government thought it necessary to order the cemetery to be closed up. The abbé Paris wrote Explanations of some of the Epistles.—Ibid.

PARKER (Matthew), archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Norwich in 1504, and educated in Corpus-christi college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. By the means of Anne Boleyn he was made chaplain to Henry VIII., and in the succeeding reign he was chosen master of his college; but in that of Mary he was deprived of his preferments. On the accession of Elizabeth Dr. Parker was preferred to the archbishopric of Canterbury, being duly consecrated at Bow church; though the papists, by way of invalidating the ecclesiastical orders of the church of England, asserted that he was consecrated in the Nag's-Head tavern; a calumny which has been refuted by some of their own writers. The archbishop was very zealous in promoting the reformation, and at the same time in restraining the encroachments of the puritans. He improved the translation of the scriptures called the Bishops' Bible, and died in 1575. He was particularly versed in Saxon literature, and the early English history, and he published an edition of Matthew Paris, folio; an historical work on the Antiquity of the English church, folio; and other works.—Life by Strype.

PARKER (Samuel), an English bishop, was born at Northampton in 1640, and educated at Wadham college, Oxford. His father was a member of what was called the high court of justice, and one of the barons of the exchequer, but at the restoration became king's serjeant at law. The son followed his example by complying with all changes. He was at first a zealous puritan, but conformed to the church of England, and obtained preferment. In the reign of James II. he was made for his servility to the king's arbitrary measures bishop of Oxford and privy counsellor. He was also constituted by mandamus president of Magdalen college, in violation of the privileges of that society. He wrote some pieces favourable to the popish doctrines, and died in 1687. This bishop composed a history of his own times, which has been printed in Latin and English.—Biog. Brit.

PARKER (Richard), a seaman, who was the chief of the mutineers at the Nore in 1797. He was a native of Exeter, and had received a good education, after which he went into the navy and became a midshipman, but was broke for some misconduct. Having a good address and great fluency of speech, he was chosen head of the delegates, when the sailors rose on account of their wages and prize-money; on which occasion he assumed the command of the fleet, and was called Admiral Parker. He ruled with great authority for some time, to the great alarm of the nation, but when the insurrection was suppressed he was tried and executed on board the Sandwich, June 30, 1797.—Gent. Mag.

PARKER (George), earl of Macclesfield, was the eldest son of Thomas Parker, lord chancellor of England, and the first earl, who died in 1732. The second earl was a distinguished mathematician, and became president of the royal society. He was the promoter of the alteration in the stile, the bill of which he prepared, and published his speech on the occasion. His lordship died in 1766.—English Peerage.

PARKURST (John), a learned divine, was born in London, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, of which, in 1751, he was admitted fellow. He took his degrees in arts, and afterwards settled at Epfom in Surry. Mr. Parkhurst was the intimate friend of bishop Horne, and like him had a great partiality to the opinions of the celebrated Mr. Hutchinson. He published a Greek and English Lexicon, also a Hebrew and English Lexicon, both in 4to.; but since reprinted in 8vo. He was likewise the author of an answer to Dr. Priestley on the Pre-existence of Christ, 8vo.; and a pamphlet against John Wesley. This learned and amiable man died in 1797.—Monthly Mag.

PARKINSON (John), an English botanist, was born in 1567. He was an apothecary in London, and was eminent in his profession. His garden was well stored with rarities, and he became botanist to king Charles I. He died about 1645. Parkinson was the first author who described and figured the subjects of the flower garden. He published in 1640 his "Theatrum Botanicum, or Theatre of Plants," folio. Before this he had published his description of a flower garden, with this singular title, Paradisus in sole Paradisus Terrestris, 1629, fol. This was intended to be a curious conceit on the author's name, Paradisus in sole, Park-in sun.—Pulteney's Sketches of Bot. Granger.

PARMENIDES of Elis, a Greek philosopher, was the disciple of Xenophanes B. C. 496. He asserted the rotundity of the earth, which he placed in the centre of the system. He also maintained that heat and cold were the principles of things. In metaphysics he held that ideas are real, and have no dependance on the will. Xenophanes composed his system in verse, fragments of which have been published by Stephens.—Stanley.

PARMENIO, one of the generals of Alexander, whom he served with great fidelity, and gained many victories, which that monarch repaid with baseness by putting him and his son to death on a slight suspicion.—Quintus Curtius. Plutarch.

PARMENTIER (John), a French navigator, was born in 1494 at Dieppe, and died in the island of Sumatra in 1530. He was the first who conducted vessels to the coast of Brazil. He was well skilled in astronomy, and drew several good maps.—Moreri.

PARMENTIER (James), a French historical and portrait painter, was born in 1658. He settled in England, and resided chiefly in Yorkshire, in which county are several of his paintings, particularly the altar-piece of St. Peter's at Leeds. He died in 1730.—Walpole. Pilkington.

PARNELL (Thomas), a poet and divine, was born in 1679 at Dublin, and educated in Trinity college in that city, where he took his degree of M. A. and entered into orders. He obtained a living in Ireland, and the archdeaconry of Clogher; after which he took his doctor's degree. He was the intimate friend and correspondent of Pope, Swift, Gay, Arbuthnot, and other eminent wits of that period. Dr. Parnell wrote the Life of Homer for Pope, and assisted him in his translation. He died at Chester in 1717. His poems were published in one volume octavo; the principal is that entitled "The Hermit." He also wrote some papers in the Spectator. His posthumous pieces were printed separately in one volume.—Life by Johnson, also by Goldsmith.

PARODI (Domenico), a painter and statuary of Genoa. He painted many altar-pieces and portraits, and died in 1740.—Pilkington.

PARR (Catherine), sixth wife of Henry VIII. She was the daughter of Sir Tho-was Parr, and received, according to the custom of that age, a learned education. She was a friend of the reformation, on which account bishop Gardiner and other zealots of the Romish church endeavoured to effect her ruin; but by her prudence she preserved the king's favour to his death. In 1547 she married sir Thomas Seymour, lord admiral of England, who is said to have treated her so ill that she died in consequence of it the year following. She wrote Prayers, Meditations, and other religious pieces.—Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors.

PARR (Thomas), a husbandman of Shropshire, who lived to the age of one hundred and fifty-two years and nine months. At the age of one hundred he did penance for a bastard child; and at one hundred and twenty he married a second wife, by whom he had a child. In 1635 he was brought to London by lord Arundel, and introduced at court to king Charles the first; but the change of air, and mode of living, particularly drinking wine, occasioned his death the same year.—Life by Taylor in Harleian Miscellany.

PARRHASIUS, a celebrated painter of Athens, who was the contemporary and rival of Zeuxis, B.C. 420. He studied under Socrates, by which means he was enabled to give to his figures the expression of strong passions. In an allegorical picture he represented the people of Athens with all the distinctive traits of their national character; for which he was crowned king of painting.—Pliny Nat. Hist. Ælian Var. Hist.

PARRHASIUS (John Paul), an eminent grammarian, was born at Colenza, near Naples, in 1470. His real name was Parisio, which he altered according to the pedantic custom of the age to Parrhasius. He taught grammar and rhetoric at Milan with great reputation, and wrote Commentaries upon Horace and Ovid.—Bayle.

PARROCEL (Joseph), a painter and engraver, was born in 1648, at Brignoles in Provence. He studied first under one of his brothers, and afterwards under Bourignon, the famous painter of battles. He was a member of the French academy of painting, and died in 1704. Parrocel painted portrait, history, and battles; he also engraved in a good style. His son Charles was an excellent painter, and a member of the academy. He died in 1752, aged 53. He painted the conquests of Louis XV. Peter Parrocel, nephew and pupil of Joseph, died at Avignon in 1789, aged 74. He was an historical painter of great merit.—D'Argenville. Pilkington.

PARRY (Richard), a learned divine, was educated at Oxford, and in 1604 made bishop of St. Asaph. He revised the first edition of the Welsh Bible published in 1620. Before his elevation to the episcopal chair he was master of Ruthin school, Denbighshire.—Owen's Camb. Bug.

PARRY (Richard), an English divine, was a student of Christ church, Oxford, where he took the degree of M. A. in 1747, and that of D.D. in 1757. He was rector of Wichampton, in Dorsetshire, and minister of Market-Harborough, in Leicestershire, where he died in 1780. Dr. Parry wrote some pieces against Dr. Kennicott's Collations, in a spleetic style, also some other pamphlets and sermons.—Gen. B.og. Diet.

PARSONS (Robert), or Persons, a celebrated English jesuit, was born at Ketherstowey in Somersetshire, in 1546. He was educated at Baliol college, Oxford, of which he became burser and dean in 1572, but being charged with embezzling the college money, he went to Rome, and turned catholic. He there obtained leave from the pope to establish a seminary for the purpose of educating English students designed to act as missionaries in their native country for the propagation of the roman catholic faith. Parsons frequently visited England secretly, where he endeavoured to foment sedition, and a price was set upon his head, but he was never taken. He died at Rome in 1610. He was a subtle disputant, and wrote several polemical books, and others on practical divinity. Some of the latter are useful.—Biog. Brit.

PARSONS (James), a learned physician, was born at Barnstaple in Devonshire, in 1705. His father being appointed barrack-master at Bolton, in Ireland, he received his education at Trinity college, Dublin; from whence he went to Paris, where he assiduously attended the medical lectures as well as those of chemistry and botany. He afterwards went to the university of Rheims, where he took his doctor's degree in 1736, and the same year came to London. In 1746 he was elected a fellow of the royal society. In 1751 he was admitted a licentiate of the college of physicians, and afterwards became physician to St. Giles's infirmary. He died in 1770. Dr. Parsons wrote an erudite work on the variety of languages, entitled Japhet, &c. and some other works which shew his learning and ingenuity to advantage.—Anecd. of Br.oger.

PARTHENAY (Anne de), an ingenious lady of the illustrious house of Parthenay, was the wife of Anthony de Pons, count de Marennes. She was one of the brightest ornaments of the court of Renata, duchess of Ferrara, and as well as that princess was a zealous protestant. This lady was highly accomplished, being a great proficient in music, and well versed in the Greek and Latin languages.

PARTHENAY (Catharine de), niece of the above, and heiress to the lordship of Soubise, was married in 1568 to the baron de Pons; and in 1575 to Renatus, viscount Rohan. The famous duke de Rohan, who so courageously defended the protestant cause in France during the civil wars of Louis the XIIIth. was her eldest son. Catharine one of her three daughters, who married the duke of Deux-Ponts, made the following answer to Henry IV. who solicited her favours; "I am too poor, sire, to be your wife, and too proud to be your mistress." Catharine de Parthenay was at Rochelle in the time of its siege, and when the place surrendered she and her daughters were sent to the castle of Niort. She died in 1631, aged 77. She published some poems in 1572, and two years afterwards a tragedy of her writing, entitled, Holofernes, was performed at Rochelle. She also translated the Precepts of Socrates into French, and wrote some other pieces.—Bayle

PARTUA (Paul), a nobleman of Venice, was born in 1540. He discharged several great offices and embassies with honour and skill. He wrote in Italian "Notes upon Tacitus," "A History of Venice," "Political Discourses," and other works. He died in 1598.—Tiraboschi.

PAS (Manasses de), marquis de Feuquieres, was the posthumous son of Francis de Pas, who was slain at the battle of Ivry. He was born at Saumur in 1590, and distinguished himself as an able general and negotiator. At the siege of Rochelle he was taken prisoner, and continued in confinement nine months. The reduction of that city was principally owing to him. He was afterwards ambassador to the courts of Sweden and Germany, where he shewed great talents. In 1635 he commanded the army in conjunction with the duke of Saxe Weimar. He died in 1639. His negotiations in Germany were printed in 1733, 3 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

PAS (Anthony de), marquis de Feuquieres, grandson of the above, was one of the greatest generals of his age. He signalized himself at the battle of Stafarde, at the taking of Suza, and other places in Italy; but he was so severe a disciplinarian that it was usually said, "He must be the bravest man living since he slept every night in the midst of a hundred thousand enemies." He died in 1711, aged 63. His memoirs have been printed in 4 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

PASCAL (Blaise), was born at Clermont, in Auvergne, in 1623. His father, who was president of the court of aids, superintended his education; but though he was himself a mathematician, he particularly interdicted his son from that study. Young Pascal, however, in secret applied to geometry, and without any assistance whatever demonstrated one of the most difficult propositions in Euclid. His father at length permitted him to pursue his inclination, and at the age of 16 the youth published his Treatise on Conic Sections, which Descartes would not believe was his, but the production of his father. At 19 he invented an arithmetical machine, which, though simple, was unequalled. The Torricellian experiment next engaged his attention, and at the age of twenty-three he made considerable improvements upon it. Not long afterwards he solved a problem proposed by father Merfennus, and which had perplexed all the mathematicians in Europe. He now took a sudden turn, renounced the sciences and profane learning, and devoted himself to religious studies. Becoming more abstracted from the world, he retired to the congregation of the Port-royal, where he applied to the reading of the holy scriptures. But he was not altogether indifferent to the passing scenes of society. He espoused the party of jansenists, and exposed their enemies, the jesuits, to ridicule, by his work, entitled, Provincial Letters, in which the principles and practices of that celebrated order were laid open in a fine strain of ridicule, and with the irresistible force of truth. Boileau and Voltaire have not scrupled to pronounce them the finest productions in the French language. The excellent author died in the flower of his age, at Paris, in 1662. The works of Pascal were printed at Paris in 5 vols. 8vo. 1799.—Moreri.

PASCHAL I. pope, was a Roman of the name of Paschasius, and succeeded Stephen IV. in 817. He countenanced image worship, and crowned Lothaire the emperor at Rome. Paschal died in 824.—Dupin. Piatina.

PASCHAL II. was a native of Tuscany, and succeeded Urban II. in 1099. He had a great contest with the emperor Henry IV. and also with Henry I. king of England, respecting the right of investitures. The former visited Rome to be crowned by the pope, who refused to perform the ceremony unless he yielded the matter in dispute; on this Henry caused Paschal to be seized by his troops. This gave so much offence to the Romans that they instantly rose in behalf of their pontiff. Henry retired from Rome, but carried the pope with him, who, to gain his liberty, conceded his claim to the investitures, but this concession was afterwards cancelled in two councils. Paschal died in 1118. His letters have been published.—Ibid.

PASCIUS (George), a protestant divine, was born at Dantzic in 1661. He became professor of divinity at Kiel, where he died in 1707. His works are, 1. Tractatus de novis inventis, quorum accuracioni cultus facem præstulit antiquitas, 4to.; 2. De fictis Rebuspublicis, 4to.; 3. De variis modis moralia tractandi, 4to.—Moreri.

PASOR (George), a learned divine, and Greek professor at Franeker, died in 1637. His works are, 1. Lexicon novi Testamenti, 12mo.; [a book of great utility, especially to students.] 2. Manuale Testamenti, &c. 12mo.; 3. Collegium Hesiodicum. His son Matthias became professor of the oriental languages at Oxford, and died in 1658. He wrote some learned pieces.

PASQUIER (Stephen), an eminent advocate, was born at Paris in 1528. He pleaded so ably against Vettori, the defender of the jesuits, that Henry III. rewarded him by the appointment of advocate-general to the chamber of accounts. He died in 1615. His works are, letters, portraits, epigrams, and epitaphs. The most celebrated is a poem, called, Puce, occasioned by the author's seeing a flea on the bosom of made-moiselle des Roches.—Moreri.

PASSEMANT (Claude Simeon), a mathematician, was born at Paris in 1702. He was bred to trade, but having a great inclination to scientific pursuits, he devoted himself to the construction of mathematical instruments. He published an account of a large reflecting telescope made by him in 1738. He also constructed an astronomical pendulum surmounted on a celestial sphere, which he presented to Louis XV. This able artist died in 1769.—New Dict. Hist.

PASSERAT (John), was born in 1534, at Troyes, in Champagne. He studied law under Cujas, and afterwards became professor of the belles lettres at Paris. On the death of Ramus he obtained the royal professorship of eloquence. He died in 1602. His poems in French were published in 1606, 8vo. He also wrote, De Cognatione Litterarum, 8vo.; Orationes et Præfationes, 8vo.; Commentaries on Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius, &c.—Moreri.

PASSERI (John Baptist), a painter and poet, was the disciple of Dominichino. He wrote, "Lives of the Painters, Sculptors, and Architects" of his time. Passeri died at Rome in 1679. Joseph Passeri, his nephew and pupil, excelled in portrait painting. He died in 1714.—D'Argenville.

PASSERI (John Baptist), a learned antiquary, was born at Gubio, in the duchy of Urbino, in 1691. He was bred to the law, but entered into orders, and became apostolic protonotary and vicar-general of Pesara. He died in 1780. His works are, 1. Lucernæ fideles musei Passerii, 3 vols.; 2. On the History of Fossils; 3. Picturæ Etruscorum in vasculis, in unum collectæ, dissertationibus illustratæ, 3 vols.; 4. The-saurus Gemmarum Astris ferarum antiquarum, tom. 2 & 3; the first volume of this work was published by Gori; 5. The-saurus Gemmarum Selectissimarum.—New Dict. Hist.

PASSEROTTI (Bartholomew), a painter, was born at Bologna. He was the disciple of Zuccherro, and painted several church pieces; but his chief merit was in portrait painting. He died in 1595. His sons, Tiburzio and Ventura, were also eminent painters.—De Pile. Pilkington.

PASQUALINO, an Italian painter of great merit, who died in 1700, aged 59. He painted conversations with spirit and elegance.—Ibid.

PASSINELLI (Lorenzo), an historical painter of Bologna, in which city are some capital pieces by him. He died in 1700, aged 71.—Ibid.

PASSONEI (Dominic), a cardinal, was born of an illustrious family, at Fossombrone, in the duchy of Urbino, in 1682. He formed a rich library and collection of manuscripts. In 1706 he went to Paris, where he was much respected, particularly by Montfaucon; from thence he went to Holland, and was at the congress at Utrecht in 1712. He was employed in various negotiations, particularly in Switzerland, of which he published an account under the title of "Acta Legationis Helveticæ." He also pronounced the funeral oration of prince Eugene, and was made archbishop of Ephesus by pope Innocent III. He died in 1761.—New Dict. Hist.

PATEL, a painter, commonly called by his countrymen the French Claude, from his imitation of that master. His landscapes are very beautiful, but it is unknown when he lived.—D'Argenville.

PATER (Paul), a mathematician, was born in Hungary in 1656. Being a protestant he was obliged to quit his native country, on which he went to Thorn, where he obtained a professorship, and was also librarian to the duke of Wolfenbuttle. He afterwards became professor of mathematics at Dantzic, where he died in 1724. His principal works are, 1. Labor solis, five de eclipsi Christi patiente Hierosolymis visa; 2. De Astrologia Persica; 3. De Maria Caspio; de Cælo Empyrio; 4. De insignibus Turcicis, ex variis Superstitionum tenebris Orientalium maxime illustratis, &c.—Mor.

PATTE (John Baptiste), a landscape painter, was born at Valenciennes in 1695. He had a good taste for colouring, but he neglected design. He died in 1736.—D'Argenville.

PATERSON (Samuel), an eminent bibliographer, was born in London in 1728. He received a principal part of his education in France, after which he settled in the Strand as a foreign bookseller; but without success. He next became an auctioneer, and having discovered the manuscripts of sir Julius Cæsar, which were about to be sold as waste paper, he digested a catalogue of them, and disposed of them by auction for 350l. In 1776 he went to the Continent, where he bought a capital collection of books, of which on his return he framed a catalogue, entitled, Bibliotheca Universalis Selecta. Soon after this he was appointed librarian to the marquis of Lansdowne; and he was employed in forming catalogues of most great collections of books which were publicly sold as the libraries of Beaucerk, Crofts, Pinelli, &c. Mr. Paterson wrote some ingenious works, as Curfory Remarks made upon a Journey through the Netherlands, by Coriat junior, 3 vols. 12mo; Joineriana, or Book of Scraps, 2 vols. 8vo.; the Templar, a periodical paper; Speculations on Law and Lawyers, 8vo. He died in 1803.—Monthly Mag. vol. xv.

PATERCULUS (Caius Velleius), a Roman historian, who flourished A. D. 8. He commanded the cavalry in Germany under Tiberius, and was rewarded with the prætorship. He wrote an epitome of the Roman history, which is extant.—Vossius de Hist. Lat.

PATIN (Guy), a physician, was born in 1601 at Houdan, in the Beauvais. He was professor of physic in the royal college of Paris, and distinguished himself by his zeal in defending the ancients against the moderns, and in opposing the use of antimony as a medicine. He wrote a strange work called the Martyrology of Antimony, or a list of persons who he pretended were victims of that remedy. Patin died in 1672. He wrote Letters in 5 vols., and some medical books.—Moreri.

PATIN (Charles), son of the above, was born at Paris in 1633. He made a great progress in learning, and after travelling in various countries fixed his residence at Padua, where he became professor of surgery, and chevalier of the order of St. Mark. He died in 1694. His works are, 1. Itinerarium Comitum Brienne; 2. Familie Romanæ ex antiquis numismatibus, folio; 3. Introduction to History by the Knowledge of Medals, 12mo; 4. Imperatorum Romanorum Numismata, fol.; 5. Travels in different Parts of Europe; 6. Pratica della Medicina; 7. Suetonius ex Numismatibus illustratus, 4to.; 8. De Optima Medicorum Secta, &c. The wife and two daughters of Patin were learned women, and members of the academy of Ricovrati at Padua, of which he was himself the director. They published some works.—Ibid.

PATKUL (John Reinhold), a Livonian gentleman, who defended the liberties of his country with great firmness against the oppressions of Sweden. In 1689 he was deputed to address a memorial on behalf of the distressed people of Livonia to Charles XI., who took it as an act of treason, and caused a process to issue against Patkul, who was condemned to be beheaded. On this he fled to Russia, and afterwards to Poland. When Charles XII. forced Augustus to make peace he made it one of the conditions that Patkul should be delivered up, and this brave and unfortunate man was broken on the wheel in 1707.—Hist. of Charles XII. Moreri.

PATRICK (St.), the tutelar saint of Ireland, is asserted by some to have been a native of Cornwall, and by others of Wales. In the Catalogue of British Saints he is said to have been principal of a college in Wales, but was taken captive by some pirates of Ireland; the inhabitants of which country he civilized and converted to christianity. It appears certain that he was archbishop of Armagh, and founded many churches and schools of learning. He died about 460, aged 83. Sir James Ware published some pieces in Latin under the name of St. Patrick, at London in 1658, 8vo.

PATRICK (Peter), a native of Thessalonica, who was employed by the emperor Justinian in important negotiations, for which he was made master of the palace. He wrote "The History of Ambassadors," which is in the collection of Byzantine historians, folio.—Moreri.

PATRICK (Simon), a learned divine, was born at Gainsborough, in Lincolnshire, in 1626. He was educated at Queen's college, Cambridge, and on entering into orders obtained the living of Battersea, in Surry, and afterwards that of St. Paul, Covent-Garden. During the plague of 1665 he continued in London, administering the offices of religion to his parishioners. Dr. Patrick was made dean of Peterborough in 1678, and in 1689 bishop of Chichester; from whence he was translated to Ely in 1691. He died in 1707. Bishop Patrick is well known as a valuable commentator on the Old Testament, usually published with Lowth on the Prophets, and Whitby on the New Testament. He was also the author of some controversial tracts against the Romanists and Dissenters, and several books of practical divinity.—Biog. Brit.

PATRUX (Peter), a French poet, was born at Caen in 1585, and died at Paris in 1672. His poems, which are generally feeble, turn on religious subjects; the most known is one which has been translated into English under the name of the Dream, 'I dreamt, that buried in my fellow clay, &c.'—Moreri.

PATRIZI (Francis), or Patricius, bishop of Gaeta, in Italy, where he died in 1494. He was the author of, 1. Dialogues, in Italian, on the Manner of Studying and Writing History, 4to.; 2. De Regno et Regis Institutione, folio; 3. De Institutione Reipublicæ; 4. Del vero Reggimento; 5. Poemata de Antiquitate Sinarum.—Tiraboschi.

PATRIZI (Francis), a native of Cherso, in Istria. He taught philosophy at Ferrara, Padua, and Rome with great reputation. He died in the last city in 1597, aged 67. Patrizi, who was an enemy to Aristotle's philosophy, published an edition of the works attributed to Mercurius Trismegistus; and wrote Paralleli Militari, or a parallel between the ancient military art and the modern. He was also the author of Italian poems.—Ibid.

PATRU (Oliver), an eminent lawyer, was born at Paris in 1604. His talents procured him a place in the French academy in 1640; on which occasion he made a very elegant speech, and this gave rise to the custom for all new members to deliver introductory orations. The critical judgment of Patru was so great that he was called the Quintilian of France, and Vaugelas regarded him as an oracle. He died

In 1681. His works were printed in 1733, in 2 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

PATTISON (William), an English poet, was born at Peasmarsh, in Suffex, in 1706, and educated first at Appleby school in Westmorland, and next at Sidney college, Cambridge, which he left without taking a degree. He then settled in London, and was employed by Curll, the bookseller, in whose house he died of the small pox in 1727. His poetical works were printed in 2 vols. 12mo. in 1728.—Gen. Biog. Dict. Gibber.

PATU (Claude Peter), a dramatic writer, was born at Paris in 1729, and died in 1757. He wrote some comedies, and translated others from the English, which were well received.—Neuv. Dict. Hist.

PAUCTION (Alexis), a mathematician, was born near Laffay, in Mayenne, in 1732. He received his education in the mathematical and naval academy of Nantes, after which he went to Paris, where his integrity and talents procured him patronage and a place. He died in 1799. His works are, 1. Theory of the Force of Archimedes, 12mo.; 2. Metrology, or a Treatise on the Weights, Measures, and Monies of all Countries ancient and modern; 3. Theory of the Laws of Nature, with a Dissertation on the Pyramids of Egypt.—Ibid.

PAVILLON (Nicholas), a French divine, was born in 1597. Cardinal Richelieu made him bishop of Alet, where he introduced a reform among the clergy, and instituted a number of schools; but some enemies accused him to the government, and Pavillon refusing to submit to the regale was disgraced. He died in 1677. He wrote some pastoral pieces, and other religious works.—Moreri.

PAVILLON (Stephen), nephew of the above, was born at Paris in 1652. He was a member of the French academy, and of that of inscriptions, and first distinguished himself as advocate general to the parliament of Metz; but the delicacy of his constitution, and the love of repose, occasioned him to withdraw from public life. He died in 1705. His poems were printed together in 1720, 2 vols. 12mo. In prose he wrote the Portrait of Pure Love; Disinterested Counsels; and other moral pieces, which shew just sentiment and a good judgment.—Ibid.

PAUL (St.), originally called Saul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, was born at Tarsus, of Jewish parents, and educated in the school of the pharisees under Gamaliel. He was very zealous against the gospel, was present at the martyrdom of Stephen, and commissioned by the Sanhedrim to go to Damascus to persecute the christians. But on the road he was overpowered by the appearance of our Saviour, and Saul entered Damascus a disciple, and was received into the church by the name of Paul. After this he became a distinguished preacher of christianity, and was denominated the apostle of the gentiles. His eloquence was so great that it made Felix tremble, converted Dionysius the areopagite at Athens, and drew from Longinus expressions of admiration. The epistles of St. Paul are models of pathetic remonstrance and close reasoning. He was beheaded at Rome A. D. 66.—Cave.

PAUL III. (pope). His name was Alexander Farnese, and he was elected to the papal chair in 1534. In his reign the council of Trent was called; he established the inquisition, confirmed the society of jesuits, condemned the interim of Charles V., and acted with rigour against Henry VIII. of England. Paul died in 1549, aged 82.—Duin. Moreri.

PAUL IV. (John Peter Caraffa), was elected in 1555, at the age of eighty. He was a very bigoted and narrow-minded prelate; and when Elizabeth, queen of England, announced to him by the English ambassador her accession to the throne, he haughtily declared that the kingdom was a fief of the holy see, and that she had no right to assume the crown without his leave, particularly as she was illegitimate. In 1559 he issued a flaming bull against heretics, and died the same year, generally disliked. He wrote on the creed, and some other works.—Ibid.

PAUL V. (Camillus Borghese), was elected in 1605, after the death of Leo XI. He had a great dispute with the senate of Venice, over which he pretended to have a right, but which was so firmly resisted that the pope excommunicated the doge and senate. He also raised forces against the republic, but by the interference of the emperor and other states peace was restored in 1607. Paul had a fine taste, and ornamented Rome with many excellent works of sculpture and painting, and also an aqueduct. He died in 1621, aged 69.—Ibid.

PAUL PETROWITZ, emperor of Russia, was the son of Peter III. and Catharine II., and born in 1754. He married Wilhelmina, daughter of the landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt, who died two years after their union in 1776. Paul then took for his second wife the princess of Wirtemberg, niece of the great king of Prussia. In 1796, by the death of his mother, he succeeded to the throne, and for some time gave promising hopes of proving a great prince. In 1799 he entered into the war against France, and sent Suwarrow with a large army into Italy; but on a sudden Paul changed his sentiments, recalled his forces, formed a northern confederacy, and seized upon the persons and property of the English in his dominions. His conduct to his subjects also became capricious and disgusting; and he died suddenly, or rather was assassinated in 1801. This alteration in the emperor is said to have been occasioned by means of a Favourite French mistress whom he had taken into his favour.—Gent. Mag. Nouv. Diss. Hist.

PAUL OF SAMOSATA, an heresiarch of the third century, received his surname from the place of his birth, a city on the Euphrates. He became patriarch of Antioch in 260, and being entertained at the court of Zenobia, queen of Syria, he endeavoured to gain her to the christian faith, by explaining away its mysteries. For this purpose he held that Christ was a mere man, and that the Trinity consisted not of persons but attributes. His errors were condemned in the council of Antioch, A. D. 270, and Paul was excommunicated. His disciples were called Paulinists.—Dupin. Mosheim.

PAUL, the Silentary, so called from an office which he held in the sacred palace at Constantinople, flourished under the emperor Justinian in the 6th century. He wrote a History, in Greek verse, of the Church of St. Sophia; Epigrams, &c.—Moreri.

PAUL de Santa Maria, a learned jew, was a native of Burgos, and is said to have been converted to christianity by reading the works of Aquinas. After the death of his wife he entered into orders, and became preceptor to John II. king of Castille, who made him bishop of Carthage, and afterwards of Burgos. He died in 1445. Some say he was patriarch of Aquileia. He wrote Scrutinium Scripturarum, fol. 1174. His three sons were baptized with him; the eldest became bishop of Burgos, and wrote a History of Spain; the second was bishop of Placentia; and the third, Alvarez, wrote the History of John II. King of Castille.—Ibid.

PAUL (Mark), a Venetian of the 13th century, who visited the capital of Cublai Chan, the sixth monarch in descent from the great Genghis Chan. The city of Cambalu, which he describes as the seat of the empire, is supposed to be the modern Pekin.—Ibid.

PAUL, deacon of Aquileia, who wrote the History of the Lombards; Lives of the Saints, and of the Bishops of Metz; also a work called Historia Miscella. He was secretary to Didier, king of the Lombards, and afterwards in the service of Charlemagne, who banished him to an island in the Adriatic sea on a false accusation of having conspired against him. The prince of Benevento invited him to his court, and on the death of that prince Paul embraced the monastic life, and died about 801.—Id.

PAULA (St.), a Roman lady, was born in 347, and descended from the Scipios and the Gracchii. On becoming a widow she quitted all the elegancies of life, and retired to Bethlehem, where she founded a monastery and houses of hospitality, of which St. Jerome had the management. She practised the severest austerities and self-denial, which Jerome, in vain, endeavoured to moderate. Paula was acquainted with the scriptures in the original Hebrew, in which she had Jerome for her master. She died in 407.—Dupin. Baillet vies des Saints.

PAULET (William), marquis of Winchester, was the son of sir John Paulet of Somersetshire. He enjoyed several offices under Henry VIII., Edward the VIth., Mary, and Elizabeth. Being asked how he contrived to maintain his situation in such perilous times, wherein so many great changes had taken place in church and state, he answered, by being a villous, and not an oak. He died in 1572, aged 97.—Engl. Peerage.

PAULI (Simon), professor of medicine in the university of Copenhagen, and first physician to the king of Denmark. Christiern V. gave him the bishopric of Arrhufen. He died in 1680, aged 77. He wrote a Treatise on Malignant Fevers; another against Tobacco and Tea; Flora Danica, &c.; and other works.—Niceron.

PAULINUS (St.), bishop of Nola, was born at Bourdeaux about 353. He discharged the office of consul in 373, and about the same time married a Spanish lady, by whose means he embraced christianity. He then retired to Spain with his wife, where Paulinus bestowed his goods in charity, and led a life of mortification. In 393 he entered into orders, and went to Italy, where he was chosen bishop of Nola. He died in 431. Paulinus wrote some Latin Poems, Letters, and other works. There was another saint of this name, who was patriarch of Aquileia, and distinguished himself at the council of Frankfort in 794. He died in 804. He wrote a Treatise on the Trinity.—Dupin. Moreri.

PAULMIER DE GRENTMESNIL (Julian de), a French physician, was the disciple of Fernel, and when all the other physicians had reduced Charles IX. to a very bad state Paulmier succeeded in restoring him. He afterwards attached himself to the duke of Anjou, whom he accompanied to the Low Countries, where he distinguished himself in his own profession and as a soldier. He died at Caen in 1588. His works are, 1. De Vino et Pomaceo; 2. De Lue Venerea; 3. De Morbis Contagiosis. His son James was born in 1537, and educated by his parents in the reformed religion. He died in 1670. His works are, 1. Observationes in Optimos Auctores Græcos, 4to.; 2. Description of ancient Greece, 4to.; 3. Poems, Greek, Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish.—Moreri. Niceron.

PAULMY (Minist Anthony Renè de Voyer, marquis de), minister of state and a member of the French academy, was the son of the marquis de Argenfon, and born at Valenciennes in 1722. He collected one of the most magnificent libraries in Europe, which was sold to the count d'Artois brother to Louis XVI. M. de Paulmy published Melanges d'une grande Bibliothèque, 69 vols. 8vo. To him also is attributed a work entitled, Essays in the Style of those of Montaigne, 9 vols. 8vo. 1778. He died in 1787.—L'Esq. Dict. Hist.

PAUSANIAS, the son of Cleombrotus king of Sparta, governed the kingdom for his nephew during his minority. He also displayed great skill and valour in the war against Athens, which city he took and expelled the ten tyrants. Pausanias afterwards served against the Persians with equal glory; but being discontented with his country, he entered into a secret treaty with the king of Persia, which being discovered by the ephori, to avoid the punishment due to his treason he fled into the temple of Minerva, which being held sacred, the Lacedemonians blocked it up with stones, of which the first was placed there by Pausanias's mother. He was there starved to death; B. C. 474.—Cornelius Nepos.

PAUSANIAS, a Greek historian and orator in the second century, who settled at Rome in the reign of Antoninus the philosopher. Pausanias wrote, Travels in Greece, the best edition of which is that of Kuhniius, 1696, folio.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

PAUSIAS, a painter of Sicily, and the disciple of Pamphilus, flourished about 352 B. C. He was the first who applied colours to wood and ivory by fire, now called encaustic painting. He drew a beautiful picture of his mistress Glycere, which was bought by Lucullus for two talents. After Pausias's death, the Sicyonians sold his pictures to Scaurus, the grandson of Sylla, who built a gallery for them at Rome.—Plinii Nat. Hist.

PAUTRE (Anthony le), an architect, was born at Paris, in which city he built the church of the religious of Port Royal, and other works. He excelled in the ornamental parts of his edifices. He was a member of the academy of sculpture; and his works were published at Paris in 1652, folio. A relation of his, John le Pautre, born at Paris in 1617, was a member of the academy of painting and sculpture. He became an excellent designer and engraver, especially of architectural ornaments. He died in 1682. His plates have been collected in 3 vols. folio. Peter le Pautre, son of the last mentioned, applied to sculpture, and became director of the academy of St. Luke at Rome, where he executed a fine groupe of Æneas and Anchises. One of his greatest works is a Lucretia stabbing herself in the presence of her father. Pautre died in 1744, aged 84.—D'Argenville.

PAUW (Cornelius), a learned writer, was born at Amsterdam, and died near Aix la Chapelle in 1799. He is known by his Discourses on the Greeks, the Americans, the Egyptians, and the Chinese, 7 vols. 8vo. These works are curious, and shew considerable ability, but they are too conjectural. There was another of this name who lived at Utrecht, and published several valuable editions of Greek authors, particularly Anacreon, in 1732, 4to.—Novæ. Dict. H. p.

PAYNE (Nevil), a dramatic author in the reign of Charles II. His plays are, the Fatal Jealousy, a tragedy; the Morning Ramble, or the Town Humours, a comedy; The Siege of Constantinople, a tragedy. 4to. 1675.—Biog. Dram.

PAYNE (Roger), a bookbinder, who was remarkable for the elegance and strength of his binding. He was chiefly employed on scarce books, for binding of which he had an extraordinary price. An Æschylus done by him for earl Spencer cost fifteen guineas the binding. Payne lived in a cellar, and never worked while he had any money. He made all his own tools, and would never suffer any person to see him at work. He died in St. Martin's-lane in 1797, and was buried at the expence of a bookseller of the same name, but not a relation.—Gent. Mag.

PAYS (Renatus le), a French poet, was born at Nantes in 1636. He was comptroller-general of the imposts in Provence, and published a miscellany in prose and verse, entitled, "Amities, Amours, and Amourettes," 1685, 12mo. He died in 1690. He was also the author of a romance called Zelotide, and some other pieces of a like kind.—Moresi.

PEACOCK (Reginald), a worthy prelate, was successively bishop of St. Asaph and Chichester, by the favour of Humphrey, the good duke of Gloucester. But he was deposed for resisting the papal authority, and denying transubstantiation, with other articles of the roman catholic faith. He was obliged to recant his notions, and his books were publicly burnt. He then retired to an abbey, where he died about 1486.—Life of Bishop Peacock, 8vo.

PEAPS (William), a dramatic writer in the reign of Charles I. He was a student at Eton, where he wrote a piece, entitled, "Love in its Extasy," or, the Large Prerogative," published in 4to. in 1649, which is all that is known of him.—Biog. Dram.

PEARCE (Zachary), a learned prelate, was born in 1690, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he wrote some papers in the Guardian and Spectator. He published an excellent edition of Longinus in 1724, and the same year obtained his doctor's degree. When Woolston rudely attacked the miracles of our Saviour, he was replied to by Dr. Pearce in an anonymous pamphlet, entitled, a Vindication of the Miracles, which went through several editions. Dr. Pearce was preferred to the deanry of Winchester in 1739, advanced to the see of Bangor in 1748, and in 1756 translated to Rochester, with the deanry of Westminster annexed. Some time before his death he solicited leave to resign his preferments; as this however was unusual, it was refused with respect to the bishopric, but he was permitted to give up the deanry, which was given to Dr. Thomas. Bishop Pearce died in 1774. Besides the above he published, a Review of the Text of Milton; on the Origin of Temples; an Account of Trinity college, Cambridge, and other works. After his death were published his Commentaries on the Gospels and Acts, 2 vols. quarto; and Sermons in 4 vols. 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

PEARSON (John), an eminent English bishop, was born at Snoring, in Norfolk, in 1612. He received his education at Eton, from whence he was elected to King's college, Cambridge. In 1640 he obtained the living of Terrington in Norfolk, and in 1650 was chosen minister of St. Clement, East Cheap, London. He was promoted to the bishopric of Chester in 1673, and died in 1686. Bishop Pearson is principally known by his invaluable Exposition on the Creed, of which there have been several editions. He also wrote Vindiciæ Ignatii, or a Defence of the Epistles of St. Ignatius, and some other learned works.—Biog. Brit.

PECHANTRY (Nicholas de), a French poet, was born at Toulouse in 1638. He gained the poetical prize from the academy des Jeux Floraux three times. His tragedy of Geta was performed at Paris in 1687 with great applause. This was followed by Jugurtha, the Death of Nero, and some others. Pechantre died in 1708.—Moreri.

PECHLIN (John Nicholas), a physician, was born at Leyden in 1667. He became professor of medicine at Kiel, and afterwards first physician to the duke of Holstein-Gottorp, who appointed him preceptor to the hereditary prince. Pechlin died at Stockholm in 1706. His chief works are, 1. De Purgantium medicamentorum facultatibus; 2. De vulneribus scelopetorum; 3. De æris et alimenti defectu et vita sub aquis; 4. De habitu et colore Æthiopum; 5. a Panegyric on Tea, in a poetic style, in Latin; 6. Observationum physico-mediarum.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PECEMEJA (John), a French writer, was born at Villa Franca in 1741. He became professor of elocution in the college of La Fleche, and died in 1785. His eulogy on the great Colbert was crowned with the approbation of the academy in 1773; but he is principally known by a work in poetic prose, called, Telephe, 3 vols.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PECK (Francis), an eminent antiquary, was born at Stamford, in Lincolnshire, in 1693, and educated at Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. He obtained the living of Godby in Leicestershire, where he died in 1743. Mr. Peck wrote, the Annals of Stamford; the Life of Milton, 4to.; and published a collection of Historical Tracts, entitled, Dendæata Curiosa, folio.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

PECKWELL, (Henry), an English divine, was born in 1747. He became a popular preacher among the Calvinistic methodists, and obtained the rectory of Bloxham in Lincolnshire, but lived chiefly in London, where he studied anatomy and physic, that he might be the more serviceable to the sick of his society. Opening the body of a young person who had died of a putrid fever, he slightly wounded himself in the hand, which turned to a mortification, of which he died in 1787. Dr. Peckwell printed several sermons.—Gent. Mag.

PECQUET (John), a physician, was born at Dieppe. He discovered the lacteal vein that conveys the chyle to the heart, which is therefore called the reservoir of Pecquet. In 1654 he published a work entitled "Experimenta nova Anatomica," and in 1661, another, "De Thoracis Lacteis." He died at Paris in 1674.—Moreri. Haller Bibl. Anat.

PECQUET (Anthony), a French writer, was born in 1704, and died in 1762. He was grand master of the water-works and forests of Rouen, and superintendent of the military school. His principal works are, Analysis of the Spirit of Laws, and the Spirit of Political Maxims, 3 vols.; the Forest Laws of France, 2 vols.; Thoughts on Man. He also translated the Pastor Fido of Guarini, and other Italian works, into French.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PEELE (George), a dramatic writer in the reign of queen Elizabeth, was a native of Devonshire, and a student of Christ church college, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1579. He was a good pastoral poet, and his plays were acted with great applause in the university.—Wood, A. O.

PEIRESC (Nicholas-Claude Fabri, seigneur de), was born in Provence in 1580, of a family originally from Italy. He studied at first under the jesuits, after which he visited various universities, and took his doctor's degree at Aix in 1604. His Thesis on that occasion was greatly admired. Visiting Paris soon after, he obtained the friendship of the most learned men in that city, particularly De Thou, and Casaubon. From thence he made a voyage to England, where he was received with marks of distinction by James I. He next went to Holland, and became acquainted with Julius Scaliger and Grotius. On his return to France he was admitted a counsellor of the parliament of Aix, where he died in 1636. The learning of Peiresc was various and profound; and he particularly excelled in the knowledge of medals. He wrote, Historia Provinciæ Gallicæ Narbonensis; Nobilium ejusdem Provinciæ familiarum Origines; Commentarii rerum omnium memoria dignarum suæ ætate gestarum; Nummi Gallici, Saxonici, Britannici, &c. Linguz Orientales, &c. &c.—Lij. by Goussendi. Bayle.

PELAGIUS I. (pope), was a native of Rome, and ascended the papal chair in 555.

He endeavoured to reform the clergy; and when the city was besieged by the Goths, he obtained from Totila, their general, many concessions in favour of the citizens. He died in 560.—Platina and Bower.

PELAGIUS II. succeeded Benedict I. in 578. He opposed John, patriarch of Constantinople, who had assumed the title of œcumenical bishop. Pelagius died of the plague in 590.—Ibid.

PELAGIUS, the founder of an heresy in the 5th century, was a native of Wales. His real name was Mergant, which he changed to the Greek appellation of Pelagius. He is supposed to have been a monk of Bangor, but went to reside at Rome, where he denied the doctrine of original sin, and maintained free will. He afterwards retired with his friend Celestius to the Holy Land, where Pelagius is supposed to have died. His opinions were condemned in the council of Carthage.—Dupin. Meibom.

PELLETIER (Claude le), was born at Paris in 1680. He was the intimate friend of Bignon, Lamoignon, Despreaux, and other learned men. He became successively counsellor of the chatelet, and of the parliament, president of the chamber of requests, and provost of the merchants. The quay at Paris which bears his name was built by him. He succeeded Colbert as comptroller of the finances in 1683. Six years afterwards he resigned his place, and in 1697 he retired from court, to lead a life of study and devotion. He died in 1711. His principal works are, the Body of Canon Law in Latin, folio; Comes Senecutis & Comes Rusticus. His brother Michael was counsellor of state, and occupied other distinguished offices, which he quitted at the age of 80, and retired into the abbey of St. Victor at Paris, where he died in 1725. He was a member of the academy of inscriptions, and has some articles in the memoirs of that society.—Moreri.

PELL (John), a mathematician and divine, was born at Southwick in Suffex in 1610, and educated first at Cambridge, and afterwards at Oxford. In 1643 he went to Amsterdam, where he became professor of the mathematics; but three years afterwards, at the appointment of the prince of Orange, he removed to Breda, where he read lectures with applause. In 1652 he returned to England, and was afterwards sent by Cromwell as English resident to the protestant cantons of Switzerland. In 1661 he was ordained by the bishop of Lincoln, and the same year was presented to the rectory of Fobbing in Essex. Being, however, of a restless temper, he died poor in 1685. Dr. Pell wrote, 1. Controversia cum Christiano Longomontano de vera circuli mensura, 4to.; 2. an Idea of the Mathematics, 12mo.; 3. a Table of 10,000 square numbers, &c. folio; 4. an Inaugural Oration at Breda; 5. Demonstration of the second and tenth books of Euclid; and several letters, &c. in manuscript.—Hutton. Martin.

PELLEGRIN (Simon Joseph), a French poet and ecclesiastic, was born at Mar-seilles. He obtained, in 1704, the prize of the academy for his "Epistle to the king on the success of his arms." He entered into the religious order of the Servites, but afterwards, by favour of madame de Maintenon, he obtained leave to remove into that of Cluny. He wrote several pieces for the theatres, and dramatized the history of the Old and New Testament, the Psalms of David, &c. He also translated into French the works of Horace, with notes, 2 vols. He died in 1745.—New. Dict. Hist.

PELLEGRINI (Antonio), an historical painter, was born at Padua in 1674, and died in 1741. He came to England with the duke of Manchester, and painted several fine pictures in this country.—Pilkington.

PELLEGRINO (of Modena), was born in 1511. He was of the school of Raphael, and employed in the Vatican. He died of a wound received in endeavouring to rescue his son, who had committed a murder.—De Piles.

PELLEGRINO (Tibaldi), called Pellegrin of Bologna, an eminent painter and architect, died in 1592, aged 70. He was employed upon the church of St. Ambrose at Milan; and afterwards was invited to Spain, where he displayed his talents on the Escorial both as a painter and architect, and for which he was created a marquis.—D'Argenville.

PELLERIN (Joseph), a medallic writer, who died at Paris in 1782, aged 99. He had been commissary general and first clerk of the French marine. His cabinet of medals, in purchasing which he was assisted by the king, was very large and valuable. He published nine quarto volumes illustrative of medals, with plates.—New. Dict. Hist.

PELLETIER (James), a physician, was born at Mans, in 1517. His writings are numerous: the principal are; Commentaries on Euclid, in Latin; Description of Savoy; a Treatise on the Plague; poetic works; Dialogues on Orthography, in which he proposed to write words according to their pronunciation. He died principal of the college of Mans at Paris, in 1582.—Moreri.

PELLETIER (John le), a learned writer, was born at Rouen in 1633. In his youth he studied painting, which he afterwards abandoned for literature, and without a master he acquired a great knowledge of the antient and modern languages, mathematics, physic, and chemistry. He died in 1711. His works are; 1. A Dissertation on Noah's Ark; 2. Discourses in the Journal de Travoux; 3. A translation of Leli's Life of Sixtus V.; and another of sir Robert Naunton's Fragmenta Regalia, from the English.—Ibid.

PELLETIER (Gaspard), a physician of Middleburg in Zealand, who acquired a great reputation by his practice, and died in 1659. He wrote Plantarum, tum patriarum, tum exoticarum in Walachia Zelandiæ insula nascentium, synonyma, 8vo., 1610.—Halleri Bibl. Ectan.

PELLEFIER (Bertrand), a French chemist, was born at Bayonne, in 1761. He settled as an apothecary at Paris, where, on account of his chemical knowledge, he was elected a member of the academy, and afterwards of the institute. He published observations on arsenic, and assisted in the Journal of Natural History. He died in 1797.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PELLICAN (Conrad), a learned divine, was born in Alsace, in 1478. He entered into the order of cordeliers, and had the charge of a convent at Basle; but turning protestant he went to Zurich, where he became hebrew professor, and died in 1556. His works, which are chiefly illustrations of the Scriptures, make 7 vols. folio. Father Simon gives them a high character.—Melch. Adath. V. t. Germ. Theol.

PELLISSON-FONTANIER (Paul), a French writer, was born at Beziers in 1624. and bred to the bar, which profession he quitted. Having written the history of the origin of the French academy, he was chosen a member. Fouché became his patron, but when that minister was disgraced Pellisson was sent to the Bastille, where he was confined four years. On his release he received a pension, and became a favourite of Louis XIV. whom he attended in his campaigns. He died at Versailles in 1693. He wrote the History of Louis XIV.; the Life of Anne of Austria; History of the Conquest of Franche-Comté; Historical Letters; Poems; Reflections on Differences in Religion; Treatise on the Eucharist, &c.—Morcri.

PELLOUTIER (Simon), a protestant divine of Berlin, and member of the academy in that city, was a native of Leipzig, and died in 1757, aged 63. He wrote a History of the Celts, and particularly of the Gauls and Germans, 2 vols. 4to.—Nouv. Dict.

PELOPIDAS, a Theban general, who inherited from his father a large fortune, which he disposed of liberally among his fellow citizens. There was the closest amity between him and Epaminondas, from which friendship the Thebans derived the most important benefits. When the Lacedæmonians gained the sovereignty of Thebes, Pelopidas went to Athens, where he assembled the rest of his exiled countrymen, with whom he returned, and in one night seized upon Thebes, and broke the yoke by which it had been oppressed. This was B. C. 378. Afterwards he defeated the Lacedæmonians at Tigyra, and with Epaminondas shared the great victory of Leuctra.

He was next sent by his countrymen on an embassy to Artaxerxes, king of Persia, who received him with honour and granted his request. On his return he persuaded his countrymen to make war against Alexander, tyrant of Phares, by whom he was taken prisoner, but was released by Epaminondas. He fell shortly after in battle, B. C. 361.—Plutarch. Corn. Nepes.

PEMBERTON (Henry), a learned physician of London, who was fellow of the royal society, and distinguished himself by an excellent work, entitled, a View of Sir Isaac Newton's Philosophy, in one volume quarto. He was also the author of a Treatise on Chemistry. Dr. Pemberton died at an advanced age in 1771.

PEMBLE (William), an English divine was tutor, and divinity reader of Magdalen hall, Oxford, and a great ornament to that university. He died in 1623, aged only 32. His English works were printed in one volume folio, and possess considerable merit.—Wood.

PEMBROKE (Thomas), an English painter, was the pupil of Larroon, whose manner he imitated. He painted several pictures for the earl of Bath, and died in London about 1730, at the age of 28.—Waspole.

PENN (William), an English admiral, was born at Bristol, in 1691. He commanded the fleet, and Venables the land forces, at the taking of Jamaica, in 1655. The same year he was elected member of parliament for Weymouth. He was committed to the tower by Cromwell, for quitting his command without leave, but was soon released. After the restoration he served under the duke of York, in the signal and successful battle with the Dutch fleet, in 1664, for which he was knighted. He died at Winstead, in Essex, in 1670.—Campbell's Admirals.

PENN (William), an eminent quaker, was the son of the above, and born in London, in 1644. He received a good education, which was completed at Christ church, Oxford; but he disappointed his father's expectations by turning quaker, and was discarded by him. Young Penn, however, was confirmed in his opinions by Thomas Loe, a leading quaker, with whom he travelled to propagate this new faith. Being at Cork in Ireland, he was taken up for preaching and sent to prison, but was released through the interest of his father. After his return to England he was sent to the Tower, on account of a book which he had written, and while there he composed his principal work, entitled, "No Cross, no Crown;" intended to shew the benefit of suffering. On his release he still went on in the same course, and was again apprehended with some others, and tried for preaching at a conventicle in Gracechurch-street. The jury persisted in finding them not guilty, and were sent to prison for acting contrary to the dictates of the judge. Admiral Penn was perfectly reconciled to his son before his death, and left him all his property. Notwithstanding this he continued firm in his attachment to the Friends, and went on a mission to Holland and Germany, with Fox and Barclay. In 1681 he obtained from the crown, in lieu of the arrears due to his father, the grant of the province in North America, now called Pennsylvania. Penn took over with him a colony of quakers, and founded Philadelphia; but before he entered upon possession he made a treaty with the Indians. The code of laws which he formed for the government of his province was simple, but would have done honour to the profoundest legislators. Penn died at Beaconsfield in Berkshire, of an apoplexy, in 1718. His works are numerous.—Biog. Brit.

PENNANT (Thomas), an eminent naturalist and antiquary, was born at Downing, the family seat in Flintshire, in 1726. After receiving his grammatical education at Wrexham school, he was sent to Oxford, where he principally applied to the study of natural philosophy. After travelling over England, he went abroad, and was introduced to Voltaire, Buffon, Linnæus, and other eminent men. In 1750 he published the British Zoology, a work of considerable merit. In 1771 appeared his Tour in Scotland, which passed through several editions. This was followed, at different periods, by a great number of ingenious performances, as Tours in Wales; a Journey from Chester to London; an Account of London, &c. He also published his Literary Memoirs; and at the time of his death was engaged on a description of India; of which one volume was printed. This ingenious and indefatigable man died at Downing in 1798.—Europ. Mag. Necrology.

PENNI (John Francis), a painter, was born at Florence in 1488. He was the disciple of Raphael, to whom he became steward, on which account he obtained the title of il fattore. He painted landscapes, in a fine style. He died in 1528. His brother Lucas was also a good artist, and painted some pictures in France and England.—Pilkington.

PENNICUIK (Alexander), a physician of New-hall, in the county of Edinburgh, was descended from an ancient family of that place, and his father had been surgeon in the Swedish army under the famous general Bannier. Dr. Pennicuik, the son, was born in 1652, and after spending his youth abroad, returned and died in his own country in 1722. He wrote a topographical account of Tweedale, and a number of poems characteristic of the manners of the gentry and peasantry in his time. He is also said to have given to Allan Ramsay, the plot of his Gentle Shepherd, the scenes of which were laid on his estate of New-hall.—Private Communication.

PENNINGTON (Isaac), a quaker, was born in 1617. He was one of the first and most zealous disciples of George Fox, and wrote several pieces in defence of quakerism. He also suffered imprisonment several times, and died at Goodnestone, Suffex, in 1679. He is not to be confounded with Isaac Pennington, lord mayor of London in 1640. He headed most of the riots against Charles I. and was one of that king's judges. At the restoration he was tried and condemned, but respited, and died in the Tower. From a curious print of him it should seem that he also became a quaker.—Sewell's Hist. Quakers. Granger.

PENNY (Thomas), an ingenious naturalist, who was fellow of the college of physicians, London. He had been a great traveller, and resided a considerable time in Switzerland, and also in the Island of Majorca, from whence he brought the plant called Hypericum Valerarium, but honoured by Clusius with the name of Myrtocistus Pennai. He explored most parts of England in search of plants, and made large communications to Lobel, Gerard, Gesner, and other botanists. He also wrote some letters on insects, which are in Trew's collections.—Pulteney's Sketches.

PENRUDDOCK (colonel John), a brave and loyal Englishman, was the son of sir John Penruddock, in Wiltshire. In the great rebellion he took up arms in defence of his king, whom he caused to be proclaimed at Blandford, but he was overpowered and defeated by colonel Croke, who, notwithstanding his promise of quarter, caused him to be beheaded, May 16, 1655. Penruddock died as became a soldier and a christian. The letters that passed between him and his wife after their last sorrowful interview, were printed by Steele in his Lover. They are very affecting.—Granger.

PENRY (John), or Ap-Henry, a puritan minister, was born in the county of Brecknock, and educated both at Cambridge and Oxford, where he took his degree in arts. He afterwards became an itinerant preacher, and was much followed; but imbibing the principles of the puritans, he wrote with great virulence against the episcopal government, under the assumed name of Mar-Prelate. These were printed at a private press: and some of them were so seditious that the author was apprehended, tried and executed in 1593.—W. ed. Neale.

PENS (George), a painter and engraver, of Nuremburg, who flourished at the beginning of the 16th century. His pictures and plates are both greatly esteemed.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PEPIN (the short), the son of Charls

Martel, was elected king of France at Soissons in 752, and became the first monarch of the second race of sovereigns of that kingdom. Though small of stature he was very heroic. He assisted the pope against Astolphus, king of Lombardy, whom he defeated and compelled to make peace. He afterwards turned his arms with equal success against the Saxons, and added Aquitaine to his dominions. He died in 768, aged 54.—Henault.

PEPUSCH (John Christopher), an eminent musician, was a native of Prussia, where at the age of fifteen he had the honour of teaching the prince royal. He afterwards settled in England, and was engaged as composer at Drury-lane theatre. The university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor of music. He acquired a considerable fortune by teaching, and by his marriage with an Italian singer. Dr. Pepusch died in 1752, aged 85, and was buried in the chapel of the Charter House.—Burney. Haruins.

PEPYS (Samuel), secretary to the admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., was descended from a good family at Impington in Cambridgeshire, and related to the great earl of Sandwich, who lost his life in the engagement with the Dutch fleet. Mr. Pepys first reduced the affairs of the admiralty to order and method. His memoirs relating to the navy is a well-written piece; and his collection of MSS. with his library, now at Magdalen college, Cambridge, is an invaluable treasure of naval knowledge. He was president of the royal society. He died in 1703.—Evelyn's Numismata. Granger.

PERANDA (Santa), an historical painter of Venice, was born in 1466, and died in 1538. He imitated the respective styles of Titian, Tintoretto, and Paul Veronese.—Pilkington.

PERAU (Gabriel Louis Calabre), a French ecclesiastic and licentiate of the Sorbonne, died in 1767, aged 67. He continued the Lives of illustrious Frenchmen, which had been begun by D'Auvinny. He was also the editor of the works of Bossuet, and the author of the Life of Jerome Bignon, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PERCIVAL (Thomas), a physician, was born at Warrington in 1740. He received his education in the school of his native town, after which he went to Edinburgh, where he closely applied to the study of physic. In 1764 he was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and about the same time went abroad. Having passed some time at Paris, Hamburg, and other places, but principally Leyden, where he took his doctor's degree, in 1765 he returned to his native town. In 1766 he married, and the year following settled at Manchester, where he continued in considerable practice, and universally respected till his death in 1804. Dr. Percival is advantageously known in the literary world by his Father's Instructions to his Children; Moral and Literary Dissertations; Medical Ethics; and several excellent papers in the Memoirs of the Manchester Society, of which he was one of the principal founders and ornaments.—Monthly Mag.

PERCY (William), came to England with William the conqueror, was created a baron by that monarch, and received several lordships in Lincoln and York. Henry Percy was created earl of Northumberland by Richard II. in 1377. He distinguished himself against the Scots, and took Berwick. Seven years afterwards the Scots, by corrupting the governor of that place, made themselves masters of it again; on which the duke of Lancaster brought an accusation against the earl into parliament, and he was sentenced to lose his life and estates. But the king revoked this sentence, upon which Percy laid siege to Berwick and took it. When the duke of Lancaster assumed the crown by the title of Henry IV. he made the earl of Northumberland constable of England. In the 4th year of that reign, the earl and his son Henry (commonly called Hotspur), defeated the Scots at Halidown-hill, and took the earl of Douglas prisoner. Having demanded the pay due to him as keeper of the marches, and not receiving a satisfactory answer, the earl took up arms against the king, and placed Hotspur at the head of his troops, but he was slain at the battle of Shrewsbury in 1403. On this Percy made his submission, and was pardoned. Notwithstanding this, he soon after collected another army, and was defeated and slain in Yorkshire in 1406.—Engl. Peerage. Rapin.

PERDICCAS, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, after whose death he aspired to the crown of Macedon, to accomplish which design he divorced his wife and espoused Cleopatra, sister of Alexander. His project being discovered by Antigonus, he entered into a league with Craterus and Ptolemy, governor of Egypt, against Perdicas, who marched to Memphis, but was slain in his tent by some of his own soldiers, B.C. 322.—Quintus Curtius.

PEREFIXE (Hardouin de Beaumont de), a French prelate, was born of an ancient family in Poitou. His father was in the suit of the cardinal de Richelieu, who became the patron of the son. Prefexie was admitted a doctor of the Sorbonne, and was distinguished as a preacher. He was appointed preceptor to Louis XIV. and in 1664 obtained the archbishopric of Paris. He died in 1670. His works are; the History of Henry IV., 12mo.; Institutio Principis, 1647.—Moreri.

PEREIRA-GOMEZ (George), a Spanish physician, was born at Medina del Campo. He wrote a piece to prove that brute animals are mere machines. His book printed in 1554 in folio is very scarce. Pereira is also the author of another work entitled, Novaveraque Medicina, Experimentis et Rationibus Evidentibus comprobata, folio, 1538.—Moreri.

PEREIRA DE FIGUEIREDO (Anthony), a Portuguese ecclesiastic, was born in 1725, and died at Lisbon in 1797. In the disputes between the court of Portugal with that of Rome he distinguished himself ably in maintaining the power of kings in ecclesiastical matters. He also wrote, a new Method of Latin Grammar, which passed through several editions; the Bible, translated into Portuguese, 23 vols. 8vo.; Tentativa Theologica; Elements of Ecclesiastical History, 2 vols. 8vo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PEREZ (Anthony), a Spanish writer, was the nephew of Goncalvo Perez, secretary to Charles V. He was employed in state affairs, but afterwards fell into disgrace, on which he retired to France, and died at Paris in 1611. His Letters, in which he gives an account of himself, are ingenious. His works were printed at Paris in 1598, 4to.—Moreri.

PERGOLESE (John Baptist), a musical composer, was born at Casoria in the kingdom of Naples in 1704. He studied under Gattano Greco, one of the ablest musicians in Italy; after which the prince of Stigliano took him under his protection. Young Pergolese went to Rome, where he produced his Olympiade; an opera which was vastly applauded. He died at Naples in 1737. His countrymen stile him the Domenichino of music. His Salve Regina and Stabat Mater are the most admired of his compositions.—Burney. Harkness.

PERINGSKJÖLD (John), a learned Swede, was born in the province of Sudermania in 1651. He became secretary of antiquities and counsellor to the king of Sweden, and also professor at Upsal. He died in 1720. His works are, a History of the Kings of the North, 8vo.; History of the Kings of Norway, 2 vols. folio; Historical and Chronological Tables from Adam to Jesus Christ, folio. He was also the editor of the works of Messenius.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

PERIANDER, the tyrant of Corinth, who was called by his flatterers one of the seven Sages of Greece. But this sage was a monster. He began with overturning the constitution and liberty of his country, and usurping the sovereignty B.C. 628. The commencement of his reign was mild, but he soon altered his conduct, and assumed an iron sceptre after consulting with the tyrant on the surest mode of governing. He committed dreadful cruelties on the Corinthians, and incest with his own mother; put to death his wife Melissa, and banished his son Lycophron for lamenting her fate. Periander died B.C. 585.

PERIANDER (Giles), a learned writer, was born at Brussels in 1540. He professed the belles-lettres at Mayence, and wrote, 1. Germania in qua doctissimorum virorum elogium et judicium continetur, 1567, 12mo.; 2. Nobilitas Moguntinz diocesis, Metropolitanzque Ecclesie, 1568, 8vo.—Moreri.

PERICLES, an Athenian, who distinguished himself as a general, statesman, and orator. Having acquired a great popularity among his countrymen; he prevailed with them to alter their government. He caused Cimon and his other rivals to be banished by the ostracism, and thus made himself sole master of Athens. He commanded the army in the Peloponnesus, and gained a great victory near Nemea over the Sicyonians. He next ravaged Arcadia, and took Samos; at the siege of which place were invented several warlike machines. Pericles advised the Athenians to continue the war against Sparta, for which he was censured and disgraced; but he recovered his popularity and the government, and died of the plague B.C. 429.—Plutarch.

PERIZONIUS (James), a learned writer, was born at Dam, in Holland, in 1631. He studied first at Deventer, and afterwards at Utrecht under Grævius, by whose means he obtained the rectorship of the latin school at Delft, and the professorship of history and eloquence at Franeker. In 1693 he removed to Leyden, where he filled the chair of greek and history with great reputation, and died in 1715. His works are, 1. Animadversiones Historice, 8vo.; 2. Dissertationes on several Points of Ancient History; 3. Orations; 4. Origines Babylonice et Egyptiacæ, 2 vols. 8vo.; 5. An edition of Ælian, 2 vols. 8vo.; 6. Historical Commentaries.—Niceron.

PERKINS (William), an English divine, was born at Marston, in Warwickshire, in 1558, and educated at Christ's college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. He was a rigid calvinist, and published several works on that scheme; some of which being translated into Dutch, were replied to by Arminius, and this occasioned those famous disputes for the settling of which the synod of Dort was called. Mr. Perkins died in 1602. His works make three vols. in fol.—Fulcr's Abel Redivivus.

PEROUSE (John Francis Galoup de la), a celebrated navigator, was born at Albi in 1741. He entered very young into the sea service, and in 1764 obtained the rank of enseigne de vaisseau, after which he served seventeen years in the Indian seas. In 1778 he acted under D'Estaing in America, and distinguished himself at the taking of Grenada. In 1782 he accomplished the arduous task of destroying the English settlements in Hudson's Bay. The French government having resolved to send out ships on a voyage of discovery, the charge of the expedition was committed to Perouse; who, after traversing the seas which Cooke had explored before him, lost his life in the enterprise; but in what way has not been ascertained, no account having been received of him or his ships since their departure from Botany Bay in 1788. An expedition under Entrecasteaux was sent out in search of him, but without success. The voyages of Perouse have been published in 4 volumes, 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PERNETTI (James), historiographer of the city of Lyons, and a member of the academy of that place, was a native of Forez. He assumed the title of Miles Ecclesiæ Lugdunensis, but he was a man of pleasant manners and void of pedantry. He died at Paris in 1777, aged 81. The abbé Pernetti's works are, 1. History of Cyrus, 3 vols. 12mo.; 2. Counsels of Friendship; 3. Letters on Physiognomy, 3 vols.; 4. The Abuses of Education, 12mo.; 5. Picture of the City of Lyons, &c.—Ibid.

PERNETTI (Anthony Joseph), a benedictine, was the relation of the above, and born at Roan in 1716. He became librarian to the king of Prussia, and wrote a Dictionary of Painting, Sculpture, and Engraving, 12mo.; Dissertation on America against Pauw, 2 vols. 8vo. The time of his death is uncertain.—Ibid.

PERRAULT (Claude), an ingenious Frenchman, was born at Paris in 1613. He studied the art of physic, and published some works on that subject, but did not practise. His taste for the fine arts, and particularly architecture, drew him from that profession. He designed the entrance into the Louvre, and the observatory at Paris, with other great works. He also translated Vitruvius into French, which he illustrated with fine designs of his own. Perrault was admitted a member of the academy of sciences, although Boileau had satirized him as a physician turned mason. He died in 1688. His other works are, 1. An Abridgement of Vitruvius, 12mo.; 2. Description of Machines of his Invention; 3. On the Ancient Columns of Architecture and their Ornaments; 4. Memoirs for a Natural History of Animals, folio.—D'Argenville. Feilbien.

PERRAULT (Charles), brother of the above, was born at Paris in 1633. He had from his youth a fine taste for literature, particularly poetry. Colbert appointed him comptroller general of the public buildings; and Perrault made use of the favour which he had with that minister in promoting the arts and assisting worthy and ingenious men. He became a member of the French academy, and was one of the institutors of that of belles-lettres and inscriptions. He also contributed considerably to the memoirs of the academy of painting, sculpture, and architecture. After the death of Colbert he was discharged from his place, on which he devoted himself wholly to letters. His poem on painting was greatly admired; but another on the age of Louis the Great, in which he exalted the modern authors over all the antients, was highly censured and ridiculed. He then ventured to publish his Parallel of the Ancients and Moderns, which gave still more offence, and occasioned a violent controversy between him and Boileau. When this war subsided Perrault published his Historical Eulogies of great men of the 17th Century, 2 volumes, folio. He died in 1703. His other works are, 1. The Cabinet of the Fine Arts, folio; 2. Reflections on Longinus, 8vo.; 3. Poems.—Moreri. Nicer n.

PERRIER (Francis), a French painter, was born at Maçon in 1590. Having quitted his parents in his infancy, and associated himself with a blind beggar, with whom he travelled about the country, on going to Rome he was taken into the service of a picture dealer, who perceiving his facility in managing crayons, employed him in copying the pictures of the best masters. He soon became a good artist, and on his return to his own country had considerable employment, and was named first professor of the academy. He died in 1650. He painted much after the manner of Lanfranc, and in landscape he imitated Carracci.—De Piles.

PERRIER (Charles du), a poet, was born at Aix. He wrote some excellent latin poems in his youth; and was complimented by Menage with the title of prince of lyric poets. He obtained two prizes of the French academy, and died in 1692. Besides his latin odes he wrote several poetical pieces of merit in French.—Moreri.

PERRON (James Davy du), a celebrated cardinal, was born of protestant parents at Berne in 1556. He was educated under his father, and acquired a great knowledge of the latin, greek, and hebrew languages, as well as of the mathematics, philosophy, and history. His proficiency was such that Philip Deiportes, abbot of Lyon, reported him to Henry III. of France as a prodigy of memory. Having renounced the protestant religion he entered into orders, and became very famous as a preacher, but more as a disputant. His success in converting protestants was great, and among others whom he had the honour of bringing over to his church were Henry and John Spondanus. In 1593 Perron was made bishop of Evreux. In 1600 he had a famous conference on matters of religion with Pleiss du Mornay in the presence of the king, in which Perron was equally matched. This conference, however, procured him the dignity of cardinal. He was employed on several important negotiations and was made grand almoner of France and archbishop of Sens. The cardinal died in 1618. Du Perron was a man of great policy and ambition. His learning was various and profound. He wrote, a Treatise on the Eucharist; another against king James I. of England; Letters, &c.; which were all collected into 3 vols. folio, with his Life prefixed.—Moreri.

PERRONET (John Rodolphus), director of the bridges and roads of France, was born in 1708. He was brought up by Beaulire, architect to the city of Paris, under whom he made a great progress. About 1745 he became inspector of the school of engineers, of which he was afterwards director. France is indebted to him for several of its finest bridges and best roads, the canal of Burgundy, and other great works. He was for his public services honoured with the order of St. Michael, and he was admitted a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, of the royal society of London, and of the academy of Stockholm. He died at Paris in 1794. He wrote a Description of the Bridges which he had constructed, 2 vols. 12mo.; Memoirs on the Method of Constructing Grand Arches of Stone from 200 to 500 Feet, 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PERROT (Nicholas), archbishop of Siponto, in the kingdom of Naples, was a native of Saffo Ferrato in the states of Venice. He translated Polybius into latin; also a Treatise of Hippocrates; and was the author of a Commentary on Martial. He died in 1480.—Tiraboschi.

PERRYOT (sir John), an eminent statesman, was born of an ancient family in Pembroke-shire about 1527. He was bred up in the house of the marquis of Winchester, that he might profit by the discourses and example of so great a man. He was one of the knights of the bath at the coronation of Edward VI., who had a great partiality for him. At the beginning of the reign of Mary he was sent to prison for harbouring protestants, but by the interference of friends he was soon discharged. He assisted at the coronation of Elizabeth, who sent him in 1572 to Ireland as lord president of Munster, which was then in a state of rebellion, but by his promptitude was quickly reduced to obedience. He was afterwards appointed admiral of a fleet on the coast of Ireland, which was threatened to be invaded by the Spaniards; and he continued cruising there till the reason for such an enterprise was over. In 1583 he was made lord deputy of Ireland, where he carried things with so high a hand as gave great offence, and he was recalled in 1588, and sent to the Tower. In 1592 he was tried by a special commission, brought in guilty of high treason, and sentenced to death. The queen, however, was persuaded of his innocence and respited him; but he fell sick and died in confinement the same year.—Biog. Brit.

PERRROT (Nicholas), seigneur d'Ablancourt, was born at Chalons upon the Marne in 1606. He was educated for the bar, and admitted a counsellor of the parliament of Paris; but not liking that profession he devoted himself to pleasure and the belles lettres. In 1637 he was admitted a member of the French academy. He died at his seat in 1664. D'Ablancourt was bred up in the protestant religion, which he abjured early in life, but returned to it again before he died. He translated Minutius Felix, Tacitus, Lucian, Arrian, Cæsar, Thucydides, and several other ancient authors' into French. One of the most curious of his productions is the History of Africa, 3 vols. 4to.—Mereri.

PERRY (John), an English engineer, who went to Russia on the invitation of Peter the Great, and was there employed in forming a communication between the Wolga and the Don; also in making the river Veronile navigable, and in refitting and improving the Russian navy; for all which services he was badly requited. In 1712 he returned to England, and was engaged in stopping the Dagenham breach in Essex; of which he published an account. He was also the author of the present State of Russia, 8vo. Captain Perry died in 1733.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

PERSEUS or PERSEZ, son of Philip, king of Macedon. He declared war against the Romans, but was defeated near Padua by Paulus Æmilius in 168 B. C. From thence he fled to Samothracia, where he was taken prisoner, and brought to Rome in triumph. He is said to have died in confinement. His two sons were bred to mechanical professions.—Livy. Plutarch.

PERSIA, was originally part of the Assyrian empire, and in 596 B. C. was conquered by Nebuchadnezzar. Afterwards it became a province of Media; but in 536, Cyrus, king of Persia, obtained the dominion over the Medes, and formed a mighty empire, which, in 332, was destroyed by Alexander the Great. In 250, the Persians, under Artabaces, revolted from Antiochus Theus, and founded the Parthian empire. A. D. 229 Persia became again a distinct kingdom under Artaxerxes, and in 651 it was dissolved by the Saracens. In 1037 Toghrul Beg conquered Persia, and formed the two Seljukian dynasties, which were destroyed by the king of Karasim in 1193. Zinghis Khan completely subdued this country in 1218; as did Timur Beg, the Tartar, in 1392. It continued in the possession of his successors till 1500, when Ismael Sofi made a conquest of Persia, in whose family it has ever since remained.—Univ. Hist.

PERSIUS (Aulus Flaccus), a Latin poet, was born in Hetruria, A. D. 34. He studied at the same time with Lucian under Cornutus, the stoic, for whom he had a great regard. Persius wrote in the reign of Nero, whom he satirised with great severity. He died in 62. His works are very enigmatic, and have been compared in this respect to the Greek Lycophron. The best edition is that of Casaubon, London, 12mo, 1647.—Biog. Classica. Bayle.

PERTINAX (Publius Helvius), born of poor parents near Alba, A. D. 126. However, he obtained a good education, and was for some time an instructor of youth in Liguria, after which he entered into the army, and by his bravery rose to preferment. The emperor Aurelius made him consul, and on the death of Commodus in 193 he was elected to the imperial dignity by the soldiers. His conduct was meritorious; he distributed his lands among the people, and sold the property accumulated by his predecessor for the purpose of paying off the public debt. He abolished also the heavy imposts which had been laid on by Commodus. But these virtuous acts did not please the licentious Romans, who were fond of luxury, and they basely assassinated the emperor a few months after his election.—Herodian. Crevier.

PERUGINO (Peter), an Italian painter, was born in 1446 at Perugia. He was the disciple of Andrea Verocchio, but he is chiefly celebrated for being the master of Raphael. He was employed by Sixtus IV. to paint several pieces for his chapel. Perugino was very avaricious, and amassed considerable wealth, of which being robbed, the loss occasioned his death in 1524.—De Piles.

PERUZZI (Balthazar), a painter and architect, was born at Volterra in Tuscany, in 1481. He was employed at Rome by popes Julius II. and Leo X. the former in ornamenting his palace, and by the latter as one of the architects of the church of St. Peter. He was taken prisoner when Rome was sacked by Charles V. but he obtained his liberty on painting a picture of the constable Bourbon. He died in 1556.—Ibid.

PEZZELLI (Pisello), a painter, was born at Florence about 1440. He was a disciple of Andrea del Castagno, whose style he adopted. He painted historical subjects, also animals. He died in 1517.—Ibid.

PEZZELIER (Charles Stephen), member of the academies of Nantz, Amiens, Rouen, and Angers, was born at Paris in 1712. He was intended for the law, which profession he renounced for poetry; but afterwards he obtained a place in the financial department, in which capacity he wrote, a General Idea of the Finances, 1759, folio; Doubts addressed to the author of the Theory of Taxation, 12mo. He is chiefly known by his Fables, which are in the manner of Fontaine; Letters on Education, 2 vols.; the Masquerade of Parnassus; Æsop in Parnassus; and the School of the Times; comedies. He died in 1763.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PETAVIUS (Dionysius), or Denis Petau, was born at Orleans in 1563. He entered into the society of Jesuits at the age of twenty-two, and became a great ornament and defender of that order. His knowledge was general; but he particularly excelled in chronology, in which science he stood unrivalled. Philip IV. of Spain and pope Urban VIII. solicited him to settle in their respective states with the most flattering promises, which he declined on account of the bad state of his health. He died in the college of Clermont in 1652. His principal works are, 1. De Doctrina Temporum, 2 vols. folio, and with his Uranologia, 3 vols.; 2. Rationarium Temporum, folio, also at Leyden in 2 vols. 8vo.; 3. Dogmaticæ Theologica, 5 vols. fol.; 4. the Psalms, translated into Greek verse, 12mo.; 5. De Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, folio. He had several controversies with Scaliger, Salmastius, and Casaubon; and he published editions of some of the works of the ancient fathers.—Nicéron.

PETER (St.), one of the apostles, was a fisherman with his brother Andrew at Bethsaida when called to be a disciple of Jesus Christ. Peter was remarkable for his great zeal, which he displayed on many occasions, particularly in the garden, when his master was apprehended, on which occasion he drew his sword, and cut off the ear of the servant of the high-priest. But when he entered the hall of Caiaphas, and was recognized as one of the disciples, he repeatedly denied the charge, till the cock crew, and then remembering our Lord's prediction, that before the cock crew twice he would deny him thrice, Peter went out and wept. After the ascension of our Saviour, Peter preached a famous sermon at Jerusalem, by which some thousands were converted. Herod Agrippa threw him into prison, A. D. 44, but he was released by an angel. He was crucified with his head downwards in the persecution under Nero, A. D. 66. Two of his epistles are in the sacred canon.—Cave. Dupin.

PETER III. king of Arragon, succeeded his father James I. in 1276. He laid claim to the kingdom of Navarre, but was unsuccessful. Having married the daughter of Mainfroy, king of Sicily, he resolved to make himself master of that island, and to effect his purpose contrived the horrid massacre of the Sicilian vassals, or the murder of all the French in the island at the hour of vespers, on Easter-day in 1282. For this crime pope Martin IV. excommunicated Peter and the Sicilians, and laid Arragon under an interdict. Peter died in 1285.—Univ. Hist.

PETER the Cruel, king of Castile, succeeded his father Alphonfus XI. in 1350, at the age of 16. He commenced his reign by several wanton acts of barbarity. Having married the daughter of Philip, duke of Bourbon, he repudiated her three days after, and sent her to prison, that he might renew his connexion with Maria de Padilla, his former mistress. His cruelties provoked his subjects to take up arms against him in 1366, and they placed at their head Henry of Transtamare, his natural brother, who slew Philip in battle in 1369.—Ibid.

PETER THE HERMIT, a French gentleman of Amiens, in Picardy, who renounced the military life to embrace that of a pilgrim. At the end of the eleventh century a very general alarm was spread that the last day was approaching, on which numbers of persons flocked to the Holy Land from all countries, with a view of finishing their days near the holy sepulchre. Peter was of the number: and on his return to Europe made so pathetic a representation of the state of the Christians in Palestine to pope Urban II. who was so affected that he gave Peter leave to preach up the necessity of a croisade throughout Christendom. The appearance, zeal, and discourses of the hermit produced a prodigious effect, and all ranks and ages, of both sexes, pressed eagerly into the service. With a numerous and motley army Peter passed through Hungary, and after losing a great number of his followers, entered Palestine. He was at the siege of Jerusalem in 1099, where he displayed great bravery, and when the place was taken was made by the new patriarch vicar-general. Peter on his return to France founded the abbey of Neu-Moutier, where he died.—Maimbourg's Hist. Crusades. Moreri.

PETER ALEKSIOWITZ I. called the great, the son of Alexis Michaelowitz, czar of Muscovy, was placed on the throne after the death of his elder brother Theodore, or Fedor, to the prejudice of his other brother Iwan, who was as weak in his intellect as in his constitution. The Strelitz, a militia which in that country greatly resembled the Janissaries in Turkey, being excited by the princess Sophia, revolted in favour of Iwan; and to avert a civil war it was resolved that the two princes should reign in conjunction. Russia was at that time little better than in a state of barbarism. The first act of Peter's enterprising genius was to introduce a reform among the troops, in which, notwithstanding the difficulty of the task, he had great success. In 1696 he took Azoph, which he placed in a strong state of defence against the incursions of the Tartars. He next turned his attention to the finances, and in this department of government corrected many gross abuses. The year following he undertook a journey into various parts of Europe, for the purpose of acquiring such a knowledge of arts, sciences, and mechanics, as might enable him to render an essential service to his subjects. After passing through Germany he visited Amsterdam, where he entered himself in the company of shipwrights in the dock-yard, and worked with the greatest diligence by the name of master Peter. He quitted Holland in 1698, and came to England, where he paid attention to manufactures, and to every public institution. Having conceived the idea of forming a junction between the Don and the Wolga, he engaged some English engineers to enter into his service, for the accomplishment of that great undertaking. From England the czar went to Vienna, intending to go to Italy, but the news of an insurrection in Russia obliged him to hasten home, where he compelled the princess Sophia, who had been the cause of the revolt, to go into a monastery; several of the insurgents were executed, and the greatest part of the Strelitz decimated or sent to Siberia. In 1699 Peter instituted the order of St. Andrew, by way of raising a spirit of emulation among his subjects. The next year he declared war against Charles XII. of Sweden, but without success. This, however, did not discourage Peter, who said, "I knew that the Swedes would beat us at first; but they will in time teach us to beat them." This was verified in 1709 by the important victory of Pultowa; by which the greatest part of the Swedish troops were made prisoners, and their king obliged to seek an asylum in Turkey. Peter availed himself of this advantage by seizing Livonia, Ingria, Finland, and part of Swedish Pomerania. In the mean time the Turks, at the instigation of Charles XII. broke their truce with the czar, whom they completely hemmed in with his army on the banks of the Pruth in 1711. In this perilous situation he was saved by the presence of mind of the czarina Catherine, who had accompanied him. She sent secretly a person to negotiate with the grand vizir, who consented to the terms proposed, and a peace was settled. In memory of this event was instituted the female order of St. Catherine, of which the czarina became the head. The restoration of tranquillity enabled the czar to make another tour in Denmark, Germany, Holland, and France. When in the latter country he visited the tomb of cardinal Richelieu, on the sight of which he exclaimed, "Great minister, why was you not born in my time? I would have given you one half of my dominions for teaching me how to govern the other." He is also said to have proposed the plan of a treaty between the two countries to the duke of Orleans, which was declined. The doctors of the Sorbonne presented to the czar a plan for reconciling the Russian church to that of Rome, which Peter received with grace; but after his return he made the pope the subject of a public farce, which gave great offence to the catholic courts, particularly Vienna. Prince Alexis, his son, having joined a party of malecontents, who were displeased at the changes which had taken place both in ecclesiastical and civil matters, the czar caused him to be tried, and the judges sentenced him to death. This decree was not executed, but the prince soon after died as was said of an apoplexy. Some degree of suspicion, however, fell upon the father, which was not removed by the rigorous execution afterwards of several of the friends of Alexis. The Tartars having massacred a Russian garrison on the borders of Persia in 1722, Peter embarked on the Caspian sea, and took the city of Derbent, with three provinces which were afterwards recaptured by Kouli Khan. After this expedition the czar devoted himself to the internal regulation of his great empire, and of the many important establishments and improvements of which he was the author.

the following were the principal; a reform among the clergy, and the abolition of the patriarchal dignity; the organization of a numerous army; the formation of a formidable navy; fortifications in all the principal towns; and an excellent civil government in the cities; an academy for naval education; colleges at Moscow, Petersburg, and Kiof; a college of physicians, and a dispensary at Moscow; public lectures in anatomy, a branch of science in which the czar himself had made great proficiency under Ruysch at Amsterdam; an observatory, which was also a repository of natural curiosities; a botanical garden, stocked with plants from all parts of the world; printing-offices; and a royal library. But one of the most extraordinary works of this great man was the building of the city of Petersburg in a morass, the foundations of which consist of piles. Peter the Great died of the strangury caused by an imposthume in the neck of his bladder, Jan. 28, 1725, aged 59. He wrote several pieces upon naval affairs, and he was a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, to which he sent a chart of the Caspian sea. By his last will he constituted the empress Catherine his successor.—Voltaire's Hist. Peter the Great. Tooke's Russia.

PETER II. emperor of Russia, was the son of Alexis Petrowitz, and succeeded, in 1727, the empress Catherine, who had declared him grand duke of Russia the year preceding. The most remarkable event of his reign was the disgrace of the prime minister Menzikoff, who was banished to Siberia. The emperor died in 1733, aged 18.—Ibid.

PETER III. the son of Anne Petrowna, daughter of Peter the Great, and of Charles Frederic duke of Holstein Gottorp, was declared grand duke of Russia in 1742, by his aunt the empress Elizabeth, whom he succeeded in 1762. He was a warm admirer of the character of Frederic the Great, king of Prussia, and would have imitated him, but his abilities were not equal to his wishes. Peter was weak, passionate, and irresolute; and in a few months after his accession was dethroned by his wife Catherine, who was proclaimed empress. The emperor died shortly after. [See CATHERINE II.]

PETER (St.), bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 300. He was regarded as one of the most illustrious prelates of his time, and was crowned with martyrdom in 311. He formed the penitential canons. Some of his letters have been preserved by Theodoret.—Dupin. Baillet.

PETER NOLASQUE, founder of the order of mercy for the redemption of captives, was born in Languedoc in 1189. He was in the service and favour of James, king of Arragon, and by his interest with that prince he instituted a religious military order, in 1213, whose province it should be to rescue christian slaves from the musulmans. He was himself very successful in this good work, and died in 1266.—Moreri. Ibid.

PETER OF SICILY, an historian of the 9th century, who wrote a History of the Manichees, which contains many curious particulars. It was printed at Ingolstadt in 1604, in Greek and Latin.—Moreri.

PETER DE CLUNY, or Peter the Venerable, was born in Auvergne, of a noble family. He became a monk of the order of Cluny, and in 1121 was chosen general of that society, at the early age of 29. He magnificently entertained pope Innocent II. at Cluny in 1130, and afforded an asylum to the celebrated Abelard. He died in 1156. Among other works he wrote an excellent Treatise on the Divinity of Christ; another against the Jews, and one on Infant Baptism.—Dupin.

PETER de Blois, was so called from the place of his birth. After studying at Paris and Bologna, he became preceptor and secretary to the king of Sicily. At the invitation of Henry II. he came to England, and obtained the archdeaconry of Bath. He died in 1200. His letters, sermons, and other works were printed in 1667, folio.—Ibid.

PETERS (Gerard), a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam about 1580. His pieces are mostly conversations and landscapes.—Houbraeken.

PETERS (Bonaventure), a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp, in 1614. He excelled in painting sea storms. He died in 1652. His brother John Peters painted sea views, engagements, and landscapes.—Ibid.

PETERS (Francis Lucas), a landscape painter, was born at Mechlin in 1606. He was a disciple of Gerard Segers, and was much esteemed and employed by the archduke Leopold. He died in 1654.—Pilkington.

PETERS (Hugh), an English fanatic, was born at Fowey in Cornwall, in 1599, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, from whence he was expelled for irregular behaviour. He afterwards went on the stage, where he acquired that buffoonery which afterwards distinguished him in the pulpit. He was ordained by bishop Mountaine, and was for some time lecturer of St. Sepulchre's London; but having an intrigue with another man's wife, he fled to Rotterdam, where he joined the independents. He went from thence to New England, and at the beginning of the rebellion returned to London, where he became a zealous preacher in the cause of the parliament. For his activity in the rebellion, especially at the murder of the king, he was hung and quartered in 1660.—Life by Dr. Young in 1663.

PETIT (John-Louis), an eminent surgeon, was born at Paris in 1674. He studied under Lettre, Castel, and Marechal, and in 1726 he was invited to attend the king of Poland, whom he cured, as he also did the prince of Spain in 1734. He was admitted a member of the academy of sciences, and rector of that of surgery. Petit died in 1750. He invented several surgical instruments, and wrote a System of Surgery, 3 vols. 8vo.; Treatise on Diseases of the Bones, 2 vols. 12mo.; Consultations on Venereal complaints; and dissertations in the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences. He is not to be mistaken for Antony Petit, a physician, who was also a member of the academy of sciences, and died near Orleans, in 1794, aged 72. He was the author of Chirurgical Anatomy; Discourse on Surgery; Report in favour of Inoculation; on a Reform in Medical Practice, &c.—Novu. Diss. Hist.

PETIT (Samuel), a learned protestant divine, was born at Nismes, in 1594, and educated at Geneva, where he became professor of theology, and also of Greek and Hebrew. He died in 1645. His principal works are; 1. Miscellanea; 2. Elogz Chronologicæ, 4to.; 3. Variz Lectiones; 4. Leges Atticæ, folio.—Moreri.

PETIT (Peter), a French mathematician, was born at Montluçon, in 1598. He became geographer to the king, and intendant of the fortifications of France. He was the intimate friend of Des Cartes, and died in 1677. His works are: 1. A Treatise on the Compass of Proportion; 2. On the Construction and Use of the Calibre of Artillery; 3. On Sight; 4. Of Eclipses; 5. On preventing the Inundations of the Seine; 6. On Comets, &c.—Ibid.

PETIT (Peter), a physician, was born at Paris, in 1617. He was a member of the academy of Padua, and died in 1687. He wrote some Latin poems of merit, particularly one, entitled, Codrus. His other works are; 1. A Treatise on the Motion of Animals; 2. Homeri Nepenthes, 8vo.; 3. Treatise on the Amazons, in Latin, 8vo., and French, 2 vols. 8vo.; 4. On the Sibyl, 8vo.; 5. Miscellaneous Observations; 6. De Natura et Moribus Anthropophagorum, 8vo.—Ibid.

PETITOT (John), an unrivalled painter in enamel, was born at Geneva, in 1607. He visited England, where he was greatly patronized by Charles I. after whose death he went to France, and was employed by Louis XIV. He painted the face and hands, and his brother-in-law Bordier, added the drapery. He died in 1691.—Walpole.

PETIVER (James), an English botanist, who was apothecary to the charter-house, and died in 1718. He was a fellow of the royal society, and made so great a collection of rare and curious plants, animals, and insects, that Sir Hans Sloane, who afterwards purchased it, offered him in his life-time 4000l. for his collection. Mr. Petiver published, 1. Musæi Petiveriani Cen- turiz decem, 8vo.; 2. Gazophylacii Naturæ et Artis decadis decem, folio; 3. A Catalogue of Plants found on the Mountains about Geneva; 4. Pterigraphia Americana, folio. He was also the author of several other pieces, and communications to Mr. Ray, and others.—Pulteney's Sketches.

PETRARCH (Francis), a celebrated Italian poet, was born at Arezzo, in 1304. On account of the dissensions which raged in his native country, his father removed with him to Avignon, and afterwards to Carpentras, where Petrarch began his education, which was completed at Montpellier and Bologna. He was intended for the law, but Virgil had more charms for him than Justinian. He conceived a great aversion to jurisprudence. On the death of his parents he returned to Avignon, where, in 1327, he became passionately in love with a young lady named Laura de Noves, upon whose heart he could make no impression, neither by his constancy nor his verses. Petrarch retired to Vaucluse, a romantic spot, where he poured out his amorous complaints in several pieces. He afterwards travelled into different countries, but with his return to Vaucluse his passion for Laura also returned. Again he celebrated her charms and the delights of his retreat. His name became celebrated; and he received invitations from the senate of Rome, from the king of Naples, and the university of Paris. He accepted the former, and on Easter day, in 1341, he was crowned with laurel in the capitol with great pomp. He was also declared a Roman citizen. In 1348 he received the news of the death of Laura: he was then at Parma, but immediately set out for Vaucluse, where he passed some time in grief. In 1352 he returned to Italy, and at Padua obtained a canonry. He died near Padua, in 1374. The sonnets of Petrarch are tender, but his poem on the Punic war, entitled, Africa, possesses little merit. His Latin poems are inferior to the Italian. He also wrote, 1. De remediis utriusque fortunæ; 2. De otio religiosorum; 3. De vera Sapientia; 4. De vita Solitaria; 5. De Contemptu mundi; 6. Rerum memorabilium; 7. De republica optime administranda; 8. Itinerarium Syriacum; 9. Epistolæ; 10. Orationes. All his works have been published in 4 vols. folio. The best edition of his poems is that of Venice, 2 vols. 4to., 1756.—Tiraboschi. Dufrenoy's Life of Petrarch.

PETRE (Sir William), an eminent statesman, was born at Exeter, and educated at the college of that name at Oxford; but in 1523 he was elected fellow of All Souls. He took his doctor's degree in civil law, and became principal of Peckwater Inn. His abilities recommended him to Thomas Cromwell, by whose means he was employed in state affairs, and was in the commission for visiting the monasteries. He obtained a large share of the church lands, which he contrived to keep in the reign of Mary, to whom he was counsellor, as he had been to her father and brother. This complying courtier found means to ingratiate himself with queen Elizabeth, who appointed him one of her secretaries of state, and member of the privy council. Sir William was a great benefactor to Exeter and All Souls colleges, Oxford, and founded several charitable institutions. He died in 1571. His manors in Essex were very considerable, and are now possessed by lord Petre, his descendant.—Biog. Brit.

PETRONIUS MAXIMUS, emperor of Rome, was born in 395, of an illustrious family, and after being a senator and consul he seized the throne by assassinating Valentinian III. in 455. He then married Eudoxia, the widow of his predecessor, but she was ignorant of his crime. On becoming acquainted with it she applied secretly to Genferic, king of the Vandals, who entered Italy with fire and sword, took Rome, and slew the usurper. The Romans were so enraged with Maximus that they dragged his body about the streets, and threw it into the Tiber.—Granger.

PETRONIUS ARBITER (Titus), a Latin poet, was born near Marseilles. He was one of the principal favourites of Nero, and became pro-consul of Bithynia; but being accused by his rival Tigellinus, another of Nero's friends, of being engaged in a conspiracy against that tyrant, he was put to death by the opening of his veins, A. D. 65. His satire against Nero is extremely well written, though very licentious. His other works are; a poem on the Civil War between Caesar and Pompey; on the Education of the Roman Youth; on the Corruption of Eloquence, and on the Causes of the Decline of the Arts; the Shipwreck of Lycas, &c. The best edition of Petronius is that of Burman, 1743, 2 vols. 4to. The style is so good, and the matter so bad, that Petronius has been called Autor purissime impuritatis.—Biog. Classica. Vossius de Poet. Lat.

PERTUS (Sir John), a native of Suffolk, was member of parliament for Dunwich in that county in the reign of Charles II. and one of the deputy governors of the royal mines. He died about 1690. He was the author of the History, Laws, and Places of the Chief Mines and Mineral Works in England and Wales. 1670, folio; England's Independency of the Papal Power, 4to; Volatiles from the History of Adam and Eve, 8vo.; Pleta minor, or the Laws of Art and Nature, in Knowing, Judging, Assaying, &c. of Metals, translated from the German, folio, 1683. When he translated this book he was in the Fleet prison.—Granger.

PETTY (Sir William), a celebrated writer, was the son of a clothier at Rumsey in Hampshire, and born there in 1623. He received the first part of his education at the school of his native town, after which he went to the university of Caen, in Normandy. On his return to England he began to study physic and anatomy, to complete himself in which he went to Leyden, Amsterdam and Paris. In 1647 he returned home, and having invented an instrument for double writing, he obtained a patent for seventeen years; but this project failed. About this time he went to Oxford, where he became assistant to the professor of anatomy, and fellow of Brazenose college. He was also one of the first members of the association, which was afterwards called the royal society. In 1650 he was chosen professor of anatomy at Oxford, and the same year mulical professor of Gresham college. In 1652 he was appointed physician to the army in Ireland, where he also became secretary to Henry Cromwell, lieutenant of that kingdom. He was one of the commissioners for dividing the forfeited lands; but in 1658 he was dismissed from his employments on a charge brought against him in the house of commons. At the restoration he was knighted, and made surveyor general of Ireland. About this time he invented a double-bottomed ship, a model of which he gave to the royal society. He was also the author of several other ingenious schemes, and wrote a great number of books on subjects of practical or political utility. He died in 1687, leaving a fortune of 12,000*l.* a year to his children.—Biog. Brit.

PETTY (William), a law-antiquary, was born near Skipton in Yorkshire. He became bancher and treasurer of the Inner Temple, and keeper of the records in the Tower. He died at Chelsea in 1707. His collection of parliamentary tracts is lodged in the Inner Temple library. He was author of the Ancient Rights of the Commons Asserted, 8vo.; a Summary Review of the Kings and Government of England; and of Jus Parliamentarium, or the Ancient Power and Rights of Parliament, folio.—Granger.

PEUCKER (Gaspard), a physician and mathematician, was born at Bautzen in Lusatia, in 1525. He became medical professor at Wirtemberg, where he married Melancthon's daughter. He was imprisoned ten years on account of his opinions, and while in confinement wrote his thoughts on the margins of old books, with ink made of burnt crusts soaked in wine. He died in 1602. His works are; 1. De præcipuis divinationum generibus; 2. Methodus curandi morbis internis; 3. De febribus; 4. Vitæ illustrium Medicorum; 5. Hypotheses Astronomicæ; 6. On Montes, Weights, and Measures. He also edited Melancthon's works, in 5 vols. folio.—Malab. Adam. Vit. Germ. Illud.

PEUTEMAN (Peter), a painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1650. Being employed to paint a picture of mortality, he went into an anatomical room where several skeletons were suspended from the ceiling, and bones and skulls lay on the floor. While there he fell asleep, and being suddenly roused by the shock of an earthquake, he saw the skeletons moving in all directions, and the loose skulls rolling about the room, which struck him with such horror, that he ran home half-dead; and thought the transaction was explained to him, he died shortly after in 1692.—Pilkington.

PEUTINGER (Conrad), was born at Augsburg, in 1465. After travelling into Italy, he returned to his native place, where he became secretary to the senate, and counsellor to the emperor. He died in 1574. Peutingcr is known by a chart which bears his name, and on which are laid down the roads pursued by the Roman armies in the western empire. It was published at Vienna in 1753, with dissertations and notes by Scheib. The other works of Peutingcr are; Convivial Discourses, 8vo.; De Inclinatione Romani imperii. et Gentium commigrationibus; De rebus Gothorum, folio; Romanæ vetustatis fragmenta in Augusta Vindelicorum, folio.—Moreri.

PEYRERE (Isaac), the author of a book endeavouring to prove that Adam was not the first man, for which he was sent to prison at Brussels. By the interest of the prince of Condé, to whom he was librarian, he obtained his liberty and went to Rome, where he abjured his errors. He died in 1676. He also wrote a book on the Restoration of the Jews, 8vo., a Relation of Greenland, and some other pieces.—Moreri.

PEYSSONNEL (Charles), was born at Marseilles in 1700. He accompanied the French ambassador to Constantinople, in 1735, as secretary; and travelled throughout Asia Minor collecting medals and marking the geographical positions of ancient places. He wrote several dissertations inserted in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions, of which he was a member. He was also the author of an Eulogy on Marshal Villars; a Discourse on Coral, and other pieces. He died in 1757. His son, who followed in his steps, became consul at Smyrna, and died in 1790, at the age of 30. He wrote Historical Observations on the Barbarous People who inhabit the Borders of the Danube, and the Euxine, 4to; Observations on the Memoirs of the Baron de Tott, 8vo.; Les Numeros, 4 vols.; Treatise on the Commerce of the Black Sea, 2 vols.; Political Situation of France, 2 vols.; Discourse on the Alliance of France with the Swiss and the Grisons, 8vo.—Nov. Diss. Hist.

PEZAY (Maffon, marquis de), was a native of Blois. He was a captain in the dragoons, and had the honour of instructing Louis XVI. in military tactics, for which he was appointed inspector-general of the coasts: but conducting himself in too arbitrary a manner, complaints were preferred against him, and he was exiled to his estate, where he died in 1778. He wrote some agreeable poems, and translated Catullus and Tibullus into French. He was also the author of the Campaigns of Maillebois, 3 vols. 4to., and other works.—Ibid.

PEZENAS (Esprit), a learned jesuit, was born at Avignon in 1692. He was professor of philosophy and hydrography at Marseilles, and died at Avignon in 1776. He translated Maclaurin's Algebra and Fluxions into French; also Desaguliers's Experimental Philosophy; Baker on the Microscope; Ward's Young Mathematician's Guide; Smith's Optics, and other works, from the English. His own writings are; a Treatise on Pilotage, 8vo.; Theory of Gauging, 8vo.; Memoirs of Mathematics and Philosophy, &c.—Nov. Diss. Hist.

PEZRON (Paul), an ingenious Frenchman, was born at Hennebont in Brittany, in 1639. He became a Bernardin, was admitted a doctor of the Sorbonne, and in 1697 was nominated abbot of Charnoy, which he afterwards resigned. He died in 1706. Pezron was a learned antiquary, and wrote, 1. L'Antiquité des Temps rétablie, 4to. In this work he defends the chronology of the Septuagint against that of the Hebrew text. 2. A Vindication of the above work; 3. Essay towards a Commentary on the Prophecies; 4. The Evangelical History, confirmed by the Jewish and Roman histories; 5. On the Antiquity of the Nation and Language of the Celts, otherwise called the Gauls.—Moreri.

PRANNER (Tobias), was born at Augsburg, in 1641. He was secretary of the archives to the duke of Saxe-gotha, and was called the living archives of the house of Saxony. He died in 1717. His works are; the History of the Peace of Westphalia, 8vo.; on the Theology of the Pagans; Treatise on the Principles of Historical Faith, &c. all written in Latin.—Id.

PFEFFERCORN (John), a converted Jew, who endeavoured to persuade the emperor Maximilian, to order all the Hebrew books to be burnt, except the Bible, because they contained blasphemies and dangerous errors: the execution of which was prevented by Reuchlin. Pfeffercorn, who lived about the year 1520, wrote, 1. Narratio de ratione celebrandi Pascha apud Judæos; 2. De abolendis Judæorum Scriptis, &c.—Moreri.

PRIEFFER (Augustus), a learned orientalist, was born at Lawenbourg, in 1640. He professed the eastern languages at Leipzig, and was superintendent of the churches in Lubec, where he died in 1698. His principal works are: 1. Panoplia Mosæica;

2. Crítica Sacra; 3. De Mafora; 4. De Trihæresi Judæorum; 5. Sciagraphia Systematis Antiquitatum Hebræorum. His philosophical works were published together at Utrecht, in 2 vols.—Moreri.

PIFFER (Lewis), a gallant officer, was born at Lucerne in Switzerland, in 1530. He was in the service of Charles IX. of France, whose life he saved by a skilful manoeuvre at the retreat of Meaux. He also contributed to the victory of Montcousour, in 1569: and became chief magistrate of Lucerne, where he died in 1594.—Nov. Dict. Hist.

PIRONDON, a disciple of Socrates, who purchased him of some pirates. After the death of his master, Pirondon returned to Elis, his native country, where he formed a sect of philosophers called Eleon. Plato affixed his name to a dialogue on the death of Socrates.—Diog. Laërtius.

PIRDRUS, a Latin poet, was a native of Thrace, and appears to have been the freedman of Augustus. Under Tiberius he was unjustly persecuted by Sejanus, to which circumstance he has alluded in his Fables, which possess considerable merit, and are written with great purity of style; though they are evidently borrowed from the popular fables of the Greeks.—Bayle. Biog. Classica.

PIARR (Thomas), an English physician, was a native of Pembrokeshire. He took his doctor's degree in physic, at Oxford, in 1559. He wrote several tracts on diseases and their remedies, and translated a great part of the Æneid into English. He died in 1560.—Wood.

PHALARIS, the tyrant of Agrigentum in Sicily, which city he took B. C. 571. He was a native of Crete, and from his youth displayed a cruel and ambitious temper. He delighted in the invention of new instruments of torture. An ingenious artist having made a brazen bull, which was hollow, and so contrived that when a fire was kindled under the body, the cries of the unhappy victim within resembled the roarings of the animal it represented, Phalaris having commended the work, ordered the artist to be the first to make trial of it. The tyrant was himself afterwards put to death by his subjects in the same way, B. C. 561. The letters between Phalaris and Abaris have been much disputed; particularly between Boyle and Bentley. The best edition is that of Oxford, 1718, 8vo.—Moreri.

PHARAMOND, according to many historians, was the name of the first king of France, who reigned at Treves about A. D. 420. He is, however, supposed by others to have been only the general of an army, or the chief of a military society of Franks. To him is attributed also the celebrated Salique Law, by which females were excluded from the succession to the throne.—Hausalt. Millet.

PHARNACES, son of Mithridates, king of Pontus, revolted with the army against his father, who slew himself in despair B. C. 64. Pharnaces cultivated the friendship of the Romans, and in the war between Cæsar and Pompey he remained neutral: but the former declared war against him and defeated him B. C. 47, on which occasion the victor wrote to one of his friends this laconic letter: Veni, vidi, vici.—Florus. Appian de Bello Mithrid.

PHERECRATES, a Greek comic poet, was the contemporary of Plato and Aristophanes. None of his comedies have reached us, only some fragments which have been preserved by Hertelius and Grotius. There is also in Plutarch a piece of his on the music of the Greeks.—Suidas. Moreri.

PHERECYDES, a philosopher of the isle of Scyros, B. C. 560. He was the disciple of Pittacus, and the first who wrote upon natural things and the essence of the gods. He was the master of Pythagoras, who regarded him as a father. There are different accounts of his death; some say he was devoured by lice, and others that he threw himself from the top of mount Coryciana. It is most probable that he died of extreme age. Diogenes Laërtius ascribes to him the invention of profody. He is not to be confounded with another of this name, who lived 456 B. C. and wrote the History of Athens.—Stanley. Moreri.

PHIDIAS, a sculptor of Athens. He constructed a beautiful statue of Minerva; but being accused of embezzling some of the gold entrusted to him for that work, he was banished. On this he went to Elis, where, by way of revenge, he made a colossal statue of Jupiter Olympius, which infinitely surpassed his Minerva, and was deemed one of the wonders of the world. He died B. C. 432.—Paufanias. Plutarch.

PHILANDER (William), a French divine, was born at Chatillon in 1505. He was secretary to cardinal d'Armagnac, and archdeacon of St. Antoninus. He died at Toulouse in 1565. His works are; 1. A Commentary on Vitruvius, 1552, fol; 2. A Commentary on part of Quintilian.—Moreri.

PHILELPHUS (Francis), professor of eloquence at Padua, was born in 1398. In 1419 he was sent by the republic of Venice to Constantinople, where he married the daughter of Emanuel Chrysoloras. The emperor, John Paleologus, sent him to the emperor Sigismund, to implore succours against the Turks. He died at Florence in 1481. His works were printed together at Basle in 1739, folio. The most known are his Treatises de Morali disciplina; De Exilio; de Joci et Scris; Conviviorum, and poems.—Tiraboschi.

PHILEMON, a Greek comic poet, was the son of Damon, and contemporary with Menander. Plautus imitated some of his pieces. His death is said to have been occasioned by laughing at seeing an ass eat figs, B. C. 274. aged 97.—Vossius de Poet. Græc.

PHILETAS, a Greek grammarian and poet of Coos, and preceptor to Ptolemy Philadelphus. He wrote elegies and epigrams which are lost.—Vossius de Poet. Græc.

PHILIP (St.), one of the twelve apostles of Jesus Christ, was a fisherman of Bethsaida, a city of Galilee, on the Lake of Genesareth, when called by our Saviour. Ecclesiastical historians relate that he was married and had several children, that he preached the Gospel in Phrygia, and died at Hierapolis in that country. He is, however, enrolled among the martyrs by some ancient writers. He is not to be confounded with Philip the deacon mentioned in the Acts, who converted the eunuch of Candace queen of Ethiopia.—New Test. Cave. Baillet.

PHILIP II. king of Macedon, was the son of Amyntas, and succeeded his brother Perdiccas 360 B. C. In his youth he displayed great military talents, which were improved under the tuition of Epaminondas. At the beginning of his reign he had to oppose the Illyrians, Pæonians, and Thracians. The two former he disarmed by presents and promises, and the latter were not able to act against him. He then made war against Athens, and having gained a great victory over the troops of that republic, he restored all the prisoners without a ransom; this generosity produced a peace and alliance. Philip then turned his arms against the Illyrians, whom he defeated. After this he took Crenides, a city belonging to the Thracians, and having made himself master of the gold mines near that place, he employed a number of men in working them, and was the first who had gold coin stamped with his name. His ambition now knew no bounds. He formed the design of subduing all Greece; and he began with taking Olynthus, a city belonging to Athens, and having corrupted the principal inhabitants, he obtained possession of the place. The Athenians were roused against Philip by the eloquence of Demosthenes, but all the efforts of the orator proved ineffectual, when opposed to the arms and the gold of the king of Macedon. After vanquishing Greece Philip resolved to attempt the conquest of Persia, and was for that purpose elected chief of the expedition in a general assembly of the Grecian states; but while he was preparing for the enterprise he was assassinated by Pausanias, one of his guards, B. C. 336, leaving his crown and vast designs to be accomplished by his son Alexander.—Plutarch. Sueton. Univ. Hist.

PHILIP V. king of Macedon, obtained the crown after the death of his cousin Antigonus, 220 B. C. The beginning of his reign was auspicious, owing to the conquests of his general, Aratus, whom Philip out of jealousy caused to be poisoned. He afterwards joined Hannibal against the Romans, but the consul Lævinus marched into Macedon, and compelled Philip to sue for peace. The Roman senate being apprized of a secret treaty between Philip and Hannibal, sent Flaminius against the former, who was entirely defeated, and obliged to yield to dishonourable terms. At the instigation of his son Perseus he put to death his eldest son Demetrius, who was accused of having designs upon the throne. Philip died at Amphipolis in 178 B. C. after reigning 42 years.

PHILIP (Marcus Julius), called the Arab, from his being a native of Bosra in Arabia, was born of an obscure family, and became a common soldier in the Roman army; but by his merit he rose to the rank of captain of the imperial guard. In 244 he assassinated the emperor Gordian the younger, and seized upon the throne. He gained great popularity at Rome by his generosity, and by making a canal for supplying a part of the city with water. He celebrated the secular games with great pomp, and gave free toleration to the Christians. Philip was slain by his soldiers near Verona in 249, after having been defeated by Decius. His son Philip, aged twelve years, was assassinated in the arms of his mother.—Aurelius Victor. Crevier.

PHILIP, a native of Phrygia, and governor of Jerusalem, where he greatly persecuted the Jews. Antiochus Epiphanes who had appointed him to that post, left him regent of his kingdom during the minority of his son; but Philip was opposed by Lysias, and slain in battle.—Josephus.

PHILIP, duke of Suabia, son of Frederick Barbarossa, was elected emperor on the death of his brother Henry VI. in 1198. But another party of the electors chose Otho, duke of Saxony, which occasioned a civil war; the pope excommunicated Philip, but afterwards absolved him, and endeavoured in vain to reconcile the contending princes. Philip was assassinated at Bamberg in 1208.—Univ. Hist.

PHILIP I. king of France, succeeded his father Henry I. in 1060, under the regency of Baldwin V. count of Flanders. Philip at the age of fifteen lost his faithful guardian. The young king shewed at first a warlike spirit; but afterwards gave himself up to licentious pleasures. He divorced his wife Bertha, and married Bertrade, the wife of the count of Anjou, for which he was excommunicated by the council of Poitiers in 1100; but four years afterwards he was absolved by the pope, who also approved of his marriage with Bertrade, which had been performed by the bishop of Beauvais. Philip died in 1108.—Henault. Mézeray.

PHILIP II. surnamed the August, was born in 1165, and succeeded his father Lewis VII. in 1180, at the age of fifteen. The king of England taking advantage of His youth, invaded France; but Philip put himself at the head of his forces, and compelled him to renew the ancient treaties between the two kingdoms. After this he turned his attention to the regulation of abuses, and in improving the city of Paris. He also expelled the Jews from his dominions with circumstances of great injustice and cruelty. In 1190 Philip accompanied Richard I. of England to the Holy Land, where they took Acre; but difference and jealousies arising between the two monarchs, Philip returned to France. Though he had sworn on the gospels not to undertake anything against the interests of Richard in his absence, he invaded Normandy, and took some places, but being repulsed at Rouen, he made a truce for five years; and in the interval married Ingeburga, princess of Denmark, whom he afterwards divorced, and espoused the daughter of the duke of Moravia, for which he was excommunicated by the pope, and not absolved till he had taken back his former wife. Philip gave his assistance to prince Arthur against his uncle John king of England; but John having declared himself a vassal of the holy see, the pope took his part. This giving offence to the English nobility, they made an offer of the throne to Philip, who declined it himself, but sent them his son Louis, who was crowned at London in 1216. On the death of John, however, the English acknowledged his son Henry III. and Louis returned to France. Philip died in 1233.—Ibid.

PHILIP III. surnamed the Hardy, was proclaimed king of France in Africa after the death of St. Louis his father in 1270. After gaining a great victory over the Saracens, and making peace with the king of Tunis, he returned to France, and was crowned at Rheims. Peter of Arragon having occasioned the horrible massacre of the French in Sicily, called the Sicilian Vespers, Philip marched against him, and took Gironne; but died of a fever on his return at Perpignan in 1285.—Ibid.

PHILIP IV. called the Fair, succeeded his father, the preceding monarch, at the age of 17. He became king of Navarre by marrying Jane, daughter and heiress of Henry I. Philip made war against Edward I. king of England, who formed a league with the emperor. In 1302 Philip lost the battle of Courtray, where perished the count of Artois with 20,000 men. But in 1304 he gained that of Mons-en-Puelle in commemoration of which a fine equestrian statue of this monarch was set up in the church of Notre Dame at Paris. This victory was followed by a peace; but Philip soon after was embroiled in an ecclesiastical contest with pope Boniface VIII. who pretended to a right of disposing of benefices, which was resisted by the king. On this the pope issued his bull of excommunication, which Philip caused to be burnt.

The violent acts of Boniface were condemned by the popes Benedict and Clement V. the latter of whom assisted Philip in persecuting and abolishing the order of knights templars in 1311. Philip died in 1314.—Ibid.

PHILIP V. surnamed the Long, was the younger son of the last-mentioned, and succeeded his brother Louis Hutin, by virtue of the Salique law, in 1316. He made war against Flanders, formed an alliance with Scotland, and expelled the Jews from his kingdom. The leprosy prevailed in a great degree in his reign. He died in 1321.—Ibid.

PHILIP DE VALOIS, the first king of France of the collateral branch of Valois, was the son of Charles, count of Valois, brother of Philip the fair. He ascended the throne in 1328, on the death of his cousin Charles le bel. In 1329 Edward III. king of England did homage for the duchy of Guienne, but not long after he assumed the title of king of France, on the pretence of being a grandson of Philip the fair by his mother. This produced a disastrous war, which lasted with a few intervals many years. In 1346 Edward gained the great battle of Crecy, in which the French lost near 30,000 men, among whom was John king of Bohemia, and the flower of the nobility. This was followed by the loss of Calais and other important places. Edward sent a challenge to Philip to decide their pretensions by single combat, which the latter refused. Philip died in 1350, aged 57.—Ibid.

PHILIP I. king of Spain, was the son of the emperor Maximilian I. and by his marriage with the heiress of Ferdinand V. king of Arragon, and Isabella queen of Castille, he obtained the Spanish crown. He died at Bruges in 1506, aged 28.—Mariana.

PHILIP II. was the son of Charles V. In 1554 he became king of Naples and Sicily by the abdication of his father, and the same year he married Mary queen of England. In 1556 his father resigned to him the crown of Spain. He declared war against France, and was present at the battle of St. Quintin, where it is said he made two vows, the one never again to hazard his person in an engagement, and the other to build a monastery under the name of St. Laurence. This last he executed at Escorial near Madrid. In 1559 he made peace with France, and on his return to his own country he caused an auto da fe to be celebrated, by which several unfortunate victims of the inquisition were burnt alive. His bigotry and cruelty were so great that the Low Countries revolted, and those called the United Provinces succeeded in throwing off the Spanish yoke. In 1588 Philip fitted out his famous expedition called the Invincible Armada, for the invasion of England. This fleet was nearly all destroyed by the storm, or the English ships. When Philip heard of the disaster, he said, "I sent my fleet to combat the English, not the elements; God's will be done." At the same time that he attacked England he gave his assistance to the leaguers in France, who called him their protector. He died in 1598, aged 72.—Marians.

PHILIP III. the son of Philip II. and of Anne of Austria, succeeded his father at the age of twenty. His reign was unfortunate and imprudent. Spinola took Ostend after a siege of three years, but with the loss of 80,000 Spaniards. The seven united provinces established their independence under the house of Nassau. Philip issued a decree that all the Moors should quit his kingdom in three days, by which Spain lost above a million of its most useful and industrious inhabitants. This prince was the victim of etiquette. Being at a council, he complained of the smoke arising from a pan of charcoal which was burning in the room. The proper person who had the charge of the fire was not present, and no one would undertake the office of removing it; which point of order cost the monarch his life, March 31, 1621.—Univ. Hist.

PHILIP IV. succeeded his father Philip III. at the age of sixteen. The same year war was renewed with Holland, and the Spaniards under Spinola gained some advantages, but at sea they were unsuccessful. In 1635 Philip, at the instigation of Olivarez, his minister, declared war against France, which proved very disastrous. He lost Artois; the Catalonians revolted, and put themselves under the protection of France; and Portugal taking advantage of the distracted state of Spain, secured its independence, and placed on the throne the house of Braganza. Olivarez the author of these misfortunes, by his negligence and bad conduct, was disgraced; and in 1659 a disadvantageous peace was concluded with France. Philip died in 1665.—Ibid.

PHILIP V. duke of Anjou, the second son of Louis dauphin of France, and of Mary-Anne of Bavaria, assumed the title of king of Spain in 1700, by virtue of the will of Charles II. His claim, however, was contested by the house of Austria in favour of the archduke Charles. This produced the grand alliance in which Austria was supported against France and Spain, by England, Holland, Savoy, Portugal, and Prussia. The beginning of this war was very disastrous to Philip, who lost Arragon, Gibraltar, and the islands of Minorca and Majorca, also Sardinia, and the kingdom of Naples. In this exigency he was about to retire to Spanish America, when the duke de Vendome arrived with succours, and by gaining the battle of Villaviciosa, gave a turn to his affairs. The victories of that great general, and those of marshal Villars in Flanders, confirmed Philip on the throne, and restored peace to Europe by the treaty of Utrecht in 1713. The war was renewed in 1717, and the Spanish fleet was defeated in the Mediterranean by sir George Byng. Peace was restored in 1720, after which Philip became melancholy, and in 1724 abdicated the throne to his son Lewis, and retired to a monastery. Lewis died a few months after of the small-pox, and Philip was obliged to resume the government. His vapours were now banished, and he reigned with spirit and judgment. In 1733 he leagued with France against the emperor, and his son Don Carlos conquered Sicily and Naples, of which he became king. In 1734 the royal palace was burnt, and a prodigious number of fine paintings destroyed. In 1736 peace was concluded, but a new war broke out in 1739. Philip died in 1746, aged 63.—Ibid.

PHILIP the good, duke of Burgundy, was born in 1396. Out of revenge for the death of his father, who was slain in 1419, he leagued with the English against Charles II. of France and his successor. He defeated the dauphin at the battle of Mons in 1421, about which time he made war with success against the countess of Hainault, and compelled her to acknowledge him for her heir. In 1435 he was reconciled to Charles VII. The people of Dinan, in the province of Liege, having committed some outrages, Philip sent against them his son the count of Charolois, who burnt the city to ashes, and put the inhabitants to the sword. This inhuman action being approved of by the father, certainly proves that he had no right to be called the good. He died in 1467.—Moreri.

PHILIP de Dreux, the son of Robert count de Dreux, embraced the ecclesiastical state, and became bishop of Beauvais. But he had a greater turn for warlike affairs than religious exercises. He joined the crusaders, and distinguished himself before Acre in 1191. Philip the august having declared war against the English, the bishop took up arms in his favour, but was taken prisoner, and kept in close confinement. He complained to the pope, who demanded him as his son from Richard II. That monarch, however, sent to the pope the bloody armour in which the bishop was taken, accompanied with these words, "See, holy father, if this be thy son's coat." The pope would not recognize the habiliments as canonical, and the bishop remained a prisoner till 1202. He afterwards fought against the Albigenses, and died at Beauvais in 1217.—Ibid.

PHILIPS (Fabian), an English antiquary, was born at Prestbury in Gloucestershire in 1601. He was a zealous loyalist in the civil wars, and wrote several pamphlets in behalf of the king. As scribe in the court of records he employed himself much in searching for precedents in favour of ex-sending the royal prerogative. He died in 1690.—Gen. Biog. DiA.

PHILIPS (John), an English poet, was born in 1676, at Rampton, in Oxfordshire, and educated at Christ church, Oxford. He wrote, the Splendid Shilling; Blenheim; and a poem entitled Cyder; which possess considerable merit, particularly the last. As he was greatly addicted to smoking, he generally contrived to introduce an encomium upon tobacco into his poems. He died in 1708.—Cibber's Lives of the Poets.

PHILIPS (Ambrose), a dramatic writer and poet, was educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, where he wrote his pastorals, which were once greatly admired, and praised by some good writers. Pope, however, ridiculed them with great severity, at the same time that he exempted Philips's winter piece from his censure. He was also the author of a tragedy of merit entitled, the Distressed Mother; and an abridged Life of archbishop Williams. He died in 1749, aged 78.—Biog. Dram.

PHILISTUS, a Greek writer, was a native of Syracuse, and the favourite of the tyrant Dionysius, who afterwards banished him. In his exile he wrote the History of Sicily, and that of Dionysius, which Cicero has commended. He was recalled by Dionysius the younger, but was defeated by Dion, and put to death B. C. 367.—Vossius Hist. Græc.

PHILLIPS (Catherine), an accomplished lady, was the daughter of Mr. Fowler, a merchant in London, and born in 1681. At the age of sixteen she became the wife of James Phillips, esq. of Cardiganhire. She died of the small-pox in 1664. Her poems under the title of Oriada were printed in one volume folio, 1667, and a second edition in 1678. In 1705 a small volume of her letters was published, with the title of Letters from Oriada to Poliarchus.—Bullard's British Ladies.

PHILLIPS (Thomas), a divine of the Roman church, was born at Ickford, in Buckinghamshire in 1708. He was educated at St. Omer's, after which he entered among the Jesuits; but did not long continue a member of that society. About 1756 he entered into the priesthood; and in that year published a Letter to a Student in Divinity, 8vo. which passed through three editions, and contains some excellent rules and observations. But the work by which this author is most known is the Life of Cardinal Pole, 2 vols. 4to. 1764, and 2 vols. 8vo. 1767. In this performance he endeavoured to vindicate his church at the expence of the reformers. He was ably and successfully answered by several writers. By the interest of the pretender, at Rome he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Tongres. Mr. Phillips died at Liege in 1774. His sister was abbess of the Benedictine nuns at Ghent.—Europ. Mag. Vol. XXX.

PHILO, a learned Jewish writer of Alexandria, was born of an illustrious family. He was one of the deputation sent by the Jews to lay their complaints against the Greeks of Alexandria before the emperor Caligula, A. D. 40. He wrote several works in Greek, the principal of which is entitled, of the Contemplative Life. He was a zealous Platonist; and on that account has been stiled the Jewish Plato. The best edition of his works is that of London, 2 vols. folio, 1742.—Moreri.

PHILO of Byblos, a grammarian in the first century, who translated into Greek the Phœnician history of Sanconiathou, fragments of which remain.—Moreri.

PHILO of Byzantium, an architect, who flourished 300 B. C. He wrote a treatise of machines used in war, which is printed with the Mathematicæ veteres 1693, folio. There is also attributed to him another piece, entitled, De septem Orbis Spectaculis, Rome, 1640.—Felbien.

PHILOLAUS, a pythagorean philosopher of Crotona. He maintained that all things were made by harmony and necessity. He also asserted that the earth was round and had a circular motion. The golden verses of Pythagoras have been attributed to him. He lived B. C. 392.—Diog. Laertius.

PHILOPOMEN, general of the Achæans, was born at Megalopolis in Arcadia. He displayed great bravery in defending his native city against Cleomenes, king of Sparta; and in 208 he gained the famous battle of Melfene over the Ætolians. For this he was made captain-general, and he slew soon after near Mantinea, Mechanidas, tyrant of Lacedæmon, with his own hand. Nabis, the successor of Mechanidas, defeated Philopomen at sea, but he recovered this loss on land, took Sparta, razed its walls, and abolished the laws of Lycurgus. The Messenians having revolted, Philopomen marched against them, but was taken prisoner by falling from his horse. Dinocrates the Messenian general threw him into prison, and caused him to be poisoned, B. C. 183.—Plutarch.

PHILOPONUS (John), a grammarian of Alexandria in the 7th century. He was the chief of the Tritheists, and wrote a Commentary on the Hexameron or Creation, and other works.—Dupin.

PHILOSTORIOUS, an historian of the 5th century, was a native of Cappadocia, and an Arian. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History of his own Time, which is extant, and was published by Valesius at Paris with Eusebius in 1673; but the separate edition of Godefroi 1642, 4to. is the best.—Dupin.

PHILOSTRATUS (Flavius), a famous sophist, was born at Lemnos or Athens. He resided at Rome in the court of the empress Julia, wife of Septimus Severus. He wrote the Life of Apollonius Tyaneus, a pretended philosopher. It is an extravagant romance full of fables. Philostratus also left four books called pictures. His works were printed at Leipzig in Greek and Latin, folio, 1709. His nephew wrote the Lives of the Sophists.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

PHILOXENUS, a dithyrambic poet of Cythera, lived at the court of Dionysius of Syracuse, who banished him to the stone quarries for censuring some of his verses. He died at Ephesus about 380 B. C.—Ælian Var. Hist.

PHILPOT (John), an English divine, was born in Hampshire, and bred at New College, Oxford. He became a zealous reformer, and in the reign of Edward VI. was made archdeacon of Winchester; but in that of Mary he was brought before bishop Gardiner, convicted of heresy, and burnt at the stake in Smithfield in 1555.—Strype's Eccles. Mem. Fox's Acts and Mon.

PHINEAS, the son of Eleazar, and grandson of Aaron, was the third high priest of the Jews. Zambri one of the princes of Israel, having taken a Midianitish woman into his tent, Phineas followed and slew them, B. C. 1455.—Bible.

PUPPIS (Constantine John), lord Mulgrave, an English commander and navigator. Being well versed in mathematics, he was sent on a voyage of discovery towards the North Pole in 1773. Of this voyage, which was attended with considerable difficulty and hardship, he published a well-written account in 4to. His lordship died in 1792.

PHILEGON, surnamed Trallian from the place of his birth, a city of Lydia. He was the freedman of Adrian, and wrote a History of Marvellous Things; also a History of the Olympiads; part of which is extant. He is said to have mentioned the darkness at our Saviour's crucifixion. The best edition of his remains is that of Meursius at Leyden, Greek and Latin, 1612, 4to.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

PHOCAS, emperor of the east. He usurped the throne by murdering the emperor Maurice and his children in 602. He put to death a great number of persons, and having inveigled Narses, a Persian general, by fair promises, to Constantinople, he caused him to be burnt alive. Heraclius, governor of Africa, conspired against this monster, and slew him in 610.—Univ. Hist.

PHOCAS (John), a monk of the 12th century, was a native of the isle of Crete, but others say of Calabria. He had served in the armies of the emperor Emanuel Comnenus, but disgusted with the military life, he joined a religious society on Mount Carmel. He wrote a Description of the Holy Land, Syria and Phœnicia.—Moreri.

PHOCION, a celebrated Athenian, was the disciple of Plato and Xenocrates. He displayed great eloquence, and opposed Demosthenes, when that great orator endeavoured to rouse the Athenians to declare war against Philip. Phocion saw in that measure the ruin of Athens; but when the war actually commenced he manifested the patriotism and talents of a brave general. Philip and Alexander made several attempts to corrupt him, but in vain. Phocion held the government of Athens forty-five times; but notwithstanding his splendid virtues and abilities, he could not escape persecution. He was accused of treachery, and deposed, on which he fled, but being taken was condemned to death, and poisoned B. C. 318. His son Phocus, though he was a man of licentious character, avenged the fate of his father upon his accusers, and erected a statue to his memory.—Plutarch. Corn. Nepos.

PHOCYLIDES, a Greek poet and philosopher, was a native of Miletus, and lived about 540 B. C. There is a poem extant which goes by his name, but it is not accounted genuine.—Vossius de Poet. Græc.

PHORMIO, a peripatetic philosopher, who taught with reputation at Ephesus. Hannibal being at that city, and going to his academy, Phormio had the folly to make a discourse to him on the military art, which only served to render him ridiculous in the eyes of the warrior.—Cicero de Oratore.

PHORMIO, an Athenian general, who succeeded Callias B. C. 432, and gave great proofs of his courage in the Peloponnesian war, and also in defeating the fleets of the Lacedæmonians. He sold his estates to pay his army, and refused the rank of commander in chief.—Thucydides.

PHOTINUS, bishop of Sirmium, and the chief of a sect called Photinians. He maintained that Christ was only a man, for which Photinus was deposed in the council of Sirmium, in 351. He was exiled by Constantius, recalled by Julian, and again banished by Valentinian. He died in 376.—Cave. Dupin.

PHOTIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, was born of a noble family in that city. His talents were great, and advanced him to several high offices in the state; after which he entered into orders; and on the deposition of Ignatius aspired to the patriarchate, which he obtained in an irregular manner in 857. This occasioned a schism, and Photius exercised great severities on those who adhered to Ignatius. Basil, the Macedonian, expelled him in 869. By flattery, however, he gained the favour of Basil, who restored him in 877. But in 886 Leo caused him to be again deprived, and confined in a monastery, where he died in 891. His works are, 1. Bibliotheca, or Commentary on several authors of antiquity; printed at Rouen in 1653, folio, with notes; 2. Nomocanon, or a collection of the canons of the church, printed at Oxford in 1672, folio; 3. a Collection of Letters, 1651, folio.—Dupin. Flaury. Eccl. Hist.

PHREAS (John), a native of London, and fellow of Brasenose college, Oxford. He professed physic and the belles lettres at Padua; and pope Paul, to whom he dedicated his Latin versions of Xenophon and Diodorus Siculus, gave him the bishopric of Bath. He died in 1465.—Pitt. Bayle.

PHRAATES III. king of Parthia, succeeded Pacorus. He married his daughter to Tigranes, son of the king of Armenia, and attempted to place his son-in-law on that throne, but without success. He was murdered by his two sons, Orodes and Mithridates, B. C. 36.—Univ. Hist.

PHRAATES IV. was placed on the throne by his father Orodes, whom he soon after murdered, as he did his brothers. He was deposed by his subjects, who placed Tigranes on the throne, but Phraates, with the Scythians, recovered his throne B. C. 23. He was poisoned by his son, who was expelled by the Parthians for the atrocious act.—Ibid.

PHRANZA (George), a Greek historian, was master of the wardrobe to the emperors of Constantinople, and lived at the time when that city was taken by the Turks. He then went to Corfu, where he wrote a Chronicle of his own time, which ends with the year 1461.—Kosslus de Hist. Græc.

PHYRNE, a famous courtesan of Greece about 328 B. C. She was the mistress of Praxiteles, who made a statue of her. She acquired immense riches, and offered to rebuild Thebes, provided this inscription should be placed on the walls, "Alexander destroyed this city, and the harlot Phryne restored it." But her offer was rejected.—Quintilian.

PHYRNICUS, a Greek orator, was a native of Bithynia, and flourished under Commodus. There remain of his works, 1. A Treatise on the Attic Dialect, printed in Greek and Latin several times, in 4to.; 2. The Sophistical Apparatus, which is a collection of Greek phrases. There were two others of this name, the one a tragic and the other a comic poet.—Vossius de Script. Græc.

PHYRNIS, a musician of Mitylene, who gained the prize at the musical meeting at Athens, 438 B. C. He added two strings to the lyre, which before his time had only seven.—Moreri.

PIA (Philip-Nicholas), an eminent chemist, was born at Paris in 1721. He was principal apothecary to the hospital at Strasburgh, and elected sheriff of Paris in 1770. He distinguished himself by an establishment for the recovery of drowned persons, and he invented instruments proper to be used on such subjects. The revolution destroyed the useful work, and reduced the author to poverty. He died in 1799. He wrote several volumes on his favourite and humane project.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PIAZZA (Jerom Bartholomew), a native of Alexandria in Italy, who had been a judge in the court of inquisition, but on embracing the protestant religion quitted Italy and settled in England. He taught Italian and French at Cambridge, where he died about 1745. He wrote a curious account of the inquisition.—Gen. Blog. Dict.

PIAZETTA (John Baptist), a celebrated painter of Venice, was born in 1682, and died in 1754. His figures are well designed and executed, and have an air much in the style of Michael Angelo Buonarroti. Piazzetta died so poor that his friends were obliged to be at the expence of burying him.—D'Argenville.

PICARD (John), a French priest, and prior of Rillé in Anjou, was a native of La Fleche. He had a great knowledge of the mathematics, particularly astronomy. He became a member of the academy of sciences in 1666; and five years after was sent by the king to Uranienburg, which was built by Tycho Brahe to make celestial observations. Picard brought with him from Denmark many manuscripts of Tycho's: and was the first who observed the mercurial phosphorus in the barometer. He was engaged in measuring a degree of the meridian, and in determining the meridian of France. Picard died in 1683. He wrote a Treatise on Levelling; On Dioptrics; On Measures; on the Measurement of the Earth; Journey to Uranienburg, or Astronomical Observations made in Denmark, &c. He was the first who applied a telescope to a quadrant.—Moreri. Hist.

PICARD (Michael), a learned German, was born at Nuremberg in 1574. He became professor of philosophy and poetry at Altorf, where he died in 1620. He wrote Commentaries on the Politics, and other works of Aristotle; Disputations; Harangues; Critical Essays; and a Latin Translation of Oppian. Many years after his death was published his treatise, entitled, Liber Singularis periculorum criticorum.

PICART (Bernard), an eminent engraver, was born at Paris in 1673. He studied engraving under his father, and architecture under Sebastian le Clerc. On account of his religion he went to Amsterdam, where he was chiefly employed by the booksellers. He died in 1733. A fine collection of his engravings was published at Amsterdam in folio, 1734; but his greatest performance is an illustration of religious ceremonies of all nations in the world. His plates also for a work, entitled, the Temple of the Muses, are very fine. Stephen Picart, the father, died at Amsterdam in 1721, aged 90.—Moreri.

PICCINI (Nicholas), a celebrated musician, was born at Bari in the kingdom of Naples. Leo and Durante were his first masters: the latter distinguished him above all his scholars, and called him his son. From Italy he went to Paris, where the connoisseurs were divided in opinion between him and Gluck. In the revolution Piccini returned to Naples, where he was described as being a Jacobin, on which he went again to France, and died at Passy of Cadragrin in 1800, aged 72. His principal operas are, Roland; Atys; Iphigenia in Tauris; and Dido.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

PICCOLOMINI (Alexander), archbishop of Patras, and co-adjutor of Sienna, where he was born in 1508. He wrote several dramatic pieces of reputation. His other works are, a Treatise on the Sphere; Theory of the Planets; Moral Institutes, &c. He was the first who wrote on philosophical subjects in Italian. There is also attributed to him a work, entitled, Dialogo della bella Creanza della Donne, 1574, 8vo. He died in 1578.—Tiraboschi.

PICCOLOMINI (Francis), of the same family as the preceding, was professor of philosophy many years at several universities in Italy, and died at Sienna in 1604, aged 84. His works are; 1. Commentaries on Aristotle; 2. Univerſa Philoſophia de Modis.—Ibid.

PICCOLOMINI (James), a cardinal, whose real name was Ammanati, but which he changed out of respect to pope Pius II. his patron. He was born at Lucca in 1422, and became ſucceſſively biſhop of Maſſa and Fieſcati, and in 1461, cardinal. He died in 1479. Pope Sixtus IV. ſeized upon his property after his death, and applied it to the building of a hoſpital. He wrote a Hiſtory of his Own Times, and Letters which have been printed.—Moreri.

PICHEGRU (Charles), a French general, was born in 1761, at Arbois in Franche-comte. His parentage was mean, but he received a good education under the monks in his native town; after which he entered into the army, and ſoon roſe to be ſerjeant. The revolution elevated him to the rank of general, and in 1793 he gained a victory over the combined armies at Hagenau; in conſequence of which he ſucceeded to the command of the army of the north. Shortly after he relieved Laudau, and by his vigorous movements compelled prince Cobourg to abandon the Netherlands. He next marched into Holland, of which he made a complete conqueſt. In 1797 he was elected a member of the legiſlative body, but his oppoſition to the executive directory, and his ſpeeches in favour of the emigrants and prieſts, occaſioned an accuſation to be framed againſt him of his deſign to reſtore royalty. He was ordered without trial to be transported to Cayenne, from whence he eſcaped to England, where he remained till the ſpring of 1804, when he went to Paris, where he was apprehended and ſent to the Temple. April 6, in the morning, he was found ſtrangled in his bed by means of a black ſilk handkerchief twiſted tight round his neck and faſtened with a ſhort ſtick. The body was examined and expoſed, and a laboured account published, to make it appear that he had ſuicided himſelf; but all the circumſtances warrant a different concluſion, and rather prove that he was aſſaſſinated.—Anecd. of French Republic. Gen. Mag.

PICQOET (Francis), a celebrated miſſionary, was born at Lyons in 1626. He was nominated conſul at Aleppo in Syria, in 1652. He rendered great ſervices there to the chriſtians of all nations, and having embraced the eccleſiaſtical ſtate was appointed by pope Alexander VIII. vicar apoſtolic of Bagdad, and afterwards a biſhop in Macedonia. The king of France nominated him ambaffador to the court of Perſia, where he died in 1685. He furniſhed ſeveral pieces to Nicole for his great work on the Perpetuity of the Faith.—Moreri.

PICRET (Benedict), profeſſor of divinity at Geneva, where he was born in 1655. He was greatly ſolicited to accept the theological chair at Leyden, which he declined, and died in his native city in 1724. He wrote Chriſtian Theology, in Latin, 3 vols. 4to.; Chriſtian Morality, 8 vols. 12mo.; Hiſtory of the 11th and 12th Centuries, 2 vols. 4to.; Treatiſe againſt Religious Indifference, and other works.—Ibid.

PIDON (Francis), lord of St. Oton, was born in Touraine in 1640. He was gentleman in ordinary to Louis XIV. whoſe memoirs he wrote. He was ſent ambaffador to Genoa, Madrid, and Morocco. Of the latter country he publiſhed a curious account in 1694, 12mo. He died in 1720.—Ibid.

PIERCE (Edward), an hiſtorical and landſcape painter in the reign of Charles I. He had conſiderable ſkill alſo in architectural deſigns, but the fire of London in 1666 deſtroyed moſt of his works. He died in London about 1715.—Walpole. Vertue.

PIERCE (James), a learned preſbyterian divine, was born at Exeter, where he had a conſiderable congregation till 1725, when on account of his preaching arianiſm, a violent conteſt aroſe, and a number of pamphlets were publiſhed; one of which, entitled the Western Inquiſition, was written by our author, who was diſmiſſed from his meeting, on which he and Mr. Hallet opened a new one. Mr. Pierce publiſhed a Vindication of the Proteſtant Diſſenters, both in Latin and Engliſh, 8vo.; a Commentary on St. Paul's Epiſtles, 4to.; and ſeveral Sermons. He died about 1730.

PIERINO, a Tuſcan painter, was born about 1500, of poor parents. He was brought up by a painter called Vaga, whoſe name he aſſumed. Raphael employed him in ſeveral great works; and he ornamented the palace of the prince of Doria at Genoa. He died in 1547.—Fabien. De Pili.

PIERQUIN (John), a French eccleſiaſtic, was born at Charleville, and ſtudied at Rheims. He held the living of Chatel in the diocèſe of Rheims forty years, and died in 1742, aged 70. His works are on the Colour of Negroes; on the Sabbath of Sorcerers; on Magical Transformations; on Amphibious Men; Dissertation on the Conception of Jesus Christ; Life of St. Juvinius; on the Conjunction of the Dead, and other curious subjects.—Nouv. Diss. Hist.

PIERSON (Christopher), a painter, was born at the Hague in 1631. He painted history and portraits, but excelled chiefly in representations of hunting. He died in 1714.—Pilkington.

PIETRO DI PETRI, an historical painter, was a native of Rome, and died in 1716, aged 51. He was the disciple of Carlo Maratti, whose manner he imitated.—Ibid.

PIETRO DELLA FRANCISCA, a painter, was a native of Florence, and died in 1443. He was employed by pope Nicholas V. in painting the Vatican; and wrote some books on arithmetic and geometry.—Ibid.

PIGALLE (John Baptiste), a sculptor, was born at Paris in 1714. By the generosity of Conflou the elder, he was enabled to visit Italy, where he studied the works of the greatest masters. On his return to France he executed several beautiful designs, as a Venus, which Louis XV. presented to the king of Prussia, a statue of Mercury, and another of Voltaire, and a fine one in bronze of Louis XV. who conferred on him the order of St. Michael. He was chancellor of the academy of painting at Paris, and died there in 1785.—Nouv. Diss. Hist.

PIGNIUS (Albert), a Roman catholic divine, was born at Kempen in Overysse, in 1490, and studied at Cologne and Louvaine. He died at Utrecht, where he was provost of the church of St. John, in 1542. He wrote several works against Luther, Melancthon, and other reformers. His principal performance is entitled, Assertio Hierarchiæ Ecclesiasticæ, folio.—Moreri.

PIONTUS (Stephen Vinand), nephew of the preceding, was born at Kempen in 1620. He settled at Rome, and became librarian to cardinal de Granville. He died in 1604. His works are; 1. Annals of Rome, in Latin, 3 vols. folio.; 2. Hercules Prodicus, fol. This is an account of the author's travels in Italy.—Ibid.

PIONONI (Simon), an historical painter, was born at Florence in 1612. His subjects are chiefly religious, and his pieces are scarce and valuable.—Pilkington.

PIGNORIUS (Laurence), a learned Italian, was born at Padua in 1571, and died of the plague in 1631. He was canon of Treviso, and wrote, 1. De Servis et eorum apud Veteres ministeriis; 2. Characteres Egyptii; 3. Origini di Padova.—Tirabeschi.

PILATE (Pontius), a Roman, who became governor of Judea A.D. 26. He commanded in that country ten years under Tiberius. The Jews brought Jesus Christ before Pilate, who perceiving that malice and envy occasioned their charges, would have scourged the prisoner and dismissed him. But being threatened with the wrath of Cæsar, Pilate delivered Jesus, whom he had pronounced innocent, to be crucified. This governor was guilty of great oppression and cruelties, for which he was recalled by Tiberius and banished to Gaul, where he slew himself A.D. 57. There is a letter which passes under his name, giving an account of the miracles and resurrection of Christ to Tiberius, but it is generally deemed a forgery.—Cove.

PILATRE DU ROSIER (Francis), was born at Metz in 1736. After serving his apprenticeship to an apothecary he visited Paris, where he applied chiefly to the study of chemistry. The discovery of Montgolfier opened a vast field for the genius of Pilatre. He was one of the first aerial navigators; and after several fortunate ascensions he undertook, with another person named Romain, to make a voyage to England. They ascended at Boulogne, June 15, 1785, but at the height of 1500 feet the balloon took fire, and the aeronauts were dashed to pieces in the fall.—Nouv. Diss. Hist.

PILES (Roger de), a painter, was born at Clameci in 1635. He was entered a student of the Sorbonne; and in 1662 became tutor to the son of the president Amelot, with whom he made a tour to Rome, where De Piles had ample opportunities for gratifying the natural taste which he possessed for the fine arts. The younger Amelot being appointed ambassador to Venice, De Piles accompanied him as secretary. He afterwards attended him in the same capacity to Lisbon and Switzerland. In 1592 he was sent by the minister to the Hague as a picture-dealer, but in fact to negotiate with those who were friends to France. The object of his mission being discovered, he was sent to prison, where he wrote his Lives of the Painters. On his return to France he obtained a pension. He died in 1709. He was a member of the academy of painting. De Piles was an enthusiastic admirer of Rubens, whom he imitated with success. Besides the above work he wrote an Abridgment of Anatomy, adapted to painting and sculpture; a Course of Painting, and some other pieces of merit on that subject.—D'Argenville. Moreri.

PILKINGTON (Lætitia), a female author, was the daughter of Dr. Van Lewen, a physician of Dublin, where she was born in 1712. She married Mr. Pilkington, an Irish clergyman of literary talents; but this marriage proved unhappy, owing to the levity of the wife and the jealousy of the husband. They separated. Mrs. Pilkington came to London, where she supported herself by her pen, and upon charity. She was intimate with Swift, of whom she relates several curious anecdotes. Her poetical talents were respectable, and her letters lively and sensible. She died at Dublin in 1750.—Memoirs by herself.

PILPAY, an Indian bramin, gymnosophist and philosopher, was, it is believed, a governor of part of Hindostan, and counsellor to an Indian king, whom he instructed by means of fables, which have been translated into numerous languages. The Shipwreck, or Floating Islands, is another work attributed to Pihay, who lived long before the christian era.—Life by Galland.

PINEUS, or PINEAU (Severin du), was born at Chartres, and died at Paris in 1619. He was principal of the king's surgeons, and excelled in operations for the stone, on which he wrote a Treatise, and another on the signs of virginity.—Moreri.

PINAS (John), a painter, was born at Haerlem, about 1596. He studied in Italy, and his style of colouring was imitated by Rembrandt. His brother James was also an eminent artist.—Houbraken.

PINDAR, the prince of lyric poets, was born at Thebes in Boeotia about 500 B. C. In his youth he bore away the poetical prize from Myrtis; but was less successful in his contest with Corinna, who defeated him five times. It is said, however, by some authors, that she owed her victory less to her poetry than to her charms. At the Olympic games, where women were excluded, Pindar conquered all his rivals, and received the greatest honours. Part of the presents allotted to Apollo were ordered to be given to him, and a statue was erected to his honour at Thebes. He died at the public theatre about 440 B. C. When the Spartans took Thebes they spared the house of Pindar, as also did Alexander the Great. The best editions of this poet are those of Heyne, 4to. Gottingen, 1773; and Glasgow, 12mo. 1774.—Biog. Classica.

PINEAU (Gabriel du), a French lawyer, was born at Angers in 1573. He was consulted in all the great affairs of his time, and Mary de Medicis made him master of requests in her palace. Louis XIII. conferred on him the post of major and captain-general of Angers, where his conduct gained him the appellation of father of the people. He died in 1644. His works are, Notes on the Canon Law; Commentaries, Observations, and Consultations, on Important Questions, 2 vols. folio.—Moreri.

PINEDA (John), a learned Jesuit, was born at Seville in 1572. He taught philosophy and theology in several colleges; and wrote Commentaries on Job and Ecclesiastes; also a curious work entitled, De rebus Salomonis, folio; a Universal History of the Church, in Spanish, 4 vols. folio; and a History of Ferdinand III. in the same language. He died in 1637.—Moreri.

PINELLI (John Vincent), a learned Italian, was born at Naples of a noble Genoese family. After receiving an excellent education he fixed his residence at Padua, where he formed a magnificent library, uncommonly stored with rare books and valuable manuscripts. The most learned men in Europe were among his correspondents, and his literary treasures were always open for their use. He died in 1601. A descendant of his, Mapheus PINELLI, was a printer at Venice, where he died in 1785. He formed a very valuable library, which was purchased by a London bookfeller, and sold by auction in 1790.—Life of Pinelli by Gualdo. Nov. Dict. Hist.

PINGRE (Alexander Guy), an eminent astronomer, was born at Paris in 1711. He studied the sciences with intense application, and became librarian of St. Genevieve at Paris. In 1760 he was sent to the South Sea to observe the famous transit of Venus over the sun's disk. He was afterwards employed to prove the time-pieces of Le Roy, and for his great services was admitted a member of the French academy, and of the institute. He died in 1796. His works are, 1. State of the heavens from 1754 to 1757; 2. Memoirs of Discoveries made in the South Seas, 4to.; 3. Cometographia, or an historical and Theoretical Treatise on Comets, 2 vols. 4to.; 4. Translation of Manilius's Astronomics, 8vo.; 5. History of Astronomy in the 17th century.—Nov. Dict. Hist.

PINSON (Richard), printer to Henry VII. and VIII. was a native of Normandy, and became servant to William Caxton. He printed Magna Charta, and several books which are now scarce and valuable. He died about 1590.—Amer's Hist. Printing-Granger.

PINTOR (Peter), a Spanish physician, was a native of Valencia in Spain, and physician to pope Alexander VI. He died at Rome in 1508, aged 83. Two works by him are extremely scarce, 1. Aggregator Sententiarum doctorum de curatione pestilentiae, 1499, folio; 2. De morbo febre et occulto, his temporibus affligenti, 1500, 4to. In this last he makes the venereal disease to be known before 1496.—Moreri.

PINTURICCIO (Bernardin), a celebrated painter, was born at Perugia in 1454. He principally painted history, but excelled in portraits. He died in 1513.—Filk.

PIPER (Francis), a painter, was born in Kent. Being of a facetious disposition, he delighted in drawing ugly faces; so that if a man were not handsome enough to desire to see his picture, he sat in danger in his company. As he was in affluent circumstances, he took nothing for his pieces. Piper died in London in 1740, by a surgeon pricking an artery in bleeding him.—Walpole.

PIRANESI (John Baptist), an architect and engraver of Venice. He was remarkable for a bold and free style of etching; which he generally drew upon the plate at once. He died in 1778. The collection of his engravings consists of 15 vols. folio. His daughter Laura Piranesi who died in 1785, engraved a set of views in the manner of her father with great success. She had also two brothers who were good engravers.—Nov. Dict. Hist.

PIROMALLI (Paul), a Dominican of Calabria, who distinguished himself as a missionary in the East, and as the papal nuncio in Poland, where he reconciled a number of Armenians to his church. On his return by sea to Italy he was taken by the corsairs, and carried to Tunis. Being ransomed he went to Rome, where he was employed in revising the Armenian version of the Bible. He was afterwards sent to the East, with the title of bishop of Naffivan. After spending nine years he returned to Italy, and died there in 1667. He compiled two dictionaries, the one Latin and Persian, the other Armenian and Latin; also an Armenian Grammar and Directory.—Moreri.

PIRON (Alexis), a dramatic poet, was born at Dijon in 1689. He was the author of an excellent comedy called "Metromanie," and died in 1773. His works, consisting of plays, poems, tales, epigrams, &c. have been collected in 7 vols. 8vo. Piron was a man of infinite wit and humour.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PISAN (Thomas), an astrologer of Bologna, who was invited to Venice by Dr. Forli, counsellor of the republic, whose daughter he married. At the invitation of Charles V. of France he went to his court. He died there about 1380; and on the day, as it said, which he had predicted.—Moreri.

PISAN (Christina de), daughter of the above, was born at Venice about 1363. She accompanied her father to France, where he married, but became a widow at the age of 25. She wrote the History of Troy in verse; Treasure of the City of Ladies; a Collection of Poems; the History of Charles V. king of France, by whom she was pensioned. She died about 1420.—Moreri.

PISCATOR (John Fischer, or), a German divine, who professed theology at Strasburg, but on embracing Calvinism, he was obliged to retire to Herborn. He died in 1546. His works are, 1. Commentaries on the Old and New Testament, much esteemed; 2. Amica Collatio de Religione cum C. Vorstio, 4to.—Melch. Adam. Vit. Germ. Theol.

PISISTRATUS, an Athenian general, was a descendant of Codrus, and distinguished himself early in life by his courage, particularly at the taking of Salamis; but after serving his country with glory he endeavoured to enslave it. For this purpose he assumed the convenient mask of patriotism; but Solon was not to be deceived, and exposed his ambitious views. Pisistratus to effect his object had recourse to an extraordinary device. Having inflicted several wounds on himself, he appeared before the people, and pretended that an attempt had been made to assassinate him. The credulous Athenians believed the tale, and assigned him a guard, which he increased, and by that means made himself master of the citadel. The citizens out of fear acknow-leged him as their sovereign, but Megacles and Lycurgus united their forces and expelled Pisistratus from Athens. Shortly after Megacles offered to assist Pisistratus on condition that he would marry his daughter, to which the tyrant consented; and in order to secure the affections of the credulous Athenians, he caused a woman dressed as Minerva to ride through the city in a car, proclaiming the praises of Pisistratus. The people thinking that the goddess had actually descended from heaven, joyfully received the tyrant, who married the daughter of Megacles, but afterwards hated her so ill, that her father gathered a force, and compelled him again to quit the city. Some years after he made himself master of Marathon, and having taken Athens by surprise, put to death all the friends of Megacles. He built an academy which he furnished with a valuable library; and died in possession of the sovereign power, B. C. 528.—Plutarch. Theophrastus. Justin.

PISO, an eminent Roman family, which produced some great men, as, 1. LUCIUS CALPURNIUS PISO, surnamed Frugi on account of his frugality. He was consul B. C. 149, and finished the war in Sicily. He composed annals and orations which are lost. 2. CAIUS PISO, consul 67 B. C. was the author of a law to restrain the factions which usually attended the election of the chief magistrates. 3. CNERIUS PISO, was consul under Augustus, and governor of Syria under Tiberius, in which situation he behaved with great cruelty. He was charged with poisoning Germanicus, on which account he destroyed himself A. D. 20. 4. LUCIUS PISO, a Roman senator who attended the emperor Valerian into Persia in 258. On the death of that emperor he assumed the imperial title, but was defeated by Valens, who put him to death in 261.—Tacitus. Suetonius.

PISTORIUS (John), was born at Nidda in 1546. He applied first to the study of medicine, afterwards to the law, and lastly to divinity. From being a zealous protestant he turned catholic, and became counsellor to the emperor, and provost of the cathedral of Breslaw. He died in 1608. His works are, 1. Artis Cabalisticæ Scriptores, which is a curious collection; 2. Scriptores rerum Polonicarum; 3. Scriptores de rebus Germanicis, 3 vols. folio.—Moreri.

PITAU (Nicholas), an engraver of Antwerp, who displayed great talents by his engraving of the holy family after Raphael. He also executed some fine portraits, particularly one of St. Francis de Sales. He died in 1671, aged 38.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PITCAIRNE (Archibald), an eminent physician, was born at Edinburgh in 1652. He studied divinity and afterwards law at the university of his native place; but quitted both those professions for the study of mathematics and medicine. After publishing a thesis, in which he endeavoured to prove that the doctrine of the circulation of the blood as discovered by Dr. Harvey, was known to Hippocrates, he accepted an invitation from the curators of the university of Leyden to be professor of physic there in 1692. He did not continue at Leyden above a year, but returned to Edinburgh and married. In 1701 he published Dissertationes Medicæ, 1 vol. 4to of which he printed a more correct edition in 1713. He also wrote some Latin poems of the satirical kind, chiefly levelled at the principal authors of the revolution. He died in 1713. His lectures delivered at Leyden were printed after his death.—Biog. Brit.

PITHOU (Peter), a learned Frenchman, was born at Troyes in 1539. He was bred a protestant, and narrowly escaped with his life in the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Afterwards he turned Roman catholic, and became attorney-general in the chamber of justice of Guicenne. He defended the rights of the kings and church of France against the court of Rome with great ability, and died in 1596. His works are, 1. Treatise on the Liberties of the Gallican Church, 4 vols. folio; 2. Commentaries on the Customs of Troyes, 4to.; 3. Notes on various Authors. To Pithou we are indebted for drawing Phædrus, the Novella of Justinian, and other antient remains, from obscurity.—Life by Grosley.

PITHOU (Francis), brother of the preceding, was born at Troyes in 1544. He became attorney-general in the chamber of justice established under Henry IV. He died in 1621. It was this Pithou who discovered the manuscript of the fables of Phædrus, which he published in conjunction with his brother. His own works are, 1. Body of the Canon Law, 2 vols. folio; 2. The Laws of the Romans compared with those of Moses; 3. Observationes ad Codicem, &c.—Moreri.

PITISCU (Samuel), a learned antiquary, was born at Zutphen in 1637. He became rector of the college at his native place, and afterwards of that of St. Jerome at Utrecht, where he died in 1717. His works are, 1. Lexicon Antiquitatum Romanarum, 3 vols. folio; 2. editions of several antient authors with notes. He is not to be mistaken for Bartholomæus Pitiscus, author of a book entitled Thesaurus Mathematicus, folio, 1613, in which year the author died. He also wrote a Treatise on Trigonometry.—Moreri.

PITOT (Henry), a French mathematician, was born at Aramon in Languedoc in 1695. He learnt the mathematics without a master, and in 1724 was admitted a member of the academy of sciences. His work on the theory of manœuvring of ships was translated into English, in one volume octavo, and obtained him the honour of being elected a member of the royal society. He was appointed chief engineer of Languedoc and inspector-general of the canal. The city of Montpellier being in want of water, Pitot constructed an aqueduct, which supplies that place fully from a distance of three leagues. He died in 1771. He wrote several papers in the memoirs of the academy.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

PITS, or PITSEUS (John), an English biographer, was born at Alton in Hampshire, in 1580, and educated at Wykeham's school near Winchester, after which he went to Rheims, where he taught rhetoric and Greek. The civil wars breaking out in France, he retired into Germany, and afterwards to Lorraine, where he obtained a canonry in the church of Verdun. The duchess of Cleves appointed him her confessor; and on her death he became dean of Verdun, where he died in 1616. His work De illustribus Angliæ Scriptoribus, was printed after his death in 1 vol. folio. It contains the lives of English roman catholic writers. He was also the author of some religious pieces.—Biog. Brit.

PITT (Christopher), an English poet and divine, was born at Blandford in Dorsetshire in 1699. He was a member of New college, Oxford, where he took the degree of M. A. in 1724. On entering into orders he obtained the living of Pimper, in his native county, where he died in 1748. Mr. Pitt is known with advantage in the literary world by an excellent translation of the Æneid. He also translated Vida's Art of Poetry, and wrote some ingenious poems in 1 vol. 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Diss. Nicols's Poets.

PITT (William), a celebrated statesman, was the son of Robert Pitt, Esq. of Boconnock in Cornwall, where he was born in 1708. He was educated at Eton, from whence he removed to Trinity college, Oxford. He was for some time a cornet of dragoons, but in 1735 he quitted the army, on being chosen into parliament for the borough of Old Sarum. His pre-eminent talents as an orator were soon displayed in opposition to sir Robert Walpole, and had so great an effect that the old duchess of Marlborough, who had a deadly hatred to that minister, bequeathed to Mr. Pitt by her will a legacy of 10,000l. On the change of administration he was made joint vice treasurer of Ireland, and paymaster-general of the army, which places he resigned in 1755; but the year following he was appointed secretary of state for the fourth department. In a few months afterwards he was again out of office; but an efficient administration being wanted in 1757 he returned to his situation as secretary of state. The war in which the nation was then engaged assumed a new aspect; activity prevailed in every department of the state; the English forces conquered by land and sea; the most brilliant achievements were attained on the Continent, and in different parts of the world. The power of France was humiliated, and England added to her colonial possessions several valuable places in the East Indies and America. Such was the state of affairs on the death of George II. soon after which a change taking place by the coming of lord Bute into power, Mr. Pitt resigned. The peace of 1763 followed; but it was not popular; and a new administration was formed in 1766 of which Mr. Pitt had a share as lord privy seal, and at this time he was created earl of Chatham. This ministry, however, being ill-assorted, was dissolved in 1768. From the beginning of the differences between England and the American colonies his lordship was a vigorous and eloquent, but ineffectual opposer of coercive measures; and his popularity, which had for some years been on the wane, revived with splendour. As he was speaking with his accustomed energy on the subject of the American independence in the house of lords April 8, 1778, he was overpowered, and fell down in a convulsive fit. He died on the 11th of the following month, and his body, after lying in state, was solemnly interred in Westminster-abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory at the national expence, on which is the following inscription:

Erected by the King and Parliament

The Virtues and Ability

WILLIAM PITT, Earl of Chatham;

During whose Administration

Divine Providence

Exalted Great Britain

To an height of Prosperity and Glory

Unknown to any former age.

His lordship left a widow, who was created a baroness in her own right, with a pension of 3000*l.* a year. She died in 1803 at Burton Pynsent, in Somersetshire, an estate which had been left to lord Chatham by sir Thomas Pynsent, from a veneration of his character. By his lady, the daughter of Richard Grenville, esq. of Wotton in Buckinghamshire, lord Chatham had five children; John the present earl, William the inheritor of his father's great talents, Charles who died young, Hester who married earl Stanhope and since dead, Harriet who married lord Eliot and is also dead. In 1804 lord Grenville published a small volume of Letters written by earl Chatham, to his relation, Thomas Pitt, the first lord Camelford, when a student at the university.—Annual Register. Life of Lord Chatham, 3 vols. 8vo.

PITTACUS, one of the seven sages of Greece, was born at Mitylene in Lesbos, B. C. 650. He was elected sovereign of Mitylene for having defeated the Athenians. Pittacus governed as a philosopher, and formed a code of laws in verse, that they might be the easier remembered. After this he resigned his dignity, and when a grant of land was offered him, he refused it, saying, "It is more pleasing to convince my country of my disinterestedness, than to possess great riches." He died B. C. 579.—Diog. Laert.

Pius I. pope and saint, succeeded Hyginus in 142. He condemned the heresy of Valentinian, and was martyred in 157.—Platina. Bower.

Pius II. (Æneas Sylvius Piccolomini), was born in 1405 at Corsini in Sienna. In 1431 he became secretary to cardinal Capranica at the council of Basil, and acted in the same capacity to cardinal Alberghotti, who sent him to Scotland to negotiate a peace between England and that country. He afterwards displayed great zeal and talents at the council of Basil, which he defended against the pope. The emperor Frederic III. who awarded him the poetic crown, employed him in several embassies; and pope Nicolas V. made him bishop of Trieste, which he quitted for the archbishopric of Sienna. In 1456 he obtained a cardinalship, and two years after was elected pope. He began his pontificate by annulling all that he had maintained at the council of Basil; issuing a bull, in which he declared void all appeals from the papal decree to a general council. Pius was preparing a fleet against the Turks when he died at Ancona in 1464. His principal works are. Memoir of the Council of Basil; History of the Bohemians; two books on Cosmography; Treatise on Education; Poem on the Crucifixion; Letters; Historia rerum ubicunque gestarum; Euryalus and Lucretia, a romance; Memoir of his own Life. They were collected and published at Helmstadt in 1700, folio. His nephew succeeded Alexander VI. as pope in 1503, but died a few weeks after his election. He assumed the name of Pius III.—Moreri. Dupin.

Pius IV. (cardinal de Medicis), was born at Milan in 1499, and rose by his merit to several high employments. In 1549 he obtained the cardinalship, and on the death of Paul IV. in 1559 was elected pope. He confirmed the decrees of the council of Trent, when that assembly closed in 1564. The year following a conspiracy was formed against his life by Benedict Accolti and others, who were executed. The pope died soon after. He was of a different family from that of Florence.—Ibid.

Pius V. was born at Bosco, in the diocese of Tortona, in 1504. He was a dominican, and made by Paul IV. bishop of Sutrin, cardinal and inquisitor-general in the Milanese, where he displayed great bigotry and cruelty. After the death of Pius IV. he was elected pope in 1566. He issued the celebrated bull called In Cuna Domini, in which the jurisdiction of the Roman church was carried to an extravagant pitch. Pius made war against the Turks, which produced the famous battle of Lepanto, where in the latter were defeated. The pope died in 1579. His letters were printed in 1640, 4to.—Ibid.

PIUS VI. (John Angelo Braschi), was born at Cesena, in the papal territories, in 1717. Benedict XIV. made him treasurer of the apostolic chamber; and Ganganelli conferred on him the cardinalate. He succeeded that pontiff in 1775. Soon after his election he made a reform in the public treasury; and completed the magnificent museum in the Vatican, which he filled with monumental vases, medals, and other ancient remains found in the ecclesiastical states. But the greatest act of his pontificate was the draining of the Pontine marshes; a project which had baffled several of the Roman emperors, and many of the popes. These marshes occupied the whole of the valley extending from the Apennines to the sea, commencing at the port of Astura, covering the coast of Terracina, and reaching to the kingdom of Naples. To render this vast space useful, and to purge away the pestilential vapours arising from it, was considered as rather to be desired than hoped for, when the perseverance of Pius VI. carried it into effect. He employed the best engineers, and went every year to inspect the progress of the work. He caused immense canals to be dug to receive the water from the marshes, and thus rendered a considerable part of the land fit for husbandry. He also constructed on the side of the canals, a beautiful road near 40 miles long, ornamented with rows of poplars, interspersed with houses of accommodation; and at its termination an elegant palace. Besides this great enterprize this pontiff built a handsome church at Rome, and founded several hospitals. The emperor Joseph II. having suppressed several monasteries, and decreed that all the religious orders in his dominions were free from papal jurisdiction, Pius, apprehensive of the consequences of this revolution to the holy see, went in person to Vienna in 1782; but though he was honourably received, his efforts could not divert the emperor from his designs. On his return to Rome the pope had the mortification to have a difference with the courts of Naples, Modena, and Venice, chiefly with regard to the right of presenting to ecclesiastical benefices. The French revolution, however, was of more serious consequence to the papal see. It was natural for the pope to favour the cause of the allies, against those who were the destroyers of all government, civil and religious. Buonaparte, having succeeded against the imperialists, entered the ecclesiastical territory, and having taken several places, compelled the pope to purchase a peace by a contribution of several millions, and delivering up the finest works of painting and sculpture. Bassville was then sent as envoy from the republic to Rome, where he behaved with so much insolence that the people arose, and assassinated him in 1793. General Duphot entered the city with his troop to restore order, but the papal soldiers routed them, and Duphot was slain. On this Buonaparte again entered Italy, and made the pope prisoner in his capital, which was plundered. The venerable pontiff was carried away by the victors and hurried over the Alps to Valence, where he died of excessive fatigue and ill-usage, August 29, 1799. His body was interred in a private manner: but in 1802 it was taken up and conveyed to Rome, where it was interred with great pomp.—Hist. by Duppa. Novo. Diss. Hist.

PIX (Mary), a dramatic writer, was the daughter of Mr. Griffith, a clergyman, and born at Nettlebed in Oxfordshire. She married Mr. Pix; and was the author of ten plays, none of which ever became popular. She died about 1720.—Biog. Dram.

PIZARRO (Francis), a famous Spanish adventurer, was born at Truxillo, being the bastard of an officer of the same name. His first situation in life was very low, but the discovery of the western world opened to his enterprising spirit sources of wealth and renown. He made several voyages with Diego Almagro, by which he acquired considerable wealth. In 1525 Pizarro discovered Peru, where he inhumanly caused the inca Atabalipa to be burnt alive in 1533. Some time afterwards a difference arose between the conquerors, and Pizarro was assassinated by the friends of Almagro in 1541.—Mariana.

PIZZI (Joachim), an Italian poet, was born at Rome in 1716. He studied in the college of the jesuits, where he gave proofs of a poetical genius by some good pieces in his native language. He was early associated with the academy of Arcades, and in 1759 obtained the directorship of that society. He died in 1790. His principal works are; 1. Discourse on Tragic and Comic Poetry; 2. Dissertation on an antique Cameo; 3. The Vision of Eden, a poem in 4 cantos; 4. The Triumph of Poetry, a poem.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

PLACCUS (Vincent), a learned writer, was born at Hamburg in 1642. He studied at Leipzig, after which he travelled, and on his return to his own country professed morality and eloquence with reputation. He died in 1699. His works are; 1. Theatrum anonymorum et pseudonymorum, 2 vols. fol.; 2. Liber de Jurisconsultulo perito, 8vo. 3. De Arte excerptendi, 8vo. &c.; 4. Carmina Juvenilia, 8vo.—Moreri.

PLACE (Francis), a gentleman of York-shire, who painted and etched for his amusement. He also did several portraits in mezzotinto, particularly that of archbishop Sterne, and Henry Gyles, a glass-painter of York. His prints are very scarce. He died in 1728.—Granger. Strutt.

PLACENTIUS (John Leo), was born in the principality of Liege, and entered into the order of St. Dominic. He died at Maestricht in 1548. His works are; 1. Catalogus antistitum Leodienſium, [a History of the Biſhops of Tongres and Liege]; 2. a poem, entitled, Pugna porcorum, in which every word begins with P.—Moreri.

PLACKETT (John de la), a proteſtant miniſter, was born at Pontac in Bearn, in 1639. By the revocation of the edict of Nantes he was obliged to retire to Denmark, from whence he removed to the Hague, and afterwards to Utrecht, where he died in 1718. He wrote, 1. Moral Eſſays, 6 vols. 12mo.; 2. Treatiſe on Pride, 8vo.; 3. Another on Conſcience, 8vo. [This was tranſlated into Engliſh by Baſil Kennett]. 4. On Reſtitution; 5. On Good Works; 6. Chriſtian Reflections on various ſubjects, &c. He alſo wrote againſt the opinions of Bayle—on the Origin of Evil, and the Trinity.—Moreri.

PLANTIN (Chriſtopher), a celebrated printer, was born near Tours in 1514. He ſettled at Antwerp in 1555, and there carried the printing art to a great pitch of perfection. He died in 1589. His editions are extremely valuable, though he was not a man of learning himſelf. His chief work is a polyglot.—Ibid.

PLANUDES (Maximue), a monk of Conſtantinople in the fourth century, who was ſent by the emperor in the retinue of the ambaſſador to Venice, where he gained ſo great a partiality to the Latin church, that on his return he was ſent to priſon. To recover his liberty he wrote againſt that church. He was the author of a Life of Æſop, full of romantic tales, and groſs anachroniſms. He alſo published a collection of Greek epigrams, under the title of Anthologia.—Foſſius de Scrip. Græc.

PLATINA (Bartholomew Sacchi), was born in 1421, at Piacenza, near Mantua. On going to Rome he was patronized by cardinal Beſſarion, by whoſe means he obtained ſome benefices, and was appointed apoſtolic abbreviator, of which poſt he was deprived by Paul II. Platina wrote a ſmart letter to that pontiff, who ſent him to priſon and cauſed him to be cruelly tortured. Sixtus IV. made him librarian of the Vatican. He died of the plague in 1481. His Hiſtory of the Popes was firſt printed at Venice in 1479, folio, in Latin. He alſo wrote a Hiſtory of Mantua; the Life of Nerio Capponi; and ſome other works, all printed together in Latin, in folio, 1572.—Moreri.

PLATO, an illuſtrious philoſopher, was born at Athens B.C. 429. His father was Ariſto, a deſcendant of Solon, as his mother was from Codrus. His firſt maſter was Dionyſius the grammarian; and afterwards he received inſtructions in gymnatic exerciſes from Ariſto the Argive, who gave him the name of Plato, on account of the broadneſs of his ſhoulders and the robuſtneſs of his perſon. His former name was Ariſtoteles, which was that of his grandfather. He next applied to the ſtudy of muſic and poetry, and compoſed ſome pieces intended for the Olympic exerciſes; but on hearing Socrates deliver a long diſcourſe he burnt them, and became his diſciple. Some of his epigrams, however, are ſtill preſerved. He reſided with Socrates eight years, during which he committed to writing a great part of his maſter's diſcourſes, which he digeſted into philoſophical converſations: but he made ſo many improvements on them, that Socrates hearing him repeat one day his Lyſis, exclaimed, "Ye Gods, how many fine things has this young man made me ſay which I never imagined?" On the death of his maſter, Plato left Athens and travelled into different countries in ſearch of knowledge. At Cyrene he ſtudied geometry and other parts of the mathematics under one Theodorus; and from thence he went into Egypt under the appearance of a merchant, but in reality to converſe with the prieſts, and to gain information of their religious myſteries. Having reſided in Egypt a long time, and added conſiderably to his mental riches, he viſited Italy and ſettled at Tarentum, where he formed an intimacy with Eurytus and Archytas. He afterwards made a voyage to Sicily to obſerve the wonders of that iſland, particularly mount Ætna. On his return to Athens, after theſe long and fatiguing journeys, he ſettled at a place in the neighbourhood called the Academy, whence his philoſophy was called the Academic. His fame was now ſo great that Dionyſius, the tyrant of Syracuſe, invited him to his court, but the freedom of his diſcourſe gave ſuch offence that Dionyſius ordered him to be ſold for a ſlave. His purchaſer was one Anniceres, a native of Cyrene, who immediately gave him his liberty, on which he returned to Athens. At the earneſt requeſt of Dionyſius the younger he once more made a voyage to Sicily, where he was received with great honour, but finding that his advice was not attended to by the tyrant, who choſe to copy after his father, he returned again to Athens, where he gained a number of followers. He preſerved his health by temperance and exerciſe to the age of 81, and died B.C. 348. The philoſophy of Plato is ſo ſublime, his morality ſo pure, and his views of the divine being and a future ſtate ſo clear, that he has been thought to have had a knowledge of the Moſaic writings; a ſuppoſition which, conſidering his long reſidence in Egypt, is not improbable. The beſt editions of his works are, that of Stephens, 8 vols. folio, 1578; that of Ficinus at Frankfurt. fol. 1602; and that of Deux Ponts, 1788, 10 vols. 8vo. Dr. Clarke, of Cambridge, in 1803 brought from Greece a fine MS. of the works of Plato on vellum. It was transcribed by John the Calligrapher in the reign of Leo, the son of Basil. This is the oldest Greek copy of Plato which is known.—Diog. Laert. Stanley's Hist. of Phil. speakers.

PLAUTUS (Marcus Accius), a comic poet, was born at Sardina, in Umbria, and acquired the surname of Plautus from the ill shape of his feet. He settled at Rome, where his plays were performed with great applause. There is more intrigue and plot in his pieces than in those of Terence. The humour also is extremely natural and entertaining. Only nineteen are extant. The best editions are that of Ernest, Leipzig 2 vols. 8vo. 1760; and Glasgow, 1763. Plautus died B. C. 184.—Boy. Classica.

PLAYFORD (John), a writer on music, was born in 1613. He kept a music-shop in Fleet-street, London, and published an Introduction to the skill of Music, 1653, and often reprinted. He was also editor of the Book of Psalms and Hymns in Metre, with their usual and proper tunes, 8vo.; and Airs and Songs for the Theorbo-Lute, or Bass Viol. He died in 1693.—Hawkins. Granger.

PLEMPPIUS (Vopiscus Fortunatus), a physician, was born at Amsterdam in 1601. He took his doctor's degree at Bologna, after which he became professor of medicine at Louvain, where he died in 1671. His works are; 1. Ophthalmographia, five, de Oculi fabrica, 4to.; 2. De affectibus capillorum et unguum natura; 3. De Toga-torium valetudine tuenda; 4. Loimographia, five Tractatus de peste; 5. Antipus Coningius Peruvian pulvis defensor, repulsus a Melippo Protymo. Coningius is the supposed name of Fabri, a jesuit; Proty-mus is that which Plempius assumed, under which he endeavoured to discredit the bark.—Moriri.

PLINY (Caius Plinius Secundus), called the elder, was born at Verona of an illustrious family, and in his youth bore arms with reputation, after which he was admitted into the college of augurs. Vespasian appointed him governor of Spain, where he conducted himself with strict integrity, devoting the day to public affairs, and the night to study. His mind was stored with various knowledge, and he was an inquisitive observer of the works of nature. To this spirit of curiosity he sacrificed his life; for lying at Misenum with a fleet which he commanded, he was surprized at an extraordinary cloud issuing from Vesuvius. He immediately put to sea, and landed at the foot of the mountain to ascertain the cause of the phenomenon; but the sulphureous exhalation from the burning lava overcame him, and he was suffocated, A.D. 79. Of all the works of Pliny none remains but his Natural History, which is a compilation of facts and observations, extremely curious and valuable. The best editions are that of Harjounin, at Paris, 1723, 3 vols. folio; and that of Brotier, 1779, six vols. 12mo. It has been translated into English by Philimon Holland, folio.—Vossius.

PLINY the younger (Cæcilius Plinius Secundus), was the nephew of the preceding, who adopted him for his son and heir. He had Quintilian for his master, and made so great a progress that at the age of nineteen he pleaded in the forum, with an eloquence equal to that of the greatest orators of his time. When Trajan was elevated to the throne he conferred the consular dignity on Pliny, who, at the desire of the senate, pronounced that fine oration which is extant, entitled, the Panegyric on Trajan. He was some time after appointed governor of Pontus and Bithynia, where he abolished the arbitrary impositions, and stopped the persecution of the christians, of whom he gave a liberal account to the emperor. After his return to Rome, he went and settled at Comé, his native place, where he established an academy and library for young men who had not the means of education. Pliny was the liberal patron of men of virtue and learning. For Quintilian he always retained the greatest regard, and gave to his daughter a handsome dowry on her marriage. Pliny died A.D. 113. Of the writings of this ingenious and excellent writer, only his Epistles and Panegyric on Trajan remain. He wrote the History of his Own Times, of which Tacitus speaks in high terms. The best editions of Pliny are that of Gesner, Leipzig, 1770; that of Paris by Barbon; the Variorum, 1669, 8vo.; the Elzevirs, 1640, 12mo. This last is rare.—Fabricius.

PLOT (Robert), a learned antiquary and naturalist, was born at Borden in Kent, in 1641, and educated at Magdalen hall, and University college, Oxford, where he took his degree of LL.D. in 1671. He became secretary to the royal society in 1682, and published their Transactions from number 143 to 166. He was appointed first keeper of the Ashmolean museum, and professor of chemistry at Oxford. Dr. Plot was also nominated historiographer to the king, and Mowbray herald extraordinary. He died in 1696. His works are, the Natural Histories of Oxfordshire and Staffordshire, both in folio; several papers in the Philosophical Transactions; and an Essay on the Origin of Springs, in Latin.—Big. Brit.

PLOTINUS, a platonic philosopher, was born at Lycopolis, in Egypt. After studying under Ammonius, he travelled into Persia and India, where he acquired a great stock of knowledge. He served in the army under Gordian, but when that emperor was slain Plotinus effected his escape by flight. He then went to Rome, where he opened a school of philosophy, and had many disciples. He died in Campania in 270, aged 66. His works, which were collected by Porphyry his disciple, were published by Ficinus, at Basil, folio, 1580.—Bayle. Stant-y.

PLOWDEN (Edmund), an eminent lawyer, was born in Shropshire in 1517, and educated at Cambridge, from whence he removed to Oxford, where he took his degrees in physic, which profession he afterwards quitted for the law. His "Commentaries and Reports" are greatly esteemed. He died in 1584.—Wood.

PLUCHE (Antony), a French writer, was born at Rheims in 1688. He received his education at his native place, where he became professor of rhetoric and entered into orders. The intendant of Rouen, on the recommendation of Rollin, appointed him tutor to his son; and having discharged that trust he went to Paris, where he taught geography and history. In 1749 he obtained the abbey of Valence St. Maur, where he died in 1761. His works are; 1. Spectacle de la Nature, 7 vols. 12mo. of which there are two English translations. It is a performance of great excellence. 2. The History of the Heavens, which is an enquiry into the origin of mythology and idolatry; and has also been translated into English, in 2 vols. 12mo.; 3. On the Mechanism of Languages, 12mo.; 4. Harmony of the Psalms, and the Gospels, 12mo.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

PLUKENET (Leonard), an eminent English botanist, was born in 1642, and is supposed to have received his education at Cambridge. He was doctor of physic, but notwithstanding his great merits he was strangely neglected till the close of life, when he was appointed superintendant of the garden at Hampton Court, and royal professor of botany. He died about 1706. His Phytographia, published in four parts at different times, is an honourable testimony to his abilities. Besides this he published, 1. Almagestum botanicum, 4to. 1696; 2. Almagesti Botanici Mantissa, 1700, 4to. In this work he is very severe on Sloane and Petiver. 3. Amalthæum Botanicum, 4to. 1705. In 1769 his works were reprinted in 4 volumes, to which in 1779 Dr. Giseke of Hamburgh added a Linnean Index.—Pulteney.

PLUMIER (Charles), an eminent French botanist, was born at Marseilles in 1646. He entered into the religious order of Minims, and studied mathematics under father Maignan. He afterwards quitted that science and applied himself to natural history. Louis XIV. sent him to America to collect plants useful in medicine, and he made three different voyages for that purpose. The king rewarded him with a pension, and conferred on him the title of being his botanist. At the desire of Fagon, first physician to the king, he undertook a fourth voyage, but died as he was about to embark near Cadiz in 1706. His works are; 1. Nova Plantarum Americanarum genera, 4to.; 2. Description of the plants of America, folio; 3. Treatise on American ferns, folio; 4. The Art of Turning, folio, with plates; 5. two Dissertations on Cochineal, in the Journal des Savans.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

PLUQUET (Francis-Andrew), a French writer, was born at Baieux in 1716. He entered into orders and obtained a canonry, which he quitted for the professorship of history in the university of Paris. He died of an apoplexy in 1790. His works are; 1. An Examination of Fatalism, 3 vols. 12mo.; 2. Dictionary of Heresies, 2 vols. 8vo.; 3. On Sociability, 2 vols. In this work Pluquet combats the opinion of Hobbes, and proves that man is beneficent and religious. 4. The Classical Books of the Empire of China, 7 vols. 12mo.; 5. Treatise upon Luxury, 2 vols. 12mo.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

PLUTARCH, a celebrated historian, was a native of Cheronea in Boeotia. He studied philosophy in the school of Ammonius at Delphos; and so greatly was he esteemed by his countrymen, that when but a young man he was associated in a deputation to the proconsul of the province, on an important concern, which he discharged with honour and satisfaction. He afterwards travelled through Greece and into Egypt, and his observations in the latter country produced his treatise on Isis and Osiris. On visiting Rome he was received with flattering marks of distinction by the emperor Trajan, who raised him to the consular dignity, and appointed him governor of Illyria. After the death of Trajan, Plutarch returned to Cheronea, where he died in an advanced age, A.D. 140. He left two sons, Plutarch and Lamprias. The last wrote a memoir of his father, and published an exact account of his writings, which were numerous. The most celebrated of his works are, his Lives of Illustrious Men, in delineating which he has shewn great impartiality, an abhorrence of tyranny and vice, and a very accurate acquaintance with the human mind. His Morals also contain many valuable observations and curious narratives. The best editions of his works are, that of Henry Stephens, Greek and Latin, 1572, quarto; that of Maussac, 1624, 2 vols. folio; and that of London, 1729, 5 vols. 4to. His Lives have been translated into English by Dryden, and by Langhorae. His Morals have also been translated into English.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

PLUVINEL (Antony), a native of Dauphiny, was the first who opened a riding school in France. Henry IV. appointed him his grand equerry and chamberlain, and sent him ambassador to Holland. He died at Paris in 1620. He wrote a Treatise on the Art of Riding, folio.—Moreri.

Pococke (Edward), a learned divine, was born at Oxford, in 1604. At the age of fourteen he was entered of Magdalen hall, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi college, where he obtained a scholarship, and afterwards a fellowship. In 1628 he entered into orders, and was appointed chaplain to the English factory at Aleppo, where he arrived in 1630. While there he improved himself in the oriental languages, which he had before studied at the university. He was also employed by archbishop Laud in purchasing ancient manuscripts and coins; and that prelate having founded an Arabic lecture at Oxford, appointed Mr. Pococke the first professor. He returned home in 1635; but soon afterwards made another voyage to the East, in company with the learned Mr. Greaves, and continued there four years. On his arrival in England he found his patron in the Tower, and the kingdom in confusion. In 1643 he was presented by his college to the rectory of Childrey in Berkshire. In 1648 he was nominated to the Hebrew professorship with the prebend of Christchurch annexed, but he was deprived by the parliament for not taking the engagement. However he still continued his Arabic lectures, and published the same year his Specimen Historiæ Arabum. In 1651 he was one of those concerned in preparing the intended edition of the Polyglott Bible. At the restoration he recovered his canonry and Hebrew professorship, and took his doctor's degree; but never obtained any other preferment. He died in 1691. His other works are, 1. Porta Moisi, or the six Prelatory Discourses of Moses Maimonides; 2. the Annals of Eutychius; 3. Abul Ferajii Historia Dynastarum, 4to.; 4. Commentaries on Micah, Malachi, Hosea, and Joel, folio; 5. a Syriac version of the 2d epistle of St. Peter, the 2d and 3d of John, and that of Jude; 6. Letters between him and several learned men, published by Mr. Twells in 2 vols. folio, &c. His son, Edward Pococke, published under his father's direction an Arabic piece, entitled, Philosophus Arabum, &c. Epistola Abu Janfir Ebn T. &c. ad Bonifacium.—Biog. Brit.

Pococke (Richard), an eminent prelate, was born at Southwold, in 1721. He was educated at Corpus Christi college Oxford, where he became doctor in law, and afterwards was called to the bar at the East, where he practised several years. On his return to England he became chaplain to lord Clarendon, and when that nobleman was viceroy of Ireland, he considered on Dr. Pococke's the Annals of Dublin. He was afterwards promoted to the bishopric of Meath, from whence he was translated to Meath in 1765; but died the same year of an apoplexy. His Tracts, in 5 vols. folio, &c. very much esteemed.—Biog. Brit.

Pozzani (Charles Francis), a painter, was born at Paris in 1653, and died in 1725. He excelled in history and portrait, and was director of the French academy at Rome. His father, who died in 1660, was a native of Lorraine, and also a good artist.—D'Argenville.

Poggio Bracciolini (John Francis), a learned Italian, was born at Terra-Nova, in the territory of Florence, in 1380. He studied the Latin language under John de Ravenna, and the Greek under Emanuel Chrysoloras. He is also said to have made a progress in Hebrew; but this is by no means certain. His merits procured him the office of secretary to the popes; and while he was at the council of Constance he was employed in searching for ancient manuscripts in that city, of which he discovered several. To the honour of his humanity he felt great compassion for Jerom of Prague, and wrote a letter in his favour, but without effect. From Constance Poggio went to England, where he continued some time, and then returned to Rome; but in 1435 he settled at Florence and married. He also became secretary to that republic, and died there in 1459. His principal works are, 1. Funeral Orations; 2. History of Florence, Latin, 4to.; 3. De Varietate Fortunæ, 4to.; 4. Epistles; 5. Facetiae; this is a collection of witticisms; 6. a Latin translation of Diodorus Siculus; 7. several ancient writers discovered by him, particularly Quintilian, Ammianus, Marcellinus, &c. His son James translated his father's History of Florence into Italian; also the Life of Cyrus, from the Greek; and other works. He was put to death for being concerned in the conspiracy of the Pazzi in 1478.—Tiraboschi, Life of Poggio by Sacerd.

POILLY (Francis), a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1622. Peter Duret was his master; and after improving himself at Rome he was made engraver to the king. He died at Paris in 1691. His plates are very neat and accurate. His brother Nicolas was also a good engraver in portrait. He died in 1696.—Nouv. Dict.

POINSINET (Anthony Alexander Henry), a dramatic writer, was born at Tontainbleau in 1735, and was drowned in a river in Spain in 1769. He wrote comic operas, which possess no other merit than the music.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PORRET (Peter), a protestant minister, was born at Metz in 1646. He studied at Heidelberg, and in 1674 obtained a pastoral charge at Gmweil. By reading the mystic works of madame Bourignon and others a complete change was wrought in his mind, and he retired to Rheinfels in Holland, where he died in 1719. His works are 1. Confessiones Fideles de Deo, summa, et natio; 2. the Divine Economy 7 vols. But this has been translated into English by Peter of Good South, &c.; 4. Solid Principles of the Christian Religion, 3

Theology of the Heart, 2 vols. 12mo.; 6. De eruditione triplici, 2 vols. 4to.; 7. Life of madame Bourignon prefixed to her works.—Niceron.

POIRIER (German), was born at Paris in 1724. He was of the order of benedictines of St. Maur, which he quitted in 1769, and died in 1803. Poirier was one of the writers of the Art of Verifying Dates; and he undertook in conjunction with Precieux the 18th volume of the Collection of the Histories of Gaul and France, begun by Bouquet.—New. Dict. Hist.

Poets (Anthony le), physician to Charles III. duke of Lorraine, was well versed in antiquities, and died at Nancy in 1578. He is the author of a Discourse upon Medals and Antient Engravings, 4to. 1579. His brother Nicholas was an able physician, and had a son named Charles in the same line, who died in 1655. These two called themselves in Latin Pifines. They wrote some pieces which Boerhaave collected and published at Leyden, in 2 vols. 4to.—Mozzi.

POISSON (Nicholas-Joseph), a priest of the oratory, who was the intimate friend of Descartes, and superior of the house of Vendôme. He died in 1710. His works are, 1. Delectus Auctorum Ecclesiæ universalis, seu, nova gemma conciliorum, 2 vols. folio; 2. Remarks on Descartes' Discourses of Method, Mechanics, and Music; 3. Account of his Travels in Italy; 4. a Treatise on Benefices; 5. another on the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.—Moneri.

POISSON (Raymond), a comedian and dramatic writer, was born at Paris, and became gentleman of the chamber to the duke de Crequi, whose service he quitted for the stage. He died in 1690. His pieces are, the Baron de la Craffe, and the Good Soldier, comedies; the Fool of Quality; and some others published at Paris in 2 vols. 12mo. His nephew Philip Poisson who died in 1743, was also the author of six comedies, printed in 2 vols.—Ibid.

POISSONNIER (Peter-Isaac), professor of physics at Paris, was born at Dijon, in 1710. He was one of the first who read a course of chemical lectures in the capital; and in 1758 was sent by the government to Peterburgh at the request of the empress Elizabeth, who was then in an ill state of health. On his return to France he received several honourable marks of distinction, and was admitted a member of the academy of Sciences. In the revolution he was brought to prison, but was released after the fall of Robespierre. He died in 1797. His works are, 1. A Course of Lectures, &c. &c. 2. Essay on the Means of extending agriculture, &c. &c. 3. Treatise on the Levelling of the Land, &c. &c. 4. Another on the Improvement of the Soil, &c. &c. 5. Men, 2 vols. 8vo. 6. Surfage, &c. 7. Anatomy, 2 vols. 4to. &c. &c. 8. 2d. Ed.

Poiraz (N.), a French naturalist, was born at Lyons in 1719. He entered into the congregation of missionaries, and was sent to China, where he was imprisoned two years. In his passage to Europe the vessel was attacked by the English, and Poirve had his arm carried off, on which he quitted the ecclesiastical state. The India company sent him in 1749 to open a commercial establishment in Cochin China, and he was also appointed intendant of the isles of France and Bourbon, where he naturalised the bread-fruit tree, and other valuable plants. Poirve returned to his own country, and died at Lyons in 1786. He wrote, 1. the Voyage of a Philosopher, 12mo.; 2. on the Dying of Silks; 3. on the History and Manners of China, &c.—Novus. Di&S. H&A.

POLAND. This country was formerly inhabited by the Vandals. In 694 Lechus, the first duke, began his reign. In the year 1000 it became a kingdom under Boleslaus, whose successor added Red Russia to his dominions by marriage in 1059. In 1384 Poland was converted to Christianity by means of the king Jagello. The crown continued hereditary in that prince's family till 1572, after which it became elective; and occasioned many contentions and wars till 1795, when Poland was partitioned between Russia, Austria, and Prussia.—Univ. H. //.

POLE (Reginald), cardinal and archbishop of Canterbury, was the son of Richard Pole, lord Montague, cousin-german to Henry VII. and of Margaret his wife, daughter to George duke of Clarence, younger brother of Edward IV. He was born at Stourton in Staffordshire, in 1500. At the age of twelve he was elected of Magdalen college, Oxford, where he made a considerable progress in learning. In 1517 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury, and two years afterwards the deanry of Exeter. About this time he went to Italy for further improvement, and had a liberal establishment from his relation Henry VIII. He returned to England in 1525, and was held in great favour by the king on account of his engaging manners and liberal accomplishments. But when that monarch avowed his design of divorcing his queen, Pole opposed it, and went abroad and resided in Italy. Henry having assumed the supremacy over the church, and caused Desperiers to write a defence of that title, sent the book to Pole, who returned an answer to tender the same to the king. He was afterwards forced to leave his native country, and went to France, where he was again warmly received by the king, and employed in the service of his cardinal in the papal court, and sent ambassador to France and Spain. A home traitor, he was accused of being a foreign traitor, and was executed. He was buried in the church of St. Andrew, Westminster.

witted. On the death of Paul III. he was twice elected to succeed him, but refused both times. Queen Mary was no sooner settled upon the throne than Pole was appointed legate to reduce England again to the papal see; but before he set out, the act of attainder which had been passed against him was repealed. He arrived in 1554, and was magnificently received by the king and queen, and lodged in the palace at Lambeth. Shortly after he met the parliament, and pronounced the papal absolution of the kingdom. The day after the death of Cranmer he took upon him the title of archbishop of Canterbury, having been promoted to that dignity some time before. He was also elected chancellor of both universities, which he visited by commission. He behaved with moderation to the protestants, and was much displeased with the ferocious conduct of Gardiner and the other persecuting prelates. He survived queen Mary only sixteen hours, dying at Lambeth on an ague Nov. 18, 1558. Besides his book against Henry VIII. and his defence of it, he wrote several pieces in favour of the papal authority, and the doctrines of the church of Rome.—Biog. Brit.

POLEMBERG (Cornelius), an eminent painter, was born at Utrecht in 1586. At the invitation of Charles I. he visited England, where he painted several cabinet pictures of exquisite beauty. His landscapes are particularly fine. On the disturbances breaking out between the king and parliament he returned to Utrecht, where he died in 1660.—D'Argenville. Felsibien. Pilkington.

POLEMON, a Greek philosopher, was born at Oeta, in the territory of Athens, and in his youth led a very dissolute life. Passing by the school of Xenocrates one day, he entered, inflamed with wine, in order to ridicule the philosopher. But the discourse of Xenocrates on the misery of intemperance, had such an effect that Polemon became his disciple and successor. He died B.C. 270. After his change he drank nothing but water during the rest of his life. There was an orator of this name who lived in the reign of Trajan, and left Orations, which were printed in Greek and Latin at Toulouse in 1637, 8vo.—Diog. Laert. Moreri.

POLENI (John, marquis), was born at Padua in 1683, and died in that city in 1761. He was professor of astronomy and mathematics in that university, and after gaining the prize three times of the academy of sciences at Paris, was elected a member in 1739. He was also a fellow of the royal society of London, and other learned bodies. He particularly excelled in hydraulic architecture, and was employed by several states in the construction of waterworks. He was also well skilled in civil architecture, and corresponded with the greatest mathematicians in Europe. The marquis added to his other accomplishments a great knowledge of antiquities, as appears from his Supplement to Grævius and Gronovius's Collections, 5 vols. folio, 1737, Venice.—Tiraboschi.

POLI (Martin), a chemist, was born at Lucca in 1662. He studied at Rome, where he made several discoveries, particularly one of a very destructive nature in military operations, which he communicated to Louis XIV. who liberally rewarded him, but charged him to bury the secret, as the means of destroying life were already sufficiently numerous. Poli was admitted an associate of the academy of sciences. He died in 1714. He wrote a Treatise in Defence of Acids, entitled, Il trionfo degli Acidi.—Ibid.

POLIDORO DA CARAVAGGIO, a painter, so called from the name of a village in the duchy of Milan, where he was born in 1495. He was employed at the Vatican in preparing stucco for the painters, from whom he learnt the principles of their art, and made such a rapid improvement as to be employed in ornamenting most of the public buildings in Rome. He was murdered by his servant for the sake of his money in 1543.—De Piles.

POLIER (Charles de), was born at Lausanne in 1753. He was educated at the university of Gottingen, on leaving which he obtained a lieutenancy in a Swiss regiment in the French service, but soon resigned it and returned to Lausanne, where he formed an acquaintance with lord Tyrone, who employed him as tutor to his children. These pupils he accompanied to England, and settled with them at Manchester, of the society at which place he became a member. M. de Polier died at lord Tyrone's seat near Waterford in 1782. He has some ingenious papers in the first volume of the Transactions of the Manchester Society, where also is a Memoir of him written by Dr. Percival.

POLIGNAC (Melchior de), a celebrated cardinal, was born at Puy-en-Velay in 1661, of a very ancient family in Languedoc. He received his education at Paris, where he defended the philosophy of Aristotle and that of Descartes at the same time, with great ingenuity. The cardinal de Bouillon took him to Rome, where he was employed in several important concerns. In the disputes between the pope and the court of France Polignac rendered great service by bringing about a reconciliation. Louis XIV. sent him ambassador to Poland to procure the election of the prince of Conti after the death of John Sobieski. In this he failed, and on his return to France was for some time in disgrace. He afterwards recovered the royal favour, and was sent to Rome; and in 1709 was employed as one of the plenipotentiaries in the conferences at Gettruydenberg, for negotiating a peace, and in 1712 assisted in the same capacity at the treaty of Utrecht. A little before this pope Clement XI. had conferred on him the dignity of cardinal. After the death of Louis XIV. he was exiled to his abbey of Anchin, and was not recalled till 1721. In 1726 he was made archbishop of Auch, and in 1732 commander of the order of the Holy Ghost. He died at Paris in 1741. Cardinal Polignac wrote an excellent Latin poem entitled, Anti-Lucretius, seu, de Deo & Natura, lib. ix, 8vo. and 12mo.—Life by Faucher, 2 vols. Paris, 1777.

POLYMIERE (Peter), a French mathematician, was born at Couloune, near Vire, in 1671. He studied in the college of Harcourt at Paris, where he took his degree of doctor in medicine. He was the first who read lectures on experimental philosophy in that capital, and in the presence of the king. He died in 1734. His works are, 1. Elements of Mathematics; 2. Treatise on Experimental Philosophy, 2 vols. 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

POLISI (Alexander), a learned Italian, was born at Florence in 1679. He entered into orders, and became successively professor of rhetoric, philosophy, and divinity, at Genoa, from whence in 1733 he removed to Pisa, where he was professor of Greek and eloquence. He died there in 1752. His principal work is an edition of Eustathius's Commentary on Homer, with a Latin version and notes, 5 vols. folio. He also published a corrected edition of the Roman Martyrology, folio; Discourses in the academy of Pisa, &c.—Hist. Lit. Ital.

POLITIAN (Angelo), was born at Monte Pulciano in Tuscany in 1454. His real name was Angelo Bassi. Andronicus of Thessalonica was his master, under whom he acquired a great knowledge of the Greek language. His poetical talents recommended him to the patronage of Lorenzo and Julian de Medici, the former of whom made him tutor to his children. Politian discharged his trust so well as to be appointed professor of Greek and Latin at Florence. He died of grief on account of the banishment of the Medici family, in 1494. Picus Mirandula was his most intimate friend. Politian wrote, 1. the history of the Confederacy of Pazzi; 2. a Latin translation of Herodian; 3. a book of Greek Epigrams; 4. Latin Epistles; 5. Bucolic Poems; 6. a Treatise on Anger, &c. All his works were printed in 1550, 8 vols. 8vo. and at Basil in 1553, folio.—Life by Mencke, 1736. 4to.

POLLIO (Caius Asinius), a Roman consul and orator, who gained a great reputation in the reign of Augustus, by his military exploits and his writings. Virgil and Horace were his intimate friends, and have immortalized his name in their works. He wrote tragedies, orations, and a history, which are lost. He is said to have formed the first public library at Rome. Possessed at Fiescati A. D. 4, aged 80.—Vossius de Poet. Lat.

POLLUX (Julius), a Greek author, was born at Naucrates in Egypt, and flourished in the reign of the emperor Commodus, to whom he was preceptor, and for whose use he composed an "Onomasticon," a Greek vocabulary.—Vossius.

POLYENUS, a Macedonian, who wrote "Stratagems of War," dedicated to the emperors Antoninus and Verus. There are several editions of this book in Greek and Latin; the best is that of Mavicius, 8vo. 1691.—Voss. de Scrip. Græc. & Fabricius.

POLYBIUS, a Greek historian, was born at Megalopolis, in the Peloponnesus, about 203, B.C. His father, Lycortas, was governor of the republic of Achæa, and distinguished by his virtues. He taught his son the principles of philosophy and policy, and Philopœmen was his instructor in the art of war. Polybius displayed great skill and courage in several expeditions during the war between the Romans and Perseus, king of Macedon. When that monarch was defeated, Polybius was taken prisoner, and sent to Rome, where he gained the friendship of Scipio, whom he accompanied to the siege of Carthage; and he was also with that commander at the siege of Numantium. Polybius on the death of Scipio was greatly afflicted, and retired to a private state. He died B.C. 121, of a wound which he received by a fall from his horse. Part only of his Universal History of his own time, in Greek, remains. The first edition is that of Rome, 1473, folio; and the best those of Casaubon, fol. Paris, 1609; and Amsterdam, cum notis variorum, 3 vols. 8vo. 1670. Polybius has been well translated into English by Hampton.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

POLYCARP (Saint), bishop of Smyrna, and a martyr of the Christian church, was the disciple of St. John the evangelist. He made a journey to Rome, A.D. 160, to settle the controversy which was then raised respecting the proper time for the celebration of Easter. On his return to Smyrna he was condemned to the flames by the pro-consul, but escaped unhurt; his persecutor then demanded of him, whether he would abjure Christ to whom he answered, "Eighty-six years have I served him, and received nothing but good, how then would you have me now to renounce him?" On this he was pierced through with a sword, at the age of 95, in the year 160. His martyrdom is affectingly related in a letter from the church of Smyrna to the churches of Pontus; and there is also extant an Epistle of Polycarp's to the Philippian, published by Usher with those of Ignatius, 1647, 4to. It has been translated by archbishop Wake, 8vo. 1703.—Dupin. Biblioth. Eccl.

POLYDECTUS, a sculptor of Sicyone, in the Peloponnesus, who lived B. C. 232, and was considered as the first of artists, Phidias being esteemed the second. It is reported, that Polycletus, by way of convicting the critics, exhibited a statue for public animadversion, offering to correct the faults that should be noticed. On producing it a second time amended exactly according to the errors which had been pointed out, he placed by it another formed according to his own judgment. The observers unanimously approved this last, and censured the former; on which Polycletus said, "That which you condemn is your own work; that which you admire is mine."—Plin. Nat. Hist.

POLYDORE-VIRGIL, an historian, was born at Urbino in Italy, and visited England in the suite of cardinal Cornaro, the pope's legate. Henry VIII. was so pleased with his wit and address that he gave him the archdeaconry of Wells; in return for which he wrote the History of England in Latin, more elegant than faithful. It was printed at basle in 1554, folio. Polydore having a difference with cardinal Wolsey returned to his own country, where he died in 1555. His other works are, 1. De Inventoribus Rerum, 12mo.; 2. Treatise on Prodiges, folio; 3. Adagiorum, or Proverbs; 4. Corrections of Gildas.—Bayle.

POLYGNOTUS, a Greek painter of Rhodes, who is celebrated for a picture of the battle of Marathon, which was fixed on a portico at Athens, and is said to have resisted the effects of the weather for many centuries. Pliny and Quintilian speak highly of his powers.

POMBAL (Sebastian Joseph Carvalho, marquis de), a statesman, was born 1699, at Soure in Portugal. He studied in the university of Coimbra, after which he served some time in the army, but being disgusted with a military life, he retired to his estate. In 1745 he was sent ambassador to Vienna, where he married the countess Daun, a relation of the famous marshal of that name. In 1750 he was appointed secretary for foreign affairs and had the principal share in the administration. He displayed great talent and vigour, encouraged agriculture and commerce, placed the marine on a respectable footing, and instituted several excellent regulations. But he disgraced all his public acts by his private life. However he procured great honour by his conduct after the earthquake which destroyed Lisbon in 1755. By his means the city was speedily restored, and the public calamity much relieved. But his unbounded influence at court created him many enemies; and at length a conspiracy was formed against him, and the king, which was discovered, and the authors and agents severely punished. Being conscious that the Jesuits were concerned in the plot, he caused them to be expelled the kingdom. On the death of Joseph II. in 1777, the power of Pombal was destroyed, and he fell into disgrace, and died in exile on his estate in 1782.—Memoirs of the M. de Pombal, 4 vols. 1783.

POMET (Peter), a druggist of Paris, where he acquired a considerable fortune. He was appointed superintendant of the royal physic garden; and formed a catalogue of its contents; but the work which does him the greatest credit is a History of Drugs, of which his son Joseph Pomet published an improved edition in 1735, in 2 vols. 4to. The first was printed in 1694, folio. The author died in 1699.—Moreri.

POMEY (Francis), a jesuit of Lyons, who published, 1. a Dictionary, French and Latin, 4to.; 2. Flos Latinitatis; 3. Indiculus Universalis, French and Latin; 4. Libitina, or a Treatise on the Funerals of the Antients; 5. Panthæum Mythicum, 8vo.; this is a good work on Heathen Mythology, of which Andrew Tooke gave an English translation without acknowledgement; 6. Novus Rhetoricæ Candidatus, 12mo. This industrious compiler died in 1673, aged 55.—Moreri.

POMFRET (John), an English poet and divine, was born about 1667, at Luton, in Bedfordshire, and educated at Cambridge. On entering into orders, he obtained the living of Malden, in Bedfordshire. He died of the small-pox in 1703. On account of a passage in his poem entitled the Choice, bishop Compton, of London, was for some time very much prejudiced against him. In his piece entitled Cruelty and Lust, he has related the story of colonel Kirk in a very affecting manner. His poems possess merit, and were once very popular.—Johnson's Poets.

POMPADOUR (Jane-Antoinette Poisson, marchioness of), mistress of Louis XV. was the daughter of a corn-dealer, and the wife of Etiole, nephew of the former-general Normand Tournemem. The king being hunting in the forest of Senar, on the borders of which Tournemem had an estate, had an opportunity purposely afforded him of seeing madame Poisson, with whose charms he was immediately enamoured. She was created marchioness of Pompadour in 1745, and acquired a complete ascendancy over the heart of Louis till her death in 1764, at the age of 44. She was a liberal encourager of the arts, and of men of genius. The marchioness is stated in her memoirs to have had a considerable concern in the political affairs of her time, particularly the war of 1756.—New Dict. Hist.

POMPEY, the Great, born B. C. 106, was the son of Pompey, an able general, under whom he learnt the art of war and with such success that at the age of twenty-three he raised three legions with which he joined Sylla. Three years afterwards he recovered Sicily and Africa, and became to great a favourite with the army that Sylla recalled him. He obeyed the mandate, though his soldiers wished him to resist the orders of the dictator. Sylla received him with expressions of friendship, and saluted him with the appellation of the Great. He also obtained the honours of a triumph. After the death of Sylla, Pompey compelled Lepidus to quit Rome, and finished the war in Spain against Sertorius; for which he obtained a second triumph, B. C. 79; and at the same time was elected consul. In his consulate he restored the tribunes, exterminated the pirates, gained great advantages over Tigranes and Mithridates, and made numerous conquests in the East. After these brilliant exploits he entered Rome as a private citizen, and was honoured with a third triumph. But his glory procured him many enemies, to counteract whom he joined with Crassus and Cæsar in forming the first triumvirate, B. C. 60. To make this alliance the stronger Pompey married Julia, daughter of Cæsar; but these two great men became rivals in consequence of Pompey's being created sole consul, B. C. 52. Julia was dead, and he had married Cornelia, daughter of Metellus Scipio, whom he associated with him in the consulate. Cæsar held the government of Gaul, when the senate, at the solicitation of Pompey, passed a decree, commanding him to quit the army, on pain of being declared an enemy to his country. War now broke out between the two parties, who encountered each other on the plains of Pharsalia, where Pompey was defeated, and fled, but was assassinated by two of his officers, on board of the vessel in which he made his escape, B. C. 49. He left two sons, Cneius, who was slain in the battle of Munda, and Sextus, who was put to death by Antony, B. C. 35.—Plutarch.

POMPIGNAN (John James le France, marquis of), was born at Montauban in 1709. He gained a great reputation by his tragedy of Dido, written in imitation of Racine, and acted first in 1734. He was admitted a member of the French academy in 1760, on which occasion he had the courage to deliver an inaugural discourse in defence of Christianity, which drew upon him a number of satires and lampoons from Voltaire and the other infidels of that assembly. The marquis died at his castle of Pompiignan in 1784. His works have been published in 6 vols. 8vo. They consist of dramatic pieces, sacred odes, moral discourses, a translation of the Georgics, &c.—Nouv. Diâ. Hist.

POMPIGNAN (John-George le Franc de), brother of the above, was born at Montauban in 1715. He was educated for the church, and successively became bishop of Puy, and archbishop of Vienne. In 1789 he was deputed a member of the constituent assembly by the province of Dauphiny, and the same year he received a letter from the pope, exhorting him to use every effort in opposing innovations on the church. The good prelate had no means of fulfilling the injunction, dying Dec. 20, 1790. He wrote, Critical Essay on the present state of the Republic of Letters; on the Secular Authority in matters of Religion; Scepticism convicted by the Prophecies; Religion avenged on Incredulity by Incredulity itself; Letters from a Bishop, 2 vols; and several pastoral letters, and other pieces.—Ibid.

POMPONATIUS (Peter), was born at Mantua in 1402. He was of a very diminutive stature, but taught philosophy at Padua and other cities in Italy with extraordinary reputation. In his book "De Immortalitate Animæ," printed at Bologna in 1513, he maintained that a future state was no part of the Aristotelian philosophy, but is merely a matter of religious faith. This position occasioned a violent controversy, and Pomponatius, though supported by Cardinal Bembo, was regarded as an atheist. He died in 1525. The philosophical works of Pomponatius were printed at Venice, in folio, in 1525.—Niceron, Bayle, Tiraboschi.

POMPONIUS LÆTUS (Julius), a name given to Peter of Calabria, who was born in 1425, at Amendolara in Calabria. He went to Rome, where he was distinguished for his talents, till he was falsely accused of conspiring with others against pope Paul II. He then retired to Venice; but after the death of that pontiff he returned to Rome, where he became suspected of atheism, on account of his enthusiasm for the ancient philosophy. He died in 1495. His works are: 1. Abridgement of the Lives of the Cæsars, fol.; 2. De exortu Muhammedis, fol.; 3. De Sacerdotiis, de Legibus, &c. 4to.; 4. De Romanæ urbis Vetustate, 4to.; 5. Vita Statii Poetæ et Patris ejus: De Arte Grammatica; 6. editions of Sallust, Pliny the younger, and some of the works of Cicero; 7. Commentaries on Quintilian, Columella, Virgil, &c.—Ffius de Hist. Lat. Nicéron.

PONA (John Baptist), a critical writer and poet, was born at Verona, and died there in the flower of his age in 1588. His works are, 1. Diatribæ de rebus Philosophicis, 1590; 2. Latin Poems; 3. Il Tirreno, a pastoral. His brother, John PONA, was an able botanist and apothecary at Verona; he wrote, Plantæ quæ in Baldo monte reperiuntur, 4to, 1597, and reprinted in the Historia rariorum Stirpium of Charles de l'Ecluse at Antwerp, 1631, folio. Pona was also the author of a Treatise, entitled, Del vero Balsamo degli Antichi, Venice, 1623, 4to. He is not to be confounded with Francis PONA, a native of Verona, and a physician, who died in 1652. He wrote Medicina Animæ, 4to.; La Lucerna di Euretâ Misofcolo, 4to.; Saturnalia, 8vo.; Ormonde, and Messalina, romances; tragedies and comedies; Galleria delle Donne cele- liri; Adamo, Poëma; Della contraria torza di due belliocchi.—Tiraboschi.

PONS (John Francis de), a French writer, was born of a noble family at Marly, near Paris, in 1683. He was educated for the church, and obtained a canonry in the collegiate church of Chaumont, which he afterwards renounced and went to reside at Paris, where he zealously defended Houdard de la Mothe against madame Dacier. He died in 1732. He wrote, a New System of Education; and four Dissertations on Languages, which with some other pieces were printed together.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PONT-DE-VESE (Anthony de Ferriol, count de), a French dramatic writer, was born in 1697, and died at Paris in 1774. He was governor of Pont de Vese, and intendant-general of the marine. He wrote the Complaissant, a comedy; the Coxcomb Punished; the Sleep-walker, a farce; Sonnets and fugitive pieces. His uncle Ferriol, ambassador to Constantinople, painted some fine pictures of the costume of the Turks, of which engravings were published in 1715, folio.—Ibid.

PONTANUS (John Jovian), a learned writer, was born at Cerreto in 1426. He settled at Naples, and became preceptor to Alphonsus the younger, king of Arragon, who having revolted against his father, a reconciliation was effected between them by Pontanus. Not being rewarded agreeable to his merit, he vented his resentment in a dialogue upon Ingratitude. He died in 1503. Pontanus wrote the History of the Wars of Ferdinand I. and John of Anjou, printed at Basil in 1556, 4 vols. 8vo. His other works were published at Venice, in 3 vols. 4to. His poems are very indecent.—Niceron. Tiraboschi.

PONTANUS OF DUPONT (Peter), a grammarian of Bruges, who was blind from the age of three years, yet acquired a great reputation as teacher of the belles-lettres at Paris. He wrote a Treatise of Rhetoric, and on Versification. He flourished at the beginning of the 16th century.—Mor.

PONTANUS (James), a jesuit of Bohemia, who died at Augsburg in 1626, aged 84. He wrote, Institutiones Poeticæ, 8vo.; Commentaries upon Ovid and Virgil; and Translations of several Greek authors in prose and verse.—Ibid.

PONTANUS (John Isaac), historiographer to the king of Denmark, was born in that kingdom of a Dutch family in 1591. He wrote, Historia Urbis et Rerum Amstelodamensium, folio, 1611; Itinerarium Gallix Narbonensis, 1606; Rerum Danicarum Historia, una cum chorographica ejusdem regni urbiisque descriptione, folio, 1631; Disceptiones chorographicae de Rhemi divortii atque ostiis et accolis Populis, adversus P. Cluverum, 8vo.; Observationes in Tractatnm de Globis Cœlesti et Terrestri, 8vo.; Discussiones Historicae, 8vo. [This book was written against Selden's famous treatise on the sea.] Historia Geldrica, folio; Life of Frederick II. King of Denmark; Historia Ulrica, folio, &c. He died at Harderwyk in 1640.—Moreri.

PONTCHAËTEAU (Sebastian-Joseph du Cambont, baron de), a near relation of cardinal Richelieu, was born in 1634. Notwithstanding the brilliant prospects held out to him; he renounced the world and retired to the congregation of Port royal, of which he became gardener. In 1679 he went to Rome, and afterwards went into the abbey of Orval; but died at Paris, whether he had gone on some works of charity, in 1699. He wrote, On the Cultivation of Fruit-trees, 12mo.; On the Moral Practice of the Jesuits; Letter to Perefex, &c.—Id.

PONTEDERA (Julius), an Italian botanist. He was born at Vicenza, in the Venetian states, in 1688, and in the early part of his life he evinced a disposition for those pursuits which have immortalized his name. He became professor of botany at Padua, and superintendent of the botanic garden there. He was also a member of the academy of inscriptions and belles-lettres at Paris. He died in 1757. His principal work is his Compendium tabularum Botanicarum, in quo plantæ 272 ab eo in Italia nuper detectæ recensentur. Patavii, 1718, in 4to.—Ibid.

PONTOPPIDAN (Eric), a Danish divine, was born in the isle of Fuhnen, and preferred, on account of his learning, to the bishopric of Drontheim, in Norway, where he died in 1678, aged 62. He published some learned works, particularly a grammar of the Danish language. His nephew, Eric Pontoppidan, became bishop of Bergen, and distinguished himself by a History of the Reformation in Denmark, folio; and another of Norway, which has been translated into English. He died about 1750.—Moreri.

PONTORMO (James), a painter, was born at Florence in 1493, and died there in 1556. His early performances gained the admiration of Raphael and Michael Angelo; but by copying the German style he acquired a hard and unnatural manner, which renders his subsequent pictures less valuable.—De Pict. Felibien.

POOL (Rachel Van), a female painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1664. She excelled in painting flowers and fruit, and died in 1750. Her husband, Jurian Pool, was a good portrait-painter, and died in 1745, aged 79.—Pilkington.

POOLZ (Matthew), a nonconformist minister, was born at York in 1624, and educated at Emanuel college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and having entered into orders, according to the presbyterian mode, became rector of St. Michael-le-Quern, London, of which he was deprived at the restoration for nonconformity. He displayed so much zeal against popery, that, according to the deposition of Titus Oates, his name was among those who were intended to be taken off in the popish plot. On this he went to Amsterdam, where he died in 1679. Besides some sermons, he wrote Annotations on the Bible, in English, which were completed and published after his death, in 2 vols. folio. But his greatest work was a Synopsis Criticorum, or a Collection of Elucidations on the Scripture by different authors, in 5 vols. folio, published in 1669.

POPE (sir Thomas), an eminent patron of learning, was born at Deddington in Oxfordshire, in 1508. He received his education at Eton school, and afterwards studied the law. At the age of twenty-eight he was treasurer of the court of augmentations, and soon after was appointed visitor for the dissolution of religious houses, in which situation he conducted himself with singular moderation. In 1540 he was knighted, and made master of the jewel-house in the Tower. He was the intimate friend of sir Thomas More, to whom, by order of the king, he communicated the sad tidings of his intended execution. In 1554 he founded Trinity college, Oxford, with a liberal endowment. He died in London in 1558.—Life by T. Warton. Biog. Brit.

POPE (Alexander), a celebrated poet, was born in 1688, of a good family, in London, where his father was a considerable merchant. The family being of the Romish persuasion he was placed at eight years of age under one Taverner, a priest, who taught him the rudiments of the Latin and Greek languages together. About this time accidentally meeting with Ogilby's Homer, he was so much pleased that it became his favourite book: and when he was at school at the age of ten he turned some of the chief events of Homer into a kind of play, which was performed by the upper boys and the master's gardener, who represented Ajax. At the age of twelve he retired with his parents to Binfield in Windsor Forest, where his father had purchased a small estate. Here he wrote his Ode on Solitude, which appears as the first fruits of his poetic genius. It was here also that he first met with the works of Waller, Spenser, and Dryden; but on perusing Dryden he abandoned the rest and studied him as a model. In 1704 he wrote his Pastorals, which being communicated to Mr. Wycherly, he sent a copy to Mr. Walsh, who was highly delighted with them, and became a valuable friend to the juvenile poet. This year also he produced the first part of his Windsor Forest, which, however, was not published till 1710, with a dedication to lord Lansdowne. At the age of twenty appeared his Essay on Criticism, which, notwithstanding the youth of the author, is one of the finest poems in the language, and contains the foundest rules. But his genius shone to a still greater advantage in his Rape of the Lock, founded on a serious misunderstanding arising from lord Petre's cutting off a lock of Mrs. Fermor's hair. This poem was written with a view of effecting a reconciliation between the parties, and it was successful. It came out in 1712, and was followed by the Temple of Fame, which had been written two years before. The following year he published his proposals for a translation of the Iliad, in which he met with uncommon encouragement, and it enabled him to purchase a house at Twickenham, whither he removed with his parents in 1715. After completing the Iliad, he undertook to publish the Odyssey, in the same manner, and for which also he experienced a most liberal subscription. He was, however, materially assisted in these great works by the learning and abilities of others, particularly Broome, Fenton, and Parnell. The notes from Eustathius were chiefly extracted by Mr. Jortin. In 1721 our author published an edition of Shakspeare, which shews that therein he consulted his fortune more than his fame. The reputation which he had acquired by the prodigious success, as well as intrinsic merit of his works, procured him numerous enemies among writers of the minor classes, from whom also he experienced frequent spleenic attacks. Perhaps it would have been more to his honour had he taken no notice of them; but on the contrary in 1727 he vented his resentment in a mock heroic, entitled, The Dunciad, in which he took more than warrantable revenge, and what was worse, exposed to ridicule many ingenious and respectable persons who had given him no offence. In 1729, by the advice of lord Bolingbroke, he turned his pen to a moral and philosophical subject, the result of which was his Essay on Man, an ethical poem, addressed to that statesman. Of this work it is needless to speak, for whatever may be thought of its leading principle, it possesses refined thoughts and substantial beauties. He next set about writing satires, in which he attacked several persons of rank with great fury. Mr. Pope was engaged in preparing a complete edition of his works, when he was carried off by a dropsy in the chest, May 30, 1744. Not long before his death he made a will, by which he bequeathed the property of his works to Dr. Warburton, who published a collection of them with notes, in 1751, in 9 vols. 8vo. Since then Dr. Joseph Warton has published an edition, to which he prefixed, what he had before printed, an admirable Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope. The person of Mr. Pope was little, and crooked; yet there was much life and even elegance in his countenance, except when he was labouring under his hereditary complaint, the head-sche. His friendships appear to have been capricious; and he had no small portion of vanity in his disposition, to which and self-interest almost all considerations were readily sacrificed. Of his religious opinions it is difficult to speak. From his Essay on Man it should seem as if he was a mere theist; and though he continued to profess the religion in which he was bred, he scrupled not to go occasionally to his parish church.—Biog. Brit. Johnson's Poets.

POPHAM (Sir John) an eminent judge, was born in Somersetshire in 1531. He was a student of Balliol college, Oxford, whence he removed to the Middle Temple, and was made serjeant at law in 1570; after serving the offices of attorney and solicitor-general, he was appointed in 1581 chief justice of the king's bench. He died in 1607. His "Reports and Cases," in folio, shew his abilities to great advantage.—Gen. Biog. Diët.

PORDAGE (John), an English fanatic, was born in London, and became pastor of St. Laurence Reading in the time of the civil wars. But engaging much in astrology, chemistry, and other abstruse subjects, he was accused before the commissioners for Berkshire of magical practices, and deprived of his living. He exercised medicine, and was called doctor Pordage. He wrote a book, entitled, Manifest Innocence; against Fowler's Demonium Mercurianum. Pordage was also the author of some mystical treatises, according to the notions of Behmen. He died about 1670.—Wood, A. O.

PORDENONE (John Antony Lacinio Regillo), a painter, so called from the place of his birth, a village in Friuli. He died in 1540, aged 56. He was the disciple of Giorgioni, and the rival of Titian, who regarded his great merit with envy. The emperor Charles V. conferred on him the honour of knighthood. His nephew, called Pordenone the younger, was also a good painter, born at Venice, and died at Augsburg in 1570. He studied under his uncle.—Pilkington. D'Ar enville.

PORRE (Charles), a Jesuit, was born near Caen in Normandy in 1675. After acquiring a great reputation as a teacher in his native province, he was called to be professor of rhetoric in the college of Louis the Great at Paris, where he died in 1741. His works are, Orations, 3 vols.; Comedies and Tragedies in Latin; and Poems. His brother, Charles Gabriel, became member of the society of the oratory, and canon in the cathedral of Bayeux. He died upon his cure of Louvigny, near Caen, in 1770, aged 85. He wrote Le Mandarinade, ou Histoire du Mandarinat de l'abbé de St. Martin, 3 vols. 12mo.; Letters on Burying in Churches, &c.—Nouv. Diët. Hist.

PORPHYRY, a platonist philosopher, was born at Tyre, A.D. 233. He studied at Athens under Longinus; and philosophy at Rome under Plotinus, whose life he wrote. He died in the reign of Diocletian. His learning was great, and he composed many works; one of which against the Scriptures was burnt, by order of Theodosius the Great. His Treatise de Abstinencia ab Animalibus Viandis, et de Vita Pythagoræ, were printed at Cambridge in 1655, 8vo. We have besides of his another, entitled, De Antro Nympharum, 4to.; and Porphyrii Hagoge, folio. He is not to be confounded with Porphyry, a Latin poet, who wrote a panegyric in verse on the emperor Constantine, which occasioned his being recalled from exile.—Vossius. Moreri.

PORSENNA, king of Etruria, who declared war against the Romans for refusing to restore Tarquin, in which he was at first successful, and laid siege to Rome, but the courage of Cincinnatus and Scævola obliged him to retire. He died shortly after.—Livy.

PORTA (Joseph), an eminent painter, was born at Castel Nuovo in 1535. He studied under Salviati, whose name he assumed out of gratitude. He painted equally well in fresco and oil; and wrote some pieces on mathematics, which he caused to be burnt. He died at Venice in 1585.—De Piles.

PORTA (John Baptist), a gentleman of Naples, who acquired a great reputation by his application to the belles-lettres, and the sciences, particularly the mathematics, medicine, and natural history. He held several assemblies in his house of learned men, which were condemned by the court of Rome, on the absurd charge, that the object of their meetings was magic. Porta died in 1515, aged 70. His works are, 1. Treatise on Natural Magic, in Latin, 8vo.; 2. another on Physiognomy, mixed with astrology and other vanities; 3. De occultis Litterarum notis; 4. Physiognomonica, seu Methodus Cognoscendi ex inspectione vires abditas cujuscumque rei, folio; 5. De Diffinitionibus, 4to. He is celebrated as the inventor of the camera obscura; and is said to have conceived the project of an Encyclopedia.—Vander Linden de Scrip. Med. Moreri.

PORTA (Simon), or Portius, was a native of Naples, and the disciple of Pomponatius. He became professor of philosophy at Pisa, and died at Naples in 1554, aged 57. He wrote, 1. De Mente humana, de Voluptate et Dolo, &c. & de Coloribus Oculorum, 1 vol. 4to.; 2. De rerum naturalium Principiis libri duo, 4to.; 3. De Conflagratione agri Puteolani, 4to.; 4. Opus Physiologicum, 4to.—Tiraboschi.

PORTE (the abbé Joseph de la), a miscellaneous writer, was born at Besfont in 1718, and died at Paris in 1779. He was for some time a Jesuit, which order he quitted, and applied to literature. His first performance was a comedy called the Antiquary; after which he published a journal, entitled, Observations on Modern Literature; which was followed by the Literary Year. He also compiled the School of Literature,

2 vols. 12mo.; Dramatic Anecdotes, 3 vols. 8vo.; Literary History of French Ladies, 5 vols. 8vo.; the French Traveller, 24 vols. 12mo. &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PORTER (Francis), an Irish divine of the Roman church, was born in the county of Meath; he entered into the order of recolets, and was professor of theology in the convent of St. Isidore at Rome. James II. appointed him his historiographer. He died in 1702. His works are, 1. Securis Evangelica ad hæresis radices posita; 2. Palinodia religionis prætense reformatæ; 3. Compendium Annalium Ecclesiasticorum regni Hiberniæ, 4to.; 4. Systema decretorum dogmaticorum ab initio nascentis Ecclesiæ per summos Pontifices, concilia generalia et particularia huc usque editorum, 1698.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PORTES (Philip des), a French poet, was born at Chartres. He was canon of the holy chapel at Paris, and obtained several ecclesiastical benefices by the patronage of the duke of Anjou, but he refused the episcopal dignity. He died in 1606. His works are, a Translation of the Psalms; imitations of Ariosto; Christian Poems; the Amours of Hippolytus and Diana, &c.—Moreri.

PORTUGAL, was part of the antient Lusitania, and was conquered by the Romans about 200 B. C. It was afterwards possessed by the Alans, the Goths, and the Moors. In 1080 count Henry, son-in-law of the king of Leon, conquered a great part of the country, and his son Alonzo made himself complete master of it in 1146. On the death of Henry king of Portugal, Philip II. of Spain seized upon the kingdom; but in 1640 John duke of Braganza broke off the Spanish yoke, and was crowned king of Portugal; since which it has remained an independent state.—Univ. Hist.

PORUS (Francis), a native of Candia. He became professor of Greek at Ferrara, where he was patronized by the duke and duchess; but on the death of the former he quitted Italy, and went to Geneva, where he openly professed the protestant religion. He died there in 1581. His works are, 1. Additions to the Greek Dictionary of Constantine, fol.; 2. Commentaries upon Pindar, Thucydides, Longinus, Xenophon, and other antient authors. His son Amilius Porus was professor of Greek at Heidelberg, and the author of Dictionarum Ionicum et Doricum, Græco-Latinum, 2 vols. 8vo.; a translation of Suidas, and other good works.—Moreri.

PORUS, king of part of India, near the river Hydaspes, on the banks of which he was defeated by Alexander, who asking him how he would wish to be treated, "As a king," said Porus. This answer so pleased the victor, that he not only restored him to his estates, but added thereto several provinces.—Quintus Curtius.

POSIDIPPUS, a Greek poet, who flourished B. C. 280. He wrote several dramatic pieces which are lost. There was another poet of the same name who wrote epigrams, which are cited by Athenæus and Stobæus.—Vossius de Poet. Græc. Suidas

POSSEVIN (Anthony), a Jesuit, was born at Mantua. He distinguished himself greatly as a preacher, and pope Gregory XIII. employed him in several important affairs. He died at Ferrara in 1611, aged 78. His principal works are, 1. Bibliotheca Selecta de ratione Studiorum, 2 vols. folio; 2. Description of Muscovy, in Latin, folio; 3. Miles Christianus; 4. Confutatio Ministrorum Transilvaniæ et Francisci Davidis de Trinitate, &c. His nephew, Anthony Possévin, a physician of Mantua, wrote Gonzagærum Mantuæ et Montisferrati Ducum Historia, 1628, 4to.—Moreri.

POSSIDONIUS, an astronomer of Alexandria, who flourished before Ptolemy, and undertook to ascertain the circumference of the earth, which he made to be thirty thousand furlongs. There was also a stoic philosopher of this name who was a native of Apamea in Syria, and taught with reputation at Rhodes, B. C. 90. Josephus charges him with having invented the calumny against the Jews, that they worshipped the head of an ass.—Vossius de Mathem.

POSSR (Francis), a celebrated painter, was born at Haerlem. In 1647 he went to the West Indies, where he remained many years, and painted several fine views in those parts. He died at Haerlem in 1680.—Houbraken.

POSTEL (William), was born at Dolerie, in Normandy, in 1510, of poor parents, who died of the plague when he was a child. On going to Paris he associated himself to some young scholars, and was admitted a student in the college of St. Barbe, where he made a great progress in learning. Francis I. apprized of his merit, sent him into the East, to collect rare manuscripts, and on his return he was appointed royal professor of mathematics and languages. But on account of his attachment to the chancellor Poyet, he was deprived of his places by the queen of Navarre. He then went to Rome, where he turned Jesuit, but was expelled from the order, and imprisoned, for maintaining that the authority of councils was superior to that of popes. On gaining his liberty he went to Venice, where he formed an intimacy with an old woman, who was far gone in mystic reveries. Postel started a strange notion, that women had been left without redemption, but that this was now accomplished by mother Joan, the name of this visionary. For his wild fancies he was again imprisoned, but recovered his liberty, and went to Paris, from whence he was obliged to remove to Germany. He afterwards wrote a retraction, and was suffered to return to Paris, where he was restored to his professorship, but again relapsed, and was confined in a monastery. He died in 1581. He wrote Clavis abconditorum a constitutione Mundi, 12mo. 1547; Description of the Holy Land; History of the Gauls; De Phœnicum litteris; de originibus nationum; Alcorani et Evangelii concordia, 8vo; De Linguz Phœnicis seu Hebraicæ excellentiæ, &c.—Moreri.

POSTHUMUS (Marcus Cælius Latienus), a Roman general in the middle of the third century, who was elected emperor in Gaul on the death of Valerian, in 261. He defeated the Germans in several actions, and displayed talents and virtues worthy of his dignity; but having associated his son, who possessed eminent virtues and ability, in the government with him, the soldiers mutinied and put them to death in 267.—Univ. Hist.

POSTLEGHWAYE (Malachi), a merchant of London, who published a "Commercial Dictionary," in 2 vols. folio, a work of considerable labour and utility. He died in 1767.

POTAMON, a philosopher of Alexandria in the reign of Augustus. He was the chief of a sect called the Eclectic, because the opinions professed by it were drawn from the various systems then known.—Ding. Laert.

POTAMON, of Lesbos, or Mitylene, an orator, who flourished in the time of Tiberius, was the son of the philosopher Lesbonax. He was the author of an apocryphic on Tiberius, who shewed him great distinction.—Vossius.

POTE (Joseph), an ingenious bookseller and printer of Eton, who published the History and Antiquities of Windsor Castle, and of the Royal College and Chapel of St. George, 4to. He died in 1787.—Gent. Mag.

POTEMKIN (Gregory Alexander), a Russian prince, was born in 1736, at Smolensk, of a Polish family. He entered early into the horse-guards, and being noticed by the empress Catherine, she made him minister of war, in which capacity he suggested the idea of taking the Crimea, and building the city of Cherson, the foundations of which were laid in 1778. Potemkin greatly ornamented that city. In 1787 he renewed the war against Turkey, and put himself at the head of the army. The year following he took Ocza-kow, where he committed horrible cruelties, by putting the inhabitants to the sword. For this bloody service, however, he obtained the title of chief of the Cossacks, and other favours from the empress. He acquired prodigious riches, and possessed an almost uncontrollable power. Potemkin was a man of most debauched principles, and an inordinate epicure, which produced a disorder that carried him off as he was travelling, in 1791. His remains were interred under a magnificent mausoleum at Cherson. He is said to have aspired to the duchy of Courland, and to the kingdom of Poland.—Tooke's Hist. Russia. Cass's Travels Nouv. Dict. Hist.

POTENGER (John), an English writer, was born at Winchester in 1647. He was educated at Corpus Christi college, Oxford, after which he entered of the Temple, and was called to the bar. He died at Dorchester in 1733. Mr. Potenger wrote a poem on Death; and translated the Life of Agricola from Tacitus.—Nichols's Collection of Poets.

POTER (Paul), a painter, was born at Enckuyfen in 1625, and died at Amsterdam in 1654. He excelled in painting landscapes and cattle; and in representing the effect of the meridian sun upon objects he stands unrivalled.—Houbraken.

POTT (Percival), an eminent surgeon, was born at London in 1713. After serving his apprenticeship to Mr. Nourse, he entered on practice; in 1746 he was elected surgeon to St. Bartholomew's hospital, and in 1764 a fellow of the royal society. Mr. Pott invented some surgical instruments, and wrote a Treatise on the Hernia; another on Wounds of the Head; and Observations on the Fistula Lachrymalis; which with some other pieces were published in 2 vols. 8vo. He died in 1788.—Hutchinson's Biog. Med.

POTT (John Henry), a German chemist, who published, 1. De Sulphuribus Metal-lorum, 1738, 4to.; 2. Observationes Circa Sal, 1741, 2 vols. 4to. These works are highly esteemed. The author was a member of several learned societies.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

POTTER (Christopher), a learned divine, was born in Westmoreland in 1591. He became a student of Queen's college, Oxford, afterwards fellow, and in 1626 provost of that society. In 1635 he obtained the deanry of Worcester, and in 1646 the king nominated him to the deanry of Durham, but he died the same year. He published a sermon at the consecration of his uncle, Dr. Barnaby Potter, bishop of Carlisle. He was also the author of some pieces on Predestination, against the Calvinists.—Wood, A. O.

POTTER (Francis), an ingenious divine, was born in Wiltshire, and educated at Oxford, after which he took orders, and in 1637 succeeded his father in the living of Kilmington. He had a good taste for painting and mechanics, and having presented an hydraulic machine to the royal society, was chosen a member of that learned body. He wrote a curious book on the mystic number of 666 in the Revelations, and died in 1678.—Wood, A. O.

POTTER (John), a learned prelate, was born at Wakefield in Yorkshire, in 1674, and at the age of fourteen entered a battler of University college, Oxford, where he took his degree of B. A. and published his Variantes Lectiones ad Plutarchi, &c. for the use of young students. In 1694 he was elected fellow of Lincoln college, and became an eminent tutor. On being appointed chaplain to archbishop Tenison, he removed to Lambeth, and in 1708 became regius professor of divinity. In 1715 he was preferred to the see of Oxford, from whence in 1737 he was translated to Canterbury. He died in 1747. Besides the above work the archbishop published, 1. Antiquities of Greece, 2 vols. 8vo.; 2. Discourse on Church Government, 8vo.; 3. an edition of Lycophron; 4. an edition of Clemens Alexandrinus. His theological works have been collected in 3 vols. 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

POTTER (Robert), an English divine, was educated at Emmanuel college, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree in 1788. Late in life he obtained the living of Lowestoff, in Suffolk, and a prebend in the cathedral of Norwich. He is advantageously known in the republic of letters by his excellent translations of Sophocles, Euripides, and Æschylus. He was also the author of a Vindication of Gray the poet, against Dr. Johnson. He died in August 1804.—Genl. Mag.

POUGET (Francis Amé), priest of the oratory, and doctor of the Sorbonne, was born at Montpellier in 1666. He became vicar of St. Roch at Paris, and in that office is said to have converted La Fontaine; on which subject he wrote a curious letter, published by Desmolets. He died in 1723. He wrote, 1. Catechism of Montpellier; where he had superintended a seminary. It is a body of divinity, printed first in French in 5 vols. 12mo. and translated into Latin in 2 vols. folio.; 2. Christian Instructions on the Duties of the Knights of Malta, 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

POULLE (Louis), preacher to the French king, and abbot of Nogent, died at Avignon in 1781, aged 79. His abilities as a preacher were very great, and his sermons, published in 1778, 2 vols. 12mo. possess a noble eloquence, enriched with fine images, and full of sentiment. The abbé Poulle had also a poetical genius, and obtained the prize at Toulouse in 1732 and 1733.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

POUPART (Francis), a naturalist, was born at Mans, and went to Paris early in life, where he assiduously applied to experimental philosophy, and natural history. He also studied surgery, and became doctor in medicine at Rheims. He died in 1709. He wrote a Description of the Leech, in the Journal des Savans; a Memoir on the Hermaphrodite-insects; History of the Formica-leo, and the Formica-pulver. He was a member of the academy of sciences, in whose memoirs are several of his papers.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

POURBUS (Peter and Francis), father and son, two Flemish painters of the 16th century. The first painted animals and landscapes; and the other history and portrait.

The father died at Antwerp in 1583, and the son at Paris in 1622.—D'Argenville.

POURCROT (Edme), professor of philosophy in the college of Mazarin, at Paris, and rector of the university, where he died in 1734, aged 83. He wrote, Institutiones Philosophicæ, 5 vols. 12mo. and some other esteemed works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

POURPOUR (Francis), a physician, was born at Paris in 1664, and died there in 1741. He wrote three Letters on a New System of the Brain, 4to.; Dissertation on a New Method of Operating for the Cataract, 12mo.; on Diseases of the Eyes, 4to. He was also a good botanist, and left a MS. Herbal in 30 large volumes.—Ibid.

POUSSIN (Nicholas le), an eminent painter, was born at Andely in Normandy, in 1594. He studied in Italy, where he applied principally to landscape. On his return to France he was named first painter to the king. He was also appointed to ornament the gallery of the Louvre, but being crossed in his designs in that great work, he went again to Rome, and died there in 1665.—D'Argenville.

POUSSIN (Gaspar), a painter, whose real name was Dughet, but he took that of Poussin, his sister having married Nicholas Poussin. His landscapes, particularly those which represent land storms, are inimitably fine. He died about 1675.—Ibid.

POWELL (David), a learned antiquary, was born in Denbighshire about 1552, and educated at Oxford, where he took his degree of D.D. He died in 1590, and was buried in the church of Ruabon in Denbighshire, of which he was vicar. He published Caradoc's History of Wales, in 1584, 4to.; Annotationes in Itinerarium Cambrie Scriptæ per Giraldum, 8vo.; Annot. in Cambr. Descriptionum; De Britannica Historia recte intelligenda.—Wood, A. O.

POWELL (William Samuel), an eminent divine, was born at Colchester in 1717, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, of which he became successively fellow and master. In 1766 he obtained the archdeaconry of Colchester, to which were added other preferments. Dr. Powell published a famous Sermon on Subscription to the Articles; and some other excellent Discourses. He died in 1775.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

POWELL (George), an English actor, who was considered as the rival of Betterton, but his propensity to drinking allowed Wilkes, another rival, to surpass him in his own line. He died in 1714. He wrote "Alphonso king of Naples," and some other dramatic pieces.—Biog. Dram.

POWELL (Foster), an English pedestrian, who frequently walked from London to York in a very short time, upon which great wagers were always laid. He was a writer in an attorney's office, and died in poverty in 1793, aged 59.—Genl. Mag.

POWELL (Thomas), an eminent antiquary

ry and political writer, who, in 1757, was appointed governor of Massachusetts's Bay, from whence he removed two years afterwards to New Jersey; but in a short time he was appointed governor, captain-general, and vice-admiral of South Carolina. In all these situations he shewed considerable abilities. In 1761 he returned to England, and was nominated director-general of the office of controul, and colonel in the army. In 1768 he was returned member of parliament for Tregony in Cornwall; and in that capacity he strenuously opposed the American war. In 1775 he sat for Minehead; but retired from parliament in 1780. He died at Bath Feb. 25, 1805. Governor Pownall wrote several political pamphlets; a Memoir on Drainage and Navigation; Letter to Adam Smith on several points in his Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, 4to.; Topographical Description of part of North America, folio; Treatise on Antiquities, 8vo.; Memorial addressed to the Sovereigns of America; Memorial to the Sovereigns of Europe and the Atlantic, 8vo.—Monthly Mag.

POYNINGS (sir Edward) a gentleman of Kent, who was sent by Henry VII. to Ireland, which he governed with great courage and prudence. After subduing the earls of Desmond and Kildare, he convened a parliament which is rendered famous for the statutes enacted in it. In the reign of Henry VIII. Poynings was a privy counsellor, and appointed governor of Tournay.—Rapin.

POZZO (Andrew), an Italian painter and architect, was born at Trent in 1642, and died in 1709. He ornamented the church of St. Ignatius at Rome with some fine pictures; and wrote two volumes on perspective, but contrary to the true principles of the art.—D'Argenville.

PRADON (Nicholas), a poet, was born at Rouen, and died at Paris in 1698. He wrote some tragedies, one of which, Phædra and Hippolytus, acted in 1677, was very successful, and set up in opposition to Racine by those who were envious of that writer's great reputation. The works of Pradon were printed together in 1744, 2 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

PRATT (Charles), earl Camden, was the third son of sir John Pratt, chief justice of the court of king's bench, and born in 1713. He received his education first at Eton, and afterwards at King's college, Cambridge, where he took his degree of master of arts, and then entered of the Inner Temple. In due time he was called to the bar, but did not make any progress in that profession for several years. At length, by the interest of Henley, afterwards lord chancellor, he obtained considerable practice and the friendship of Mr. Pitt. On the advancement of Henley to the house of lords in 1757, Mr. Pratt was appointed attorney-general; and in 1761 made chief justice of the common-pleas. In this elevated station he distinguished himself by his conduct in the affair of Mr. Wilkes, whom, after a very elaborate declaration of the law on the case, he ordered to be discharged. For this the corporation of London voted him the freedom of the city in a gold box, and his portrait to be placed in Guildhall. He received similar marks of distinction from several other places. In 1765 he was created a peer, and the year following was advanced to the dignity of lord chancellor, in which office he acted with great credit to himself and justice to the public. Having on the occasion of the Middlesex election expressed his opinion decidedly against the court, the seals were taken from him, on which several other members of the administration resigned their places. On the question of libels, lord Camden always opposed the doctrine laid down by high authority, viz. that juries were only the judges of the mere matter of fact, and not of the law. In the whole of the American war he constantly took the side of his great friend in resisting the coercive measures of government. In 1782 he was appointed president of the council, which office he resigned the following year; but afterwards was re-appointed, and held it to his death in 1774.—Europ. Mag. vol. xxvi.

PRAXAGORAS, a Greek historian who lived about A. D. 345. He was a native of Athens, and wrote a History of the Sovereigns of that country; and another of Constantine; also one of Alexander the Great.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

PRAXEAS, an heresiarch of the second century. After opposing the Mountanists with zeal, he fell into the error that there is only one person in the Trinity, the same who was crucified. He was followed by the Sabellians and others. Tertullian wrote against him.—Dupin.

PRAXITELES, a Grecian sculptor, who flourished 364 B. C. He executed several fine statues of Venus, and of the courtesa Phryne.—Pliny Nat. Hist.

PREMONTVAL (Peter le Guey de), was born at Charenton in 1716, and became a member of the academy at Berlin, where he died in 1767. He wrote, 1. Monogamia, or a treatise on Single Marriages, 4 vols. 8vo.; 2. Preservative against the Corruption of the French Language in Germany, 8vo.; 3. The Mind of Fontenelle, 12mo.; 4. Thoughts upon Liberty, &c. He was a Socinian, and a favourer of the doctrine of Epicurus.—Novæ. Dict. Hist.

PRESTON (John), an English divine, was master of Emmanuel college, Cambridge, and died in 1628. He was a patron of the puritans, and wrote several books much esteemed by that party. One Thomas Preston, of King's college, Cambridge, performed so well in the tragedy of Deio before queen Elizabeth, in 1564, that she settled a pension of 20l. a year on him. He was afterwards doctor of civil law, and master of Trinity hall in that university.—Wood.

PRETI (Jerome), an Italian poet, was a native of Tuscany, and died at Barcelona in 1626. His poems, printed in 1666, in 12mo. are highly esteemed.—Tiraboschi.

PREVILLE (Peter Louis Dubus de), a celebrated French performer, was destined for the ecclesiastical state, but having quitted his parents he became labourer to some masons, after which he joined a company of strolling players. His talents were discovered at Lyons, from whence he removed to Paris, in 1753, and on playing before Louis XV. that monarch took him into the number of his comedians. His expression was uncommonly fine, and he easily adapted himself to any age or character. He died in 1800.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PREVOT d'EXILES (Anthony Francis), was born in 1697 at Hesdin, in the province of Artois. He had his education among the jesuits, and took the habit of the order, which he afterwards renounced. He next became a Benedictine, but quitted that society also, and went to Holland, where he formed a connection with an agreeable woman. From Holland he passed over to England, and in 1734 returned to Paris, where he died of an apoplexy in 1763. He translated Clarissa Harlowe and Sir Charles Grandison into French; and was the author of the Memoirs of a Man of Quality, a romance of merit in 6 vols.; also of the History of Cleveland, natural Son of Cromwell, 6 vols.; Pro and Con, a periodical journal; the Dean of Coleraine, a novel; a General History of Voyages, &c.—Ibid.

PRICE (sir John), an eminent antiquary of Brecknockshire, was one of the commissioners employed to survey the monasteries that were to be dissolved. He died about 1553. He wrote a Defence of British History in Answer to Polydore Virgil, which was published by his son Richard in 1573.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

PRICE (John), was born at London in 1600. Having suffered considerably in the civil wars, he went to Florence, where he turned Roman catholic; and the grand duke appointed him keeper of the medals and Greek professor. He afterwards removed to Rome, where he died in 1676. He wrote Notes on the Psalms, the Gospel of St. Mathew, and the Acts; also Notes upon Apuleius, 1650, 8vo.

PRICE (Richard), a dissenting minister and political writer, was born in Glamorganshire in 1723. He received his education in a private academy, after which he became minister to a congregation at Newington in Middlesex; from whence he removed to that of Hackney. He was also lecturer of the meeting-house in the Old Jewry. About 1764 he became a member of the royal society, and obtained the degree of doctor in divinity from a Scotch university. At the commencement of the American war he distinguished himself by his zeal in behalf of democracy, and published his Observations on Liberty and Civil Government, for which he had the thanks of the City of London. He also wrote Observations on the National Debt, in which he endeavoured to prove that the kingdom was on the eve of bankruptcy. This was above thirty years ago, and the prediction has not been accomplished. Soon after the breaking out of the French revolution, Dr. Price preached an inflammatory discourse at the Old Jewry, in which he triumphed in such a manner on the misfortunes of the royal family of France, as called forth the keen animadversions of Mr. Burke. The doctor died in 1791. His other works are, 1. Four Dissertations on Providence and Prayer; on the Evidences of a Future State; on the Importance of Christianity; 2. A Review of the Principal Questions and Difficulties in Morals, 8vo.; 3. Observations on Reversionary Payments, Annuities, &c. 2 vols. 8vo.; 4. Discussion of the Doctrines of Materialism and Necessity, in a correspondence with Dr. Priestley, 8vo.; 5. Essay on the Population of England and Wales, 8vo.; 6. A Volume of Sermons.—Europ. Mag. Gent. Mag.

PRIDEAUX (John), a learned prelate, was born in 1578, at Stowford in Devonshire, of poor parents. He was admitted of Exeter college, Oxford, of which he became fellow, and on the death of Dr. Holland was chosen rector. He was afterwards appointed regius professor of divinity; in which he displayed considerable talents. He also served the office of vice-chancellor, and in 1641 was advanced to the bishopric of Worcester, but was deprived of the revenues by the rebellion. He died in 1650. He wrote Fasciculus Controversiarum Theologicarum; several lectures, orations, and other works, in Latin.—Wood, A. O.

PRIDEAUX (Humphrey), a learned divine, was born at Padstow, in Cornwall, in 1648. He was educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. In 1676 he published the Marmora Oxoniensia, in one volume folio. This is an account of the Arundel marbles, with a comment on them, and gained the editor universal reputation. It also procured him the patronage of the lord chancellor Finch, who gave him a living in the city of Oxford. In 1681 he was promoted to a prebend of Norwich, of which cathedral he became dean in 1702. In 1710 he was cut for the stone in his bladder by an eminent lithotomist of London, but being left to the care of a young surgeon, he was so ill-treated as ever after to be incapable of voiding his urine by the natural passage. Being thus disabled from public duty, he devoted himself wholly to writing, and produced his Connection of the Old and New Testament, 2 vols. folio, and 4 vols. 8vo. This admirable work has been translated into several languages and passed through numerous editions. Dean Prideaux died at Norwich in 1724. Besides the above works he was the author of Directions to Church-wardens, 12mo.; the Life of Mahomet, 8vo.; the Original Right of Tythes, 8vo.; and some pamphlets, and a single sermon.—Biog. Brit.

PRIESTLEY (Joseph), was born at Field-head in Yorkshire, in 1733, and educated at the academy of Daventry, under Dr. Astworth. At the age of twenty-two he became assistant minister to the independent congregation of Needham-market, in Suffolk, after which he was chosen pastor of a congregation at Nantwich, in Cheshire, where also he kept a school. In 1761 he removed to Warrington as tutor in the belles-lettres in the academy there. His connection with that institution ended in 1768, when he accepted an invitation from the dissenters at Leeds, where he published several theological works which attracted considerable notice and some controversy. In 1770 he quitted Leeds to reside with the earl of Shelburne, afterwards marquis of Lansdowne, as librarian and philosophical companion. In 1775 he published his Examination of Dr. Reid on the Human Mind; Dr. Beattie on Truth; and Dr. Oswald's Appeal to Common Sense; in which he treated those gentlemen with great ridicule and contempt. His Disquisitions on Matter and Spirit, printed in 1777, excited great surprize, even among the author's admirers, as therein he explicitly denied the soul's immateriality. At this time he also appeared as a great champion for the doctrine of philosophical necessity, in which he had his friend Dr. Price for an opponent. While thus engaged in metaphysical and theological disputations, he pursued his philosophical enquiries with equal ardour, the result of which appeared in the Philosophical Transactions, and in separate publications, particularly his Experiments and Observations on Different Kinds of Air, 2 vols. 8vo. The term of his engagement with lord Shelburne having expired, Dr. Priestley, with a pension of 150l. a year, retired to Birmingham, where he became pastor of a large congregation of unitarian dissenters in 1780. He there published several of his works; as, Letters to Bishop Newcome on the Duration of Christ's Ministry; and the History of the Corruptions of Christianity, 2 vols. 8vo. This last brought him into a controversy with Dr. Horley, since bishop of St. Asaph. The history was also thoroughly answered and refuted in the Monthly Review. Dr. Priestley, however, still persevered and published his History of Early Opinions concerning the Person of Christ. In 1791 a riot happened at Birmingham, owing to an imprudent meeting of some of the inhabitants to celebrate the anniversary of the French revolution. Several houses were pulled down and burnt; and Dr. Priestley's among the rest, in which he lost his library, manuscripts, and philosophical apparatus. In consequence of this disgraceful transaction he retired to London, and for some time officiated to the congregation at Hackney, of which Dr. Price had been minister. He had also a situation in the dissenting college there. But his mind being greatly soured by late events, he went to America in 1794, and settled at Northumberland, in the state of Pennsylvania, where he died in February 1804. Dr. Priestley was a fellow of the royal society, and of several learned bodies in different parts of the world. He lived to see his phlogistic system of chemistry universally exploded, yet he persisted in defending it to the last. He was also equally tenacious of his Socinianism, and had a controversy on the subject with Dr. Linn, of Philadelphia. His writings are too various to be enumerated. The principal and best are his Charts of History and Biography; his History of Electricity; the History and Present State of Discoveries relating to Vision, Light, and Colours; Lectures on the Theory and History of Language, and on the Principles of Oratory and Criticism.—Monthly Mag. May, 1804.

PRIEUR (Philip), professor of belles-lettres in the university of Paris, was a native of Normandy, and died in 1680. He edited the works of Cyprian, Minutius Felix, Arnobius, &c. in folio; and published Dissertatio de Litteris canonicis, 8vo.—Mor.

PRIMATTICIO (Francis), a painter and architect, was born at Bologna in 1490. He was greatly employed by Francis I. of France, who appointed him commissary-general of the royal buildings. He died at Paris in 1570.—Ibid. Felibien.

PRIMEROSE (Gilbert), a Scotch divine, who was created D.D. at Oxford, by mandamus from James I. He was minister of the French church in London, chaplain to the king, and canon of Windsor. He wrote, Jacob's Vow opposed to the Vows of Monks and Friars, in French, 4 vols. 4to.; the Trumpet of Zion, in 18 Sermons; and some other theological works. He died in 1642. His son James Primerose became doctor of physic, after which he settled in Yorkshire, and wrote, 1. Exercitationes & animadversiones in Lib. G. Harvæi de motu cordis et circulatione sanguinis, 4to.; 2. De vulgi in medicina erroribus, 12mo. This last was translated into English by Dr. Wittie, 1651, 8vo. Primerose was also the author of some other medical pieces, now obsolete.

PRINGLE (sir John), was born in Roxburghshire in 1707. He was educated at Edinburgh, where he applied to the study of physic, which he afterwards completed under Boerhaave, at Leyden, where he took his doctor's degree. In 1742 he was appointed physician to the army in Flanders. He afterwards attended the duke of Cumberland in the same capacity against the rebels. He next settled in London, where he obtained great practice, and in 1761 was appointed physician to the queen's household. In 1766 he was created a baronet, and on the death of Mr. West was elected president of the royal society. He was appointed physician to the king, and died in 1782. Sir John Pringle wrote Observations on Diseases of the Army, 8vo.; Memoirs upon septic and antiseptic Substances, for which he received the gold medal of the royal society, 8vo.; Observations on the Treatment of Fevers in Hospitals and Prisons; Anniversary Discourses before the Royal Society.—Europ. Mag. Gent. Mag.

PRIOLO (Benjamin), was born at St. John-de-Angely, in the Venetian states, in 1602. He studied at Leyden, and afterwards at Padua. The duke of Rohan took him into his confidence, after whose death, in 1638, Priolo was employed by the court of France in several important negotiations, for which he received a pension. He died at Lyons in 1667. He wrote a History of France, in Latin, the best edition of which is that of Leipzig, in 1686, 8vo.—Moreri.

PRIOR (Matthew), an English poet, was born in London, in 1664. On losing his father when young, the care of him devolved to his uncle, a vintner, near Charing-cross, who sent him to Westminster school, but afterwards took him home with an intent of bringing him up to his own business. However, he still pursued his classical studies as occasion permitted, which proved the means of his advancement, for happening to explain a disputed passage in Horace, to some company at his uncle's house, the earl of Dorset, one of the party, became his patron, and sent him to St. John's college, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow. In 1687 he wrote, in conjunction with Mr. Charles Montague, the Hind and Panther transferred to the story of the Country Mouse and City Mouse, by way of burlesquing a piece of Dryden's. In 1690 he was appointed English secretary in the congress at the Hague, and gave so much satisfaction that king William made him gentleman of his bed-chamber. In 1696 he was secretary at the treaty of Ryfwick, and the following year went to Ireland, as principal secretary of state. Soon after this he was appointed secretary to the embassy in France; and he had not been long there when going to see the curiosities at Versailles, the officer in attendance shewed him the fine paintings by Le Brun of the victories of Louis XIV. asking at the same time whether king William's actions were also to be seen in his palace: "No, sir," answered Prior, "the monuments of my master's actions are to be seen every where but in his own house." In 1700 he took his place as one of the commissioners of the board of trade, and was also elected into parliament for East Grinstead. He joined with Swift and others in writing a political paper, called the Examiner, in 1710, and next year was appointed minister plenipotentiary to the court of France, where he continued during the remainder of queen Anne's reign. In 1715 he was arrested by order of the house of commons, and committed to prison. He was even excepted out of the act of grace; but in 1717 he recovered his liberty without having been brought to trial. He died at Wimple, the seat of the earl of Oxford, in 1721. Besides his poems, which are easy, lively, and often elegant, he wrote the History of his Own Times.—Biog. Brit.

PRISCIANUS, a grammarian of Caesarea, who flourished about A. D. 525. His works were printed by Aldus Manutius, at Venice in 1476, folio. He was so very exact in his judgment and criticism, that to 'break Priscian's head' is a proverb for false grammar.—Moreri.

PRISCILLIAN, an heresiarch of the 4th century, was a native of Spain. To the errors of the Gnostics and Manichees, he added some of his own. Instantius and Salvianus, two prelates of his own way of thinking, ordained him a bishop. He was beheaded with some of his followers about 384.—Dupin. Mosheim.

PRITZ (John George), professor of divinity at Leipzig, was born there in 1662, and died in 1732. He published an Introduction to the New Testament, 8vo.; De Immortalitate hominis; an Edition of the works of St. Macarius; another of the New Testament, in Greek; and the Letters of Milton.

PROBUS (M. Aurelius Valerius), Roman Emperor, was born of obscure parentage in Pannonia, and rose from being a common soldier to the highest military rank. After the death of the emperor Tacitus, in 276, the eastern army proclaimed Probus as the reward of his valour and integrity. He was also acknowledged by the senate; after which he turned his arms against the Gauls and Goths, whom he completely subdued. He next defeated the Sarmatians, and made an advantageous peace with Persia. The interval of peace he employed in rebuilding cities, and occupying his soldiers in useful works. The Persians having again taken up arms, Probus prepared to attack them, but was murdered by his troops at Sirmich, in 282.—Crevier. Univ. Hist.

PROCCACINI (Camillo), a painter of Bologna, was born in 1546, and died in 1626. His finest piece is a painting of the last supper, in the cathedral of Genoa, the figures in which are larger than life. His brother Julius, who died in 1626, had more genius, and a finer style of painting than Camillo. There were some other painters of this family.—De Piles.

PROCLUS, of Lycia, a platonic philosopher, who died A.D. 485. He wrote severely against the Christian religion; also Commentaries upon Plato, and many other works, printed in 1497, at Venice, in folio.—Vossius de Math.

PROCLUS (St.), patriarch of Constantinople, was the disciple of Chrysostom. He died in 447. His works in Greek were published at Rome in 1630, 4to.—Baillet. Moreri.

PROCOPIUS, a relation of the emperor Julian, to whom he rendered essential services, but after the death of Julian he retired among the barbarians of the Chersonesus. When Valens marched into Syria, Proclus returned to Constantinople, and proclaimed himself emperor, A.D. 365. He forced Valens to abdicate the throne, but the following year he was defeated in Phrygia, and beheaded.—Univ. Hist.

PROCOPIUS, a Greek historian, who was professor of rhetoric at Cæsarea, and was employed by Belisarius as his secretary. Justinian took him into his confidence, and honoured him with the title of Illustrious. He wrote a History of the Wars of the Persians, the Gauls, and the Goths; also a Secret History or Anecdotes. The best edition of his works is that of Paris in 1662, 2 vols. folio.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

PROCOPIUS, of Gaza, a Greek sophist, who lived about A.D. 560. He wrote Commentaries on the Books of Kings, and Chronicles; and also on Isaiah; which have been printed in Greek and Latin, folio.—Moreri.

PRODICUS, a sophist and rhetorician of the isle of Cos, flourished about 396 B.C. He taught at Athens, and had for disciples Euripides, Socrates, and Ilocrates. The Athenians put him to death on pretence that he corrupted the morals of their youth.

PRONAPIDES, a Greek poet, who, according to Diodorus Siculus, was the master of Homer. He is also said to have taught the Greeks to write from the left to the right, they being accustomed before to write in the oriental manner.—Vossius.

PROPERTIUS (Sextus Aurelius), a Latin poet, was born at Moravia, a city in Umbria. He was in great esteem with Mæcenas, Ovid, and Tibullus. He died about 19 B.C. aged 40. His Elegies are usually printed with those of Catullus.—Biog. Classica.

PROSPER (St.), was born in Aquitaine, at the beginning of the fifth century. His youthful life was very licentious, but when his country was ravaged by the barbarians, he altered his conduct, and became a penitent. He was a disciple of St. Augustine, whose memory he zealously defended. He also opposed the Pelagians with confiderable strength, and died about 463. The best edition of his works is that of Paris in 1711, folio. He is not to be confounded with an ecclesiastical writer of this name, who wrote on the predictions and promises of God, and other works. He also lived in the 5th century.—Dupin. Moreri.

PROTAGORAS, a Greek philosopher of Abdera, was at first a potter. He became the disciple of Democritus, to whose system he added atheism, and wrote a book in defence of it, which was publicly burnt at Athens, and the author banished. He died in Sicily about 400 B.C.—Stanley.

PROTOGENES, an ancient painter, was born at Caunus, a city of Rhodes, about 300 B.C. When Demetrius besieged Rhodes, he gave orders that the quarter in which Protopogenes resided should be spared. He had a famous contest with Apelles, whom he vanquished, but there ever after remained a close friendship between them.—Pliny. Quintilian.

PROVENZALE (Marceilo), an Italian painter, was born in 1575, and died in 1639. His superior merit consisted in mosaic, which he executed in an admirable taste.—De Piles.

PRUDENTIUS (Aurelius Clementius), a poet, was born at Saragossa in Spain in 318. He was successively an advocate, a magistrate, and a soldier, and distinguished himself in all these professions. His Latin poems were printed by Elzevir in 1667, 12mo. with the notes of Heinsius.—Moreri.

PRUSIAS, king of Bithynia, who joined the Romans against Antiochus. Hannibal having taken refuge in his dominions, Prusias was about to deliver him up to his enemies, but the unfortunate fugitive perceiving his treachery, slew himself. The cruelties of Prusias gave such offence to his subjects that they revolted and put him to death at the altar of Jupiter, to which he had fled as a sanctuary, B.C. 149.—Univ. Hist.

PRUSSIA. The first people of this country were called Borussians, who were conquered by the knights of the Teutonic order, in 1228. In 1454 the Poles subdued part of Prussia, and completed the conquest of the whole in 1525. Albert, marquis of Brandenburg, the last master of the Teutonic order, obtained from the crown of Poland the eastern part of this country, with the title of duke of Prussia. In 1683 it became independent, and in 1702 it was erected into a kingdom. [See FREDERICK WILLIAM.]

PRYNNE (William), an English lawyer, was born at Swanwick, in Somersetshire, in 1600, and educated at Oriel college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's inn. In 1632 he was tried in the star chamber for writing a libel against the queen, under the title of Histrionastix, or a Discourse on Stage Plays. For this he was sentenced to the pillory, and to pay a heavy fine. Notwithstanding this he went on writing libels against the king and bishops, for which he lost the remainder of his ears in the pillory, and was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. The house of commons released him in 1640. In the long parliament he sat for a borough in Cornwall, and was one of the most bitter persecutors of archbishop Laud. But though he had been active in promoting the rebellion, he was an enemy to Cromwell, who caused him to be imprisoned. At the restoration he was made keeper of the records in the Tower. Prynne died in 1667. He wrote a prodigious number of books, chiefly on politics and religion; also the History of Archbishop Laud, folio; and the Lives of Kings John, Henry III. and Edward I.—Wood, A. O.

PRZYCOVIUS (Samuel), a socinian writer, was driven from Poland with his brethren of that sect in 1658. He then took refuge in Prussia, where he died in 1670, aged 80. His works were printed in 1 vol. folio, 1692.—Preface to his Works.

PSALMANAZAR (George), an impostor, who is supposed to have been a native of France. After obtaining a good education in some monastery, he went into Germany, where he pretended to be a Japanese converted to christianity. Being reduced to distress he entered into a Scotch regiment in Flanders, the chaplain of which brought him to the communion of the church of England, and then employed him in translating the church catechism into Japanese. This he sent to the bishop of London, who was so pleased with it that he sent for Psalmanazar, who now passed for a native of Formosa, and to support the character lived upon raw flesh. Here he formed a pretended Formosan grammar, and a history of that island, which imposed upon many learned persons. At length the deceit was discovered, and Psalmanazar was abandoned by his patrons. He next engaged with the booksellers in compiling the Antient Universal History, his share of which shews considerable erudition. His latter years made ample amends for his former irregularities; and he died penitent in 1763.—Life by Himself.

PSAMMENITUS, king of Egypt, succeeded his brother Amasis 525 B. C. Cambyes declared war against him, and having taken him prisoner, put him to death after reigning six months.—Univ. Hist.

PSAMMETICUS, king of Egypt, was the son of Bocoris, who was slain by Sabacon, king of Ethiopia. After the retreat of Sabacon, the Egyptians recalled Psammeticus from Syria, and entrusted him with the government in conjunction with eleven others. His colleagues out of envy drove him to the sea coast; but having gained assistance from the Ionians and Carians, he gave battle to his enemies, and defeated them at Memphis, B. C. 670, on which he became master of all Egypt. He greatly encouraged the Greeks, and enriched his country by commerce. He was also a patron of the arts and sciences, and died in 616 B. C.—Univ. Hist.

PSELLUS (Michael), a Greek writer, who lived in the reign of Constantine Ducas, to whose son Michael he was tutor. He wrote, 1. De quatuor Mathematicis Scientiis 1556, 8vo.; 2. De Lapidum virtutibus, 8vo.; 3. De Operatione Dæmonum, 8vo.; 4. De victus ratione, 8vo.; 5. Synopsis Legum, versibus Græcis edita.—Moreri.

PTOLEMY LAGUS, or Soter, king of Egypt, was the son of Arsinoë, concubine of Philip of Macedon. Ptolemy became a great favourite with Alexander the Great, on whose death he obtained Egypt, Lybia, and part of Arabia, to which, on the death of Perdiccas, he added Cæloxyria, Phœnicia, Judæa, and the isle of Cyprus. He made Alexandria his capital, where he built a light-house, called the Pharos, as a guide to pilots for that harbour. He encouraged literature, and formed an academy with a museum at Alexandria. Ptolemy is said to have written the Life of Alexander the Great, and other works, which are lost. He died B. C. 285.—Univ. Hist.

PTOLEMY PHILADELPHUS, the son and successor of the above. He obtained his surname by way of ridicule for having murdered his two brothers. Ptolemy formed an alliance with the Romans. He was a great encourager of commerce, for which purpose he built a city on the Red Sea. He also constructed some considerable fleets both there and in the Mediterranean. He was a liberal patron of learned men, and is said to have caused the Scriptures to be rendered into Greek in that version called the Septuagint. He died in 246 B. C. aged 61.

PTOLEMY EUERGETES, the son and successor of the preceding. He declared war against Antiochus Theus, to avenge the death of his sister Berenice, the wife of that monarch. Ptolemy made himself master of Syria and Cilicia, and was extending his conquests when the news of a revolt recalled him to Egypt. He soon quelled the insurgents, and by the prudence of his reign acquired the name of Euergetes, or benefactor. He died B. C. 221; and was succeeded by PTOLEMY PHILOPATER, so called from his cruelty in poisoning his father and mother, and several of his relations. He is said to have exposed a number of Jews on a plain to his elephants; but those animals, instead of destroying the intended victims, fell upon the Egyptians; on which the tyrant out of fear conferred great favours on the Jewish nation. He died B. C. 204.

PTOLEMY EPIPHANES, succeeded his father Philopater, and at the age of fourteen assumed the reins of government. He sacrificed his tutor Aristomenes, who had governed with the greatest fidelity in his minority. Ptolemy was poisoned B.C. 180. Ptolemy Philometor succeeded him; but having declared war against Antiochus Epiphanes, he was taken prisoner by him. The Egyptians then placed Physcon his brother on the throne, whom Antiochus deposed, and restored Philometor, who died of a wound received in battle against Alexander Balas, king of Syria, B.C. 116.

PTOLEMY PHYSCON, so called from the prominence of his belly, succeeded his brother Philometor. On account of the persecutions which they endured, the people of Alexandria emigrated into Asia; and his subjects having revolted against him, he murdered his son Memphitis from suspicion. He died B.C. 116.

PTOLEMY LATHYRUS, so called from an excrescence on his nose, resembling a pea. He succeeded his father Physcon, but was soon after driven to Cyprus by his mother Cleopatra, who placed the crown on her son Ptolemy Alexander. Lathyrus having mustered an army invaded Judea, and committed great cruelties on the Jews; after which he marched to Egypt, but was unsuccessful. On the death of Alexander he ascended the throne. He died 81 B.C.

PTOLEMY AULETES, which name he obtained from his skill in playing on the flute, was the illegitimate son of the preceding, and ascended the throne after the death of Alexander III. He ceded Cyprus to the Romans with a large tribute, which so displeased his subjects, that they revolted, and placed his daughter Berenice on the throne. By the help of his allies he recovered his dominions, and put his daughter to death. He died B.C. 51.

PTOLEMY-DIONYSIUS, or Bacchus, king of Egypt, the son of the preceding, ascended the throne with his sister Cleopatra, whom he married, according to the will of his father. The great Pompey, who had been his guardian, fled into Egypt after his defeat at Pharfalia, and was basely murdered by him. Ptolemy, who was no more faithful to Cæsar than he had been to his rival, was drowned in the Nile after being defeated by the Romans, B.C. 46.

PTOLEMY (Claudius), a mathematician of Pelusium, lived about the year 138. He is celebrated for his System of the World, in which he placed the earth as the centre. His Geography is a valuable work, and was printed at Amsterdam in 1618, folio; his Treatise on Astrology, in 1535, and his Harmonica, at Oxford in 1683.—Festus de Mathe.

PUBLIUS SYRUS, a comic poet of Syria, who flourished at Rome 41 B.C. He was slave to a patrician named Domitius, who gave him his liberty. A collection of Moral Sentences by him is extant, printed at Leyden in 1708, 8vo.—Moreri.

Pucci (Francis), was born of a noble family at Florence. He quitted the Roman church and embraced the Protestant religion, on which he went to Poland, but returned to his former religion at Prague in 1535. Afterwards he went over again to the protestant communion, and being seized at Salzburg, was sent to Rome, and burnt alive about 1600. He held that Christ by his death had made satisfaction for the sins of all men; which opinion he maintained in a book dedicated to Clement VIII. 1592, 8vo.—Bayle.

PUFFENDORF (Samuel de), an eminent civilian, was born at Fleh, in Upper Saxony, in 1631. He studied at Leipsic, where he applied to philosophy, law, and the mathematics. In 1658 he was appointed tutor to the son of Coyer, ambassador of the king of Sweden to the court of Denmark, but war breaking out between the two countries, the household of the ambassador was thrown into prison, and Puffendorf with the rest. There he composed his Treatise on Universal Jurisprudence, which was printed at the Hague in 1650. This work obtained him the place of professor of natural law at Heidelberg, from whence in 1670 he removed, by the invitation of the king of Sweden, to Lunden, and was appointed historiographer to that monarch, who also created him a baron. In 1688 he went to Berlin, where he became counsellor of state, and died in 1694. His other works are, 1. History of Sweden from 1629 to 1654; 2. History of Charles Gustavus, 2 vols. folio; 3. History of Frederic William the Great, elector of Brandenburg, 2 vols. folio; 4. an Historical and Political Description of the Papal State; 5. Introduction to the History of the Principal States of Europe, 8vo.; 6. Treatise on the Law of Nature and Nations, 2 vols. 4to.; 7. Opuscula Juvenilia, &c.—Niceron.

PUGER (Peter), a painter, sculptor, and architect, was born in 1623, at Marseilles. The groupes of Milo of Crotona, and Perseus and Andromeda, at the entrance of the park of Versailles, are proofs of his talents, and several of his paintings are in the churches of Marseilles, Aix, and Toulon. He died in 1694.—D'Argenville.

PULCHERIA (St.) was the daughter of the emperor Arcadius, and partook with her brother, Theodosius the younger, the imperial throne; on his death in 550 she espoused Marcianus, and associated him in the government. She convened the council of Chalcedon in 451, and died in 454. Pulcheria was a great patron of learned and religious men.—Moreri.

PULCI (Lewis), an Italian poet, was born at Florence in 1432, of a noble family. He wrote an epic poem, entitled, Morgante Maggiore, in which are blended sacred and obscene matters in a very disgusting manner. He also wrote a poem on a tournament held at Florence in 1468; entitled, "Giosfra di Lorenzo de Medici." He died about 1487. His brothers Luca and Bernard also distinguished themselves by their poetical talents.—Roscoe's Life of Lorenzo de Medici.

PULIGO, or PULLIO (Domenico), a painter, was born at Florence in 1475, and died in 1527. He excelled in painting portraits.—Pilkington.

PULMANNUS (Theodore), or Poelman, was born at Cranenburg, in the duchy of Cleves, about 1510. He superintended the press of Plantin, at Antwerp, and gave editions of Virgil, Lucan, Juvenal, Horace, Ausonius, and other Latin writers. He died at Salamanca about 1580.—Moreri.

PULTENEY (William), earl of Bath, was born in 1682. He became a member of the house of commons early in life, and opposed the ministry in the reign of queen Anne. In 1714 he was appointed secretary at war; but a difference arising between him and sir Robert Walpole, he became a severe and constant antagonist of that minister, for which his name was erased from the list of privy-counsellors, and put out of the commission of peace. This only made him more violent in his opposition, and at length he succeeded in depriving sir Robert of his place; after which he was created earl of Bath, and admitted again of the privy council. He died without issue in 1764.—English Peerage.

PULTENEY (Richard), a physician and botanist, was born at Loughborough, in Leicestershire, in 1780. He served his apprenticeship to an apothecary, after which he commenced practice at Leicester, where he studied botany with ardour, and corresponded frequently with the Gentleman's Magazine, in the volumes of which are numerous valuable communications on botanical subjects by him, and some on antiquities. Several of his papers also appeared in the Philosophical Transactions. In 1764 he took his doctor's degree at Edinburgh, his inaugural oration for which was de cinchona officinalis. Soon after this he was appointed physician to his relation the earl of Bath, who died a year afterwards. Not long after this event he settled at Blandford in Dorsetshire, where he acquired a considerable practice. In 1781 he published his General View of the Writings of Linnaeus; and in 1790 a work, entitled, Historical and Biographical Sketches of the Progress of Botany in England, 2 vols. 8vo.; to which we have been indebted for much valuable information. He also made considerable communications to the works of others, particularly Nichols's History of Leicestershire, and Gough's edition of Hutchins's Dorsetshire. Dr. Pulteney died in October 1801. He was a fellow of the royal society of London, and other learned bodies at home and abroad.—Life by Dr. Maton, Ato. 1805.

PUNTORMO (Giacomo), an Italian painter, was born in 1493. He was the disciple of Leonardo da Vinci, and completed his studies under Andrea del Sarto. His subjects are chiefly taken from the sacred history. He died in 1558.—De Piles.

PURBACH (George), so called from a village of that name in Germany, where he was born in 1423. He studied philosophy and divinity at Vienna, but devoted himself principally to astronomical pursuits, and died at Vienna in 1462. He translated Ptolemy's Almagest, invented some astronomical instruments, constructed tables, and made numerous observations.—Melch. Adam, in Vit. Germ. Phil.

PURCELL (Henry), an eminent musical composer, was born in 1658. He was brought up in the king's chapel, and at the age of eighteen was made organist of Westminster abbey, and in 1682 one of the organists of the chapel royal. His church music is in the grandest style; and his operas are also very fine. Dryden, whose songs he set, has paid a fine compliment to his talents. He died in 1695, and was buried in Westminster abbey. His principal work is entitled, Orpheus Britannicus. Daniel Purcell, his brother, was organist of Magdalen college, Oxford, and of St. Andrew, Holborn. He was a great punster.—Hawkins. Journey.

PURCHAS (Samuel), an English divine, was born at Thaxted in Essex, in 1577, and educated at Cambridge. In 1604 he obtained the vicarage of Eastwood in his native county; but having engaged in compiling a general collection of voyages, he left his cure to his brother, and settled in London, where he was presented to the rectory of St. Martin, Ludgate. He was also chaplain to archbishop Abbot, and died in 1628. His great work is entitled, Purchas his Pilgrimage, or Relations of the World, &c. 5 vols. folio. It is a collection of vast merit and labour.—Biog. Brit.

PURVER (Anthony), a remarkable instance of patient industry in literature, was born in Hampshire in 1702 of parents who were quakers. He was bred a shoemaker, and had only an ordinary education, but by uncommon application is said to have acquired a competent knowledge of the learned languages. Being of a serious turn he set about reading the Scriptures in the originals, after which he undertook and completed a new translation of them; which was printed at the charge of Dr. John Fothergill, in 2 vols. folio. Purver became a preacher among the quakers, and died at Andover in 1775.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

PUTEANUS (Erycius), or DU PUT, was born at Venloo, in Guelderland, in 1574. He studied at Louvain, after which he became professor of eloquence at Milan in 1601. He succeeded Lipsius in the professorship at Louvain, and was appointed historiographer to the king of Spain. He died in 1646. He wrote a treatise entitled, Statura Belli et Pacis, and other political works.—Nicron.

PURCHUS (Elias), a critic, was born at Antwerp about 1580. He published Salust with fragments and notes; also a collection of the antient grammarians. He died at Stade in 1606.—Moreri.

PUY (Peter du), born at Paris in 1583. He was the author of several historical and political works. He died in 1632.—Ibid.

PUYSEGUR (James de Chastenet, lord of), a brave general, was born of a noble family in Armagnac, in 1600. He was forty-three years in active service, during which he was present at one hundred and twenty sieges, and above thirty battles, without receiving a single wound. He died in 1682. His Memoirs from 1617 to 1658, were printed in 2 vols. 12mo. 1690. His son James de Chastenet, marquis of Puysegur, became marshal of France, and died in 1743, aged 88. He wrote a work on the Art Military, in folio, and 2 vols. 4to. 1748.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

PYLE (Thomas), a learned divine, was born in Norfolk in 1674, and educated at Cambridge, where he took the degree of M. A. after which he became minister of King's Lynn: He displayed great zeal in behalf of Hoadley in the famous Bangorian controversy, for which, when that prelate was bishop of Salisbury, he gave him a prebend in that cathedral. Mr. Pyle wrote an esteemed Paraphrase on the Acts and Epistles; also two volumes of Sermons. He died in 1715.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

PYM (John), a leading man against king Charles the first, was member of parliament for Tavistock, and on account of his great influence with the popular party, called "King Pym." He was a furious demagogue; but it is questioned whether he intended the revolution which he had excited should go to the extent it afterwards did. He died of an imposthume in his bowels, in 1643.—Clarendon.

PYNAKER (Adam), a landscape painter, so called from a village near Delft, in Holland, where he was born in 1621. His pictures are highly esteemed. He died in 1673.

PYRRHO, a Greek philosopher, was a native of Elis, and founder of the sect denominated the Sceptics, because they doubted the truth of every thing. After studying under Anaxarchus he went into India, where he attended the Gymnosophists. He died about 300 B. C.—Diog. Laert. Bayle.

PYRRHUS, king of Epirus, was an infant at the breast when his father was slain; but saved from the fury of the insurgents by some faithful servants, and conveyed to the court of Glaucias, king of Illyricum, who brought him up and restored him to his throne. He was afterwards obliged to take Neoptolemus as a partner in the government, but having defeated that usurper, he reigned alone. He seized a great part of Macedonia, and assisted the Tarentines against the Romans, but was defeated and obliged to sue for peace. He afterwards went to Sicily, and contributed his aid in expelling the Carthaginians; but in sailing to Tarentum his fleet was defeated, and only a few of his ships escaped. He afterwards laid siege to Sparta, but without success. He was slain in an attempt on Argos, by a tile which a woman threw on his head from the top of her house, B. C. 272.

PYTHAGORAS, a celebrated philosopher, was born at Samos, where his father was a sculptor, about 600 B. C. He studied in Egypt many years, and after travelling over a great part of Asia, he returned to his native place; but finding that Polycrates had usurped the government, he went to Crotona in Italy, where he taught philosophy with uncommon reputation. Students came to him from all parts, on whom he imposed a probationary silence of five years; after which they were required to place their property in the common stock. He greatly reformed the manners of the people of Crotona and its neighbourhood, and several of his disciples became excellent legislators, particularly Zeleucus. Pythagoras is said to have visited Phalaris, the tyrant, who was so provoked with his discourses as to order him to be put to death, but the assassination of the tyrant himself saved the life of the philosopher. He was the first who assumed the title of philosopher. He discovered the famous demonstration in geometry of the square of the hypotenuse, for which he sacrificed a hecatomb to the gods. He held that the sun is in the centre of the universe, and that the earth revolves round it with the other planets. His other principles were less rational, for he maintained the doctrine of a transmigration of souls, and the unlawfulness of eating animal food. He died about 490 B. C. The Golden Verses which go by his name are questionable.—Iamblicus in vit.

PYTHEAS, a Greek philosopher, who was the contemporary of Aristotle, and rendered himself famous by his skill in mathematics. He travelled into various countries, and made numerous discoveries, particularly with respect to the length of the days in different climates, and the obliquity of the ecliptic.—Polybius. Strabo.

PYTHEAS, a rhetorician of Athens, who opposed Demosthenes, and sarcastically said that his orations smelt of the lamp.—Suidas.

QUADRATUS, a disciple of the apostles, was a native of Athens, and according to some, the angel or bishop of Philadelphia, mentioned in the Revelations. He is also said to have been bishop of Athens. He presented an Apology for the Christians to the emperor Adrian, of which only a fragment remains.—Dupin. Cave.

QUADRIO (Francis Xavier), a learned jesuit, was born in the Valteline in 1695. He became a secular priest, and died at Milan in 1755. His works are; 1. On the Italian Poetry, 2 vols.; 2. History of Italian Poetry, 7 vols.; 3. Historical Dissertations upon the Valteline, 3 vols.—Tiraboschi.

QUAINI (Louis), a painter, was born at Bologna, in 1643, and died in 1717. He was the disciple of Cignani, whom he assisted in some of his greatest works.—D'Argenville.

QUARLES (Francis), an English poet, was born near Rufford, in Essex, in 1592, and was educated at Christ's college, Cambridge, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn. He was cup-bearer to the princess Elizabeth, daughter of James I. and queen of Bohemia, after which he became secretary to archbishop Usher, and chronologer to the city of London. He was a zealous royalist, for which his estates were sequestrated and his goods plundered. The loss of his manuscripts is said to have preyed so much upon his spirits as to occasion his death in 1644. He wrote several ingenious pieces, the most known of which are, his Emblems, Meditations, and Hieroglyphics. Pope is supposed to have been considerably indebted to his works.—Bog. Brit.

QUATTROMANI (Scottonio), a learned Italian, was born at Cosenza in the kingdom of Naples about 1541. By the friendship of Paul Manutius he was admitted into the library of the Vatican, where he studied the Greek writers with great avidity. He was afterwards taken into the service of the duke of Nocera, who held him in great esteem. After the death of his patron he accepted an invitation from the prince de Stigliano, but he did not long remain in his service, owing to the envy of some of the courtiers. He died about 1606. He translated the Æneid into Italian verse; and his works were printed together at Naples in 1714, 8vo.—Tiraboschi.

QUELLIN (Erasmus), a painter, was born at Antwerp in 1607, and died in 1678. He was the disciple of Rubens, whose style he imitated with great success. His son Joan Erasmus was also a good artist, and painted some fine pieces for the churches of Antwerp, where he died in 1715.—Pilk.

QUENSTEDT (John Andrew), a lutheran divine, was born at Quedlinburgh in 1607, and died in 1638. He wrote an Account of Learned Men from Adam to the year 1600, 4to.; 2. De Sepultura Veterum, 8vo.; 3. A System of Divinity, according to the Augsburg Confession, 4 vols. folio.—Mor.

QUERENGHI (Anthony), a poet, was born at Padua in 1546. He became secretary of the sacred college, and died at Rome in 1633. His Latin poems were printed at Rome in 1629, and the Italian in 1616, 8vo.—Tiraboschi.

QUERLON (Anne-Gabriel Meusnier de), a French writer, was born at Nantes in 1702. He published a periodical paper in Brittany above twenty years, and he was also the editor of the "Journal Encyclopedique," the Gazette of France, &c. He wrote an ingenious little romance, entitled, The Innocent Impostors; and published editions of Anacreon and Lucretius, with other works. He died in 1780.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

QUERXO (Camillus), an Italian poet, who died in an hospital at Naples in 1528. He went to Rome with a ridiculous poem, called Alexiada, which procured him the place of buffoon to pope Leo X.—Tiraboschi.

QUESNAY (Francis), physician to the king of France, member of the academy of sciences of Paris, and of the royal society of London, was born at Esquevilli in 1694, and died in 1774. He was the principal of the society called Economists; and in his youth wrote a pleasing poem, called the Farm House. His other works are, on the Effects of Bleeding, 12mo; Physical Essay on the Animal Economy, 3 vols. 12mo; Treatise on Fevers, 2 vols.; On Gangrene, 12mo; On Suppuration, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

QUESNE (Abraham, marquis du), was born in Normandy in 1610. He was brought up to the naval service under his father. In 1637 he was at the attack of St. Marguerite, and the year following defeated the Spanish fleet before Cattari. In 1644 he entered into the Swedish service, and distinguished himself greatly against the Danes. In 1647 he returned to France, and was appointed commander of a fleet in the Mediterranean. In 1675 he displayed great bravery against the Dutch fleet under de Ruyster. He died at Paris in 1688.—Moreri.

QUESNEL (Pasquier), was born at Paris in 1634. He studied theology in the Sorbonne with great reputation, after which he entered of the congregation of the orators, and was distinguished by his learning and piety. In 1675 he published an edition of the works of St. Leo; but being a zealous jansenist he was obliged to retire to Brussels, where he published his Reflections on the New Testament, which work was attacked by the Jesuits, and occasioned so much controversy that pope Clement XI. issued his famous bull, called Unigenitus, expressly against Quesnel's book. By means of the Jesuits he was thrown into prison, and even put in irons, but he effected his escape, with the assistance of a Spanish gentleman, and went to Amsterdam, where he died in 1719. He wrote a great number of pieces of practical and controversial divinity. There was one Peter Quesnel who died at the Hague in 1774. He wrote a History of the Jesuits.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

QUESNOY (Francis du), a sculptor, was born at Brussels, and died at Leghorn in 1644, aged 52. His performances are chiefly small bas-reliefs in bronze, marble, or ivory, representing children, and bacchanals, executed with great elegance. His brother Jerom was also a good sculptor. He died at Ghent in 1654.—D'Argenville.

QUEVEDO DE VILLEGAS (Francis), a Spanish author, was born at Villeneuve de l'Infantado in 1570, of a noble family. He cultivated poetry, and his performances were much esteemed; but some of them gave such offence to count Olivares, that he caused the author to be sent to prison, where he remained till that minister fell into disgrace. He died at his native place in 1645. His works were published at Madrid in 1650, under the title of Parnasso Espagnolo. His Visions of Hell have been translated into English, but very indifferently, from a French version.—Moreri.

QUIN (Michael le), a Dominican, was born at Boulogne, in 1661. He published an edition of John Damascenus, in 2 vols. folio; and was the author of, 1. Panoplia contra Schisma Græcorum, 4to.; 2. Nullity of the English Ordinations, against Couzrayer; 3. Oriens Christianus, in quatuor Patriarchatus digestis; in quo exhibentur Ecclesiz, Patriarchæ cæterique Præsules orientis, 3 vols. fol.; 4. Defence of the Hebrew Text, against Perron.—Ibid.

QUIN DE LA NEUVILLE (James le), was born at Paris in 1647. He served first in the army, and afterwards became an advocate, but without success, on which he had recourse to literature for a support. He published the History of Portugal, in 4to. which obtained him a place in the academy of inscriptions. His Treatise on the Use of Posts among the Antients and Moderns, procured him the direction of the posts of French Flanders, and a pension. He died at Lisbon in 1728.—Moreri.

QUILLET (Claude), a physician and poet, was born at Chinon in Touraine about 1602. Having had the honesty to expose the imposture of the devils of Loudun [See GRANDIER], he retired to Italy to avoid the resentment of Richelieu. At Rome he wrote his Callipædia, a Latin poem, on the art of having beautiful children. In this piece he was very satirical on cardinal Mazarine, who, instead of punishing him, gave him an abbey. In 1656 Quillet published a new edition of his poem, dedicated to the cardinal, substituting an eulogy instead of satire. He died in 1661. He also wrote a Latin poem called the Henriade. His Callipædia has been translated into English by Rowe.—Bayle. Nicéron.

QUIN (James), was born in London, in 1693, and died at Bath in 1766. He was intended for the law, but having a strong inclination for the stage, he joined a company of players, and after performing at Dublin and other places with applause, was engaged by Rich at Covent Garden, where he played Falstaff to crowded houses. He became the first actor of his time till Mr. Garrick appeared, and drew the town after him to Goodman's Fields, on which occasion Quin contemptuously said, that the rage was only like a new sect, which would soon sink to nothing, and the people return to church again. But in this prediction he was mistaken. In 1746 these two rival actors performed together in the Fair Penitent, and exhibited an astonishing display of powers. Quin was employed by Frederic prince of Wales to instruct the royal children in elocution; and when Quin was informed of the graceful manner in which his present majesty delivered his first speech from the throne, he emphatically said, "Aye, it was I who taught the boy to speak." About this time he obtained a pension, having retired from the stage some years before. He had much roughness in his manner, and was a great epicure; yet there was much benevolence in his disposition, a remarkable instance of which appeared in his conduct to Thomson, the author of the Seasons, whom he released from a spunging-house, by paying the debt and costs, without having had any previous acquaintance with him.—Europ. Mag.

QUINAULT (Philip), a French dramatic poet, was born at Paris in 1636. His first piece was a comedy called the Rival Muses, performed with applause in 1653. After this he produced several tragedies, comedies, and operas, of considerable merit. He married the widow of a rich merchant, and in 1671 was appointed auditor in the chamber of accounts. He was also admitted a member of the French academy. He died in 1688. The works of Quinault were printed at Paris with his Life in 1778, 5 vols. 12mo.

QUINCY (John), an English physician, who practised with reputation in London, and published a Dictionary of Physic, 8vo.; a Universal Dispensatory, 8vo.; Chemical Pharmacopæia, 4to.; a translation of Sanctorius's Aphorisms; and other works of merit. He died in 1723.

QUINTILIAN (Marcus Fabius), a celebrated orator and critic, is said by some to have been a native of Spain, and by others to have been born at Rome. At the commencement of the reign of Galba he opened a school of rhetoric in that city, where he taught with high reputation, and was liberally rewarded by the government. He also pleaded in the forum, and was entrusted by Domitian with the education of his two nephews. He is supposed to have died about A.D. 60. His Institutiones Oratoricæ may be justly pronounced the finest system of rhetoric that was ever written. This invaluable work was discovered by Poggio in 1415, in the abbey of St. Gall. The best edition is that of Burman in 1724, Leyden, 4 vols. 4to.—Bayle.

QUINTINIE (John de la), an eminent gardener, was born at Poitiers in 1626. His education was liberal, and he became an advocate; but he renounced the law, and applied wholly to agricultural pursuits. Louis XIV. appointed him director-general of his fruit and kitchen gardens. He died at Paris about 1700. Quintinie wrote an esteemed book on Gardening, in 2 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

QUIRINI (Angelo Maria), a cardinal, was born at Venice in 1684. At the age of fourteen he entered among the Benedictines. In 1710 he travelled into Germany, from whence he passed to Holland, England, and France, in all which countries he contracted an intimacy with the most learned men of the age, particularly Newton, Bentley, Fenelon, and Montfaucon. Pope Benedict XIII. made him archbishop and cardinal, which dignities he filled with extraordinary reputation, being equally admired by protestants and catholics. He died of an apoplexy in 1755. Cardinal Quirini gathered a magnificent library, which he gave to the Vatican. His principal works are, 1. Primordia Corcyre ex antiquissimis monumentis illustrata, 4to.; 2. Veterum Brixie Episcoporum, &c.; this work contains the lives of some of those bishops of Brescia who have been canonized; 3. Specimen varie Litteraturæ, quæ in urbe Brixie ejusque editione paulo post, Typographiæ in canabula florebat, 4to.; 4. Enchiridion Græcorum; 5. Gesta et Epistolæ Francisci Barbari; 6. De Mosaicæ Historiæ Præstantia.—Tiraboschi.

QUIROS (Fernand de), a Spanish navigator, who was employed by Philip III. in making discoveries in the Pacific Ocean. In 1605 he discovered the Society Isles, and some other places.—Cook's Voyages.

QUISTORP (John), a Lutheran divine, was born at Rostock in 1584. He attended Grotius in his last illness, and died at Rostock in 1646. His works are, 1. Articuli formulæ Concordiæ illustrati; 2. Manuductio ad Studium Theologicum; 3. Commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul.—Moreri.

R.

RABAN-MAUR (Magnentius), a learned prelate, was born at Fulda in 788, of a noble family. After studying under the famous Alcuinus he entered into orders, and was elected abbot of Fulda. In 817 he became archbishop of Mentz, in which see he distinguished himself by writing against Gotschaleus the monk, whom he caused to be delivered up to Hincmar, archbishop of Rheims. Raban died in 856. His works have been published in 6 vols. folio.—Moreri.

RABAUD-SAINT-ETIENNE (John Paul), a protestant minister, was a native of Nismes. He became a member of the national convention of France. In the tyranny of Robespierre he was proscribed, and fled, but was taken and sent to Paris, where he was guillotined in 1793. He wrote a Letter on the Life and Writings of Court de Gibein; Letters on the Primitive History of Greece; Considerations on the Interests of the Third Estate, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

RABELAIS (Francis), was the son of an apothecary at Chinon in Touraine. He entered into the order of Cordeliers; but on account of an intrigue he was imprisoned in a monastery, from whence he made his escape, and obtained permission of pope Clement VII. to quit his order. He then studied medicine at Montpellier, where he took his doctor's degree, and became professor in 1531. The chancellor Duprat having abolished the privileges of that university, Rabelais was deputed to wait on him, and he succeeded in obtaining a reversal of that decree. The cardinal du Bellay appointed him his physician, and took him in his suit to Rome. On his return to France he was rewarded with an abbey and the benefice of Meudon. About this time he published his Pentagruel, a comic satire, which is licentious and obscene. He died in 1553, aged 70. Besides the above piece he wrote some medical works, and numerous letters, printed together in 5 vols. 8vo. 1715.—Moreri.

RABIRIUS, a Latin poet in the reign of Augustus, whom he complimented in a poem on his victory over Anthony at Actium. He is not to be confounded with an architect of the same name who built a famous palace for Domitian at Rome, the ruins of which remain.—Ibid.

RACAN (Honorat de Bueil, marquis de), a poet, was born at Touraine in 1589. He was one of the first members of the French academy. He died in 1670. His works were printed in 1660, 8vo. and 1720, 2 vols. 12mo.—Ibid.

RACCHETTI (Bernard), an Italian painter, was born in 1639, and died in 1702. He painted perspective and architecture in an excellent taste.—Pilkington.

RACINE (John), a French poet, was born at Ferre-Milon, in 1639, of a noble family.

He was educated in the society of Port Royal, where he devoted his principal attention to the Greek tragic poets. His first publication was an Ode on the Marriage of the King, which procured him a pension. In 1664 he produced his tragedy of Thebaide, which was followed in 1666 by Alexander. Till this time the author had worn the ecclesiastical habit, which he now renounced. Nicole, in a letter written against Desmarets, having charged the dramatic poets as poisoners of the soul, Racine replied in a severe manner. In 1688 appeared his Andromache, which was attacked by several critics, particularly St. Evremond. His next piece was the tragedy of Britannicus, which far surpassed his former productions. In 1677 appeared his tragedy of Phædra, which was opposed by one on the same subject written by Pradon, and occasioned violent heats between the partisans of the respective poets. The same year Racine was associated with Boileau in writing the History of Louis XIV. which work was never published. About this time he wrote his sacred drama of Esther, at the desire of madame de Maintenon, and it was acted by the young ladies of her institution of St. Cyr. His best piece of this kind, however, was his Athalia. He died in 1699, of chagrin, occasioned by the king's displeasure at a memorial on the miseries of the people, which he had written at the request of madame de Maintenon. Besides his dramatic works he wrote, Canticles or Hymns for the use of St. Cyr; the History of Port Royal; Letters and Epigrams.—Life by his Son, 2 vols. 1747.

RACINE (Louis), son of the above, was born at Paris in 1692, and died in 1763. He embraced the ecclesiastical state, but cardinal Fleury gave him a civil appointment. He wrote several good poems; Reflections on Poetry; a prose translation of Milton's Paradise Lost; Life of John Racine; and other works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

RACLE (Leonard), a French architect, was a native of Dijon, and died at Pont-de-Vaux in 1792. In 1786 he obtained a prize from the academy of Toulouse for an excellent memoir on the construction of an iron bridge of a single arch of 400 feet span. He also wrote others on the properties of the cycloid, and on regulating the course of the Rhone. He was the intimate friend of Voltaire, for whom he built his house at Ferney.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

RADCLIFFE (Alexander), an English poet, who died about 1700. He wrote a burlesque of Ovid's Epistles, a poem called "News from Hell," and other works of the like nature.—Gen. Biog. Ect.

RADCLIFFE (John), an eminent English physician, was born at Wakefield in Yorkshire in 1650. At the age of fifteen he was entered of University college, Oxford, but not obtaining a fellowship there, he removed to Lincoln college, where he succeeded. Having taken his bachelor's degree in physic, he commenced practice, and obtained a considerable reputation. In 1682 he took his doctor's degree, and not long after removed to London, where he rose to the height of his profession. Astonishing things are related of his skill. He attended king William, who having shewn him his swelled ancles, and asked what he thought of them, "Why, truly," said Radcliffe, "I would not have your majesty's two legs for your three kingdoms," which uncourtly answer gave great offence. He died in 1714, having the year before been chosen member of parliament for Buckingham. His remains were interred in St. Mary's church, Oxford, to which university he was a munificent benefactor, particularly by founding the famous library which is called by his name.—Biog. Brit.

RADEMAKER (Gerard), a painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1673, and died in 1711. He painted architecture and perspective. A relation of his, Abraham Rademaker, who died at Haerlem in 1735, aged 60, was a good landscape painter.—Houbraken.

RAGOTZKI (Francis Leopold), prince of Transylvania, was sent to prison in 1701, on a charge of exciting the Hungarians to revolt; but after a confinement of some months he effected his escape into Hungary, the inhabitants of which declared him protector of their kingdom. He was for some years very successful, but the Hungarians making peace with the emperor in 1713, Ragotzki went to France, and from thence to Constantinople, where he was held in great esteem. He died in Turkey in 1735. There passes under his name a work entitled, 'the Political and Moral Testament of Prince Ragotzki,' but it is of dubious authority.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

RAGUENET (Francis), a native of Rouen, and an ecclesiastic. He obtained a prize from the French academy in 1689, for a discourse on the merit of martyrdom. In 1704 he published a Parallel of the Italians and French, with regard to Music and the Opera, in which he defended the superiority of the former. This work occasioned a literary warfare. Raguenet died in 1722. His other works are, 1. the Monuments of Rome, or a Description of the Works of Art, &c. in that City; 2. the History of Oliver Cromwell, 4to.; 3. History of the Old Testament; 4. History of the Viscount Turenne, 12mo.—Moreri.

RAINALDI, or, as the French writers spell, Raynaud, (Theophilus), an eccentric genius, was born at Gorpello, in the Piedmontese dominions, in 1583, and became a Jesuit. He was celebrated for a deep penetration, uncommon memory, and of prodigious learning. But his ideas were generally so extravagant, that, notwithstanding his avowed zeal for the support of the Romish doctrines, he had the mortification to see many of his publications proscribed. He died in the college of his order at Lyons, in 1663, and his works were published at the same place, in 1665, in 20 vols. fol. This writer is not to be confounded with another of the same name (Oderic Rainaldi), the author of the Ecclesiastical Annals, 8 vols. in fol.—Moreri.

RAINOLDS (William), an English divine, was born at Pinhoe in Devonshire, and educated at New college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and entered into orders. His brother John was a member of Corpus Christi college, and a zealous Romanist, while William was warm in defence of the reformation. This difference occasioned frequent disputes, the result of which was that William became a convert to popery, and John turned protestant. The former went abroad, and was made professor of Hebrew in the English college at Rheims; and died at Antwerp in 1594. He wrote a Defence of the Rheinish Translation of the New Testament, against Whitaker, 8vo.; Calvinus-Turcismus, 8vo. and other works. His brother John became dean of Lincoln in 1598, but the year following exchanged that preferment for the presidency of Corpus Christi college. He was a man of prodigious learning, and called, on account of his memory, a living library. He died in 1607. His principal works are, 1. Censura librorum apocryphorum vet. Testamenti; apologia thesauri de Sacra Script. & Ecclesia; De Romanæ Ecclesiæ idolatria in cultu Sanctorum; translation of part of the Old Testament in the present public version.—Pitt. Wood. Prince.

RALEIGH (sir Walter), was born at Hayes, in the parish of Budley, in Devonshire, of an ancient family, in 1552. After a proper education he was sent to Oriel college, Oxford, but did not long remain there, for having an enterprising turn he entered into the troop of gentlemen volunteers, who went over to the assistance of the Protestants in France, where he continued about five or six years. In 1576 we find him a student in the Middle Temple, but the year following he served under general Norris in the Netherlands. Soon after his return he engaged with his brother-in-law, sir Humphrey Gilbert, in a voyage to America, from whence they returned in 1579. The next year he was in Ireland, where he greatly distinguished himself against the rebels in Munster. On his return to England he introduced himself to the notice of queen Elizabeth by a piece of gallantry. Her majesty was taking the air in a walk, when stopping at a dirty place, she hesitated whether to proceed or not; on which Raleigh took off his new plush cloak, and spread it on the ground. The queen trod gently over the foot-cloth, and soon rewarded the sacrifice of a cloak with a handsome suit to the owner. Being still intent upon making discoveries, he sailed again with his brother Gilbert, who was lost in the voyage. This however did not discourage Raleigh, who fitted out another squadron, which discovered the country called, in honour of Elizabeth, Virginia. In 1584 he was elected into parliament for the county of Devon, and also knighted. He continued indefatigable in his favourite object of improving navigation, and was concerned with his relation sir Richard Greenville in colonizing Virginia, from whence the first tobacco was brought by this fleet to England. About this time he was made captain of the queen's guard, and lord warden of the stannaries. In the defeat of the Spanish armada sir Walter bore a glorious part, for which he received distinguishing marks of favour from the queen, but having obtained a grant of the manor of Sherborn in Dorsetshire, which had belonged to the bishopric of Salisbury, it gave great offence, and he was stigmatized unjustly as an atheist. About the same time he incurred the queen's displeasure by an intrigue with one of her maids of honour, whom he afterwards married. In 1595 he sailed to Guiana, and destroyed the capital of Trinidad. The year following we find him principally engaged in the taking of Cadiz. Honours were lavished upon him in abundance, and he obtained the lordship of St. Germaine, in Cornwall. Sir Walter had an active concern in the fall of Essex; and remained in the favour of the queen till her death. But in the succeeding reign the face of his affairs was changed. On the accession of James he was stripped of his preferments, tried, and condemned for high treason, on a charge the most frivolous, and without the least evidence. He lay in the Tower twelve years, during which he wrote several pieces on various subjects of national importance: but his greatest performance was the History of the World, which was published in folio in 1614. The year following he was released, occasioned by the flattering account which he had given of some rich mines in Guiana. On gaining his liberty he failed to that country in search of those pretended mines, instead of discovering which he burnt the Spanish town, and returned to England, where, in consequence of the complaint of Gondamor, the Spanish ambassador, he was apprehended, and, in a most unprecedented manner, beheaded, by virtue of his former sentence, in Palace-yard, Westminster, Oct. 29, 1617. His works are historical, philosophical, poetical, and political. His son, Carew Raleigh, who was born in the Tower, became governor of Jersey in 1659, and died in 1666. He wrote some sonnets, and a vindication of his father against James Howell.—Biog. Brit.

was originally a schoolmaster at Philadelphia, and came from thence about 1729 to London, where he published a poem entitled Night. He afterwards wrote a History of England, and several political pamphlets, and died in 1762. Pope has given him a place in his Dunciad.

RAMAZZINI (Bernardin), an Italian physician, was born at Carpi, near Modena, in 1693. After taking his degree at Parma he went to Modena, where he was medical professor many years, and then removed to Padua. He died in 1714. His works were published at London in 1716, 4to.—Hutchinson's Med. Biog.

RAMEAU (John Philip), a celebrated musician, was born at Dijon in 1683. After practising as organist at his native place he discharged the same office in the cathedral of Clermont. In 1733 he produced his opera of Hippolytus, which was followed by several others, and greatly admired. But it is as a theorist in music that Rameau shines; and on account of his two works, the Demonstration of the Principles of Harmony, and the Code of Music, he has been called the Newton of that science. Louis XV. to whom he was composer, conferred on him the title of nobility, and the order of St. Michael. He died in 1764.—New. Dict. Hist.

RAMELLI (Felix), an Italian priest and painter, was born at Asti in 1666, and died in 1740. He was invited to the court of the king of Sardinia, where he painted many portraits in miniature with great elegance.

RAMSAY (Andrew Michael), called the chevalier Ramsay, was born at Ayr in Scotland, in 1686, and educated at Edinburgh, after which he became tutor to a nobleman's son at St. Andrew's. In 1710 he was at Cambrai, where he was converted to the roman catholic religion by the celebrated Fenelon, whose life he wrote out of gratitude. He was afterwards employed as tutor to the duke de Chateau Thierry, and made knight of the order of St. Lazarus. He was also engaged by the son of James II. called the Pretender, in instructing his children. He died in 1743. His works are, Discourse upon Epic Poetry; Essay upon Civil Government; Remarks on Shaftesbury's Characteristics; the Travels of Cyrus; History of M. de Turenne; Plan of Education; Philosophical Principles of Natural and Revealed Religion, 2 vols. 8to. He is not to be mistaken for Charles Ramsay, who wrote a System of Short-hand, dedicated to Louis XIV. in 1681.—Biog. Brit.

RAMSAY (Allan), a Scotch poet, was born at Peebles in 1696. He was bred a barber at Edinburgh, but distinguished himself by several ingenious poems and songs in the Scotch dialect. His principal performance is a rural drama, entitled, the Gentle Shepherd, which has been several times performed, and oftener read. The author died in 1763.—Biog. Dram.

RAMS (Peter) a philosopher and mathematician, was born in 1515, at Cuth, in Picardy. His birth was mean, and he received his education in the college of Navarre, where he was a servant. However, he studied with such ardour, as to be admitted to the degree of master of arts, his thesis on which occasion was an attack upon the whole doctrine of Aristotle, which occasioned a violent controversy, and Ramus was prohibited from teaching. But in 1551 he was nominated to the regius professorship, but was again persecuted on account of his not pronouncing Q in Latin as K. He was also obnoxious to the Sorbonne for being a protestant, and in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, at Paris, in 1572, this learned and worthy man fell a victim. His works are, 1. Treatises on Arithmetic and Geometry; 2. De Militia Cesaris; 3. De moribus veterum Gallorum; 4. Greek, Latin, and French Grammar.—Moreri.

RAMUSIO (John Baptist), secretary of the council of ten at Venice, and ambassador from that republic to France, Switzerland, and Rome; died at Padua in 1557, aged 72. He wrote a Treatise de Nili Incremento; and made the first collection of voyages that is known. It was printed in 3 vols. folio at Venice. The fourth perished by the burning of the printing-house.—Tiraboschi.

RANC (John), a French painter, was born at Montpellier, and died at Madrid in 1735. He was received into the academy of painting in 1703, and appointed in 1724 first painter to the king of Spain.—D'Argenville.

RANCE (Armand John le Bouthillier de), was born at Paris in 1696. He led a gay life in his youth, though he cultivated a literary taste, and published an edition of Anacreon with notes. Returning from a journey he hastened to the house of his mistress, and meeting with no person to communicate to him the tidings, he went into her room, and found her laid out a corpse. This spectacle effected a reformation, he renounced the world, and after entering among the regulars, retired into the monastery of La Trappe, where he died in 1700. He wrote Reflections on the Gospels; and several other pious works.—Moreri.

RANDOLPH (Thomas), an eminent statesman, was born in Kent in 1523, and educated at Oxford, where he became principal of Broadgate hall, but was banished to France in the reign of Mary on account of his religion. Queen Elizabeth employed him in several embassies, and rewarded him with the honour of knighthood, and the offices of chamberlain of the exchequer, and mastership of the posts. He died in 1590. Several of his letters are in different collections, and his account of Russia in Hackluyt's Voyages.—Biog. Brit.

RANDOLPH (Thomas), an English poet, was born at Newnham, in Northamptonshire, in 1605. After receiving his education at Westminster school, he was elected to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He became very intimate with Ben Jonson, who was wont to call him his son. He died in 1634. His poems, which abound with wit and humour, though sometimes grave and moral, were collected by his brother Robert, who was also a good poet, and died vicar of Donnington, in Lincolnshire, in 1671. Thomas was also the author of four dramatic pieces.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

RAPHELINGIUS (Francis), a learned critic, was born at Lanoy, near Lille, in 1539. He studied the learned languages at Paris, after which he went to England, and taught Greek at Cambridge. On his return to the Low Countries, he married the daughter of Christopher Plantin. He published several antient writers with notes; and was employed on the Polyglot Bible of Antwerp, printed in 1571. For his great learning he was appointed professor in Hebrew and Arabic at Leyden, where he died in 1597. His other works are, a Hebrew Grammar; an Arabic Lexicon; and a Chaldee Dictionary.—Moreri.

RAPIN (Nicholas), a French poet, was born about 1540, at Fontenai-le-comté, in Poitou. Henry III. made him grand prevot of that town, from whence he was expelled by the leaguers, but restored by Henry IV. He died in 1609. His poems are in the 3d volume of "Delices des Poëtes Latins de France."—Ibid.

RAPIN (René), a jesuit, was born at Tours, in 1621, and died at Paris in 1687. He is chiefly distinguished for his Latin poem on Gardens, which was translated into English by Evelyn. His Reflections on Eloquence, Poetry, History, and Philosophy, have also been rendered into our language, in 2 vols. 8vo.—Moreri.

RAPIN DE THOYRAS (Paul), an historian, was born at Castres, in 1661, of an antient family of Savoy. He studied the law, and became an advocate, but being obliged to leave France on the revocation of the edict of Nantes he went to England, and afterwards to Holland. In 1688 he accompanied the prince of Orange to this country, and obtained a military rank in Ireland, but being wounded at the siege of Limerick, he disposed of his commission. He afterwards became tutor to the son of the earl of Portland, whom he accompanied on his travels. He died at Wesel in 1725, aged 64. His History of England, which is very exact, was printed at the Hague, in 10 vols. 4to.; and translated into English by Mr. Tindal, in folio and octavo.—Ibid.

RASTALL (John), a learned printer, was born at London, and educated at Oxford. He married a sister of sir Thomas More, and died in 1536. Rastall wrote a dramatic Description of Asia, Africa, and Europe, with cuts; Canones Astrologici; Dialogues concerning Purgatory; Apology written against John Fryth; the Rules of a Good Life; Anglorum Regum Chronicon, &c. His son William became one of the justices of the common pleas in the reign of queen Mary, but on her death he went to Louvain, in 1565. He wrote, 1. The Chaturary, 1580; 2. A Chronological Table from William the Conqueror; 3. Terms of the English Law; 4. Collection of the Statutes; 5. Life of Sir Thomas More, Knight, &c.—Wood.

RATRAMNUS, or BERTRAM, a monk of the abbey of Corby in the 9th century. He defended the doctrine of predestination with zeal against Hincmar, archbishop of Rheims. He also wrote a famous piece on the Eucharist, in which he denies transubstantiation. This book has been often quoted by protestants.—Dupin. Cave.

RAVAILLAC (Francis), a regicide, was born in Angouleme, and took the religious habit among the Feuillans, but was expelled on account of his fanatical exura-gancies. He afterwards became completely deranged by the discourses of the leaguers, and conceiving that Henry IV. of France was not a true catholic, he assassinated him in 1610. He was torn in pieces by wild horses, and otherwise miserably punished.—Henault.

RAVIUS (Christian), a learned writer, was born at Berlin in 1613. He professed the oriental languages successively at Utrecht, Oxford, Kiel, and Frankfort on the Main, at which last place he died in 1677. His works are; 1. Plan of Hebrew Orthography and Etymology; 2. A Grammar, Hebrew, Chaldaic, Syriac, Arabic, Samaritan, and English, London, 8vo.; 3. A Latin translation from the Arabic of Apollonius Pergæus. His son John Ravius, was librarian to the elector of Brandenburg, and wrote a Commentary upon Cornelius Nepos.—Moreri.

RAVESTEYN (John van), a painter, was born at the Hague about 1580. He excelled in painting portraits: There were two others of this name, 1. Hubert, who painted rustic subjects. He died about 1700. 2. Nicolaï, who died in 1750, aged 89. He was a good portrait painter.—Houbraken. Pitt.

RAULIN (Joseph), an ingenious physician, was born in 1708, and died at Paris in 1784. He was physician to the French king, and a member of several learned societies. He wrote a Treatise on Diseases occasioned by Variations of the Atmosphere; another on the Vapours in Females; Treatise on the Fluor Albus; on the Preservation of Infants; on Diseases of Lying-in Women; on Pulmonary Consumption, &c.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

RAUWOLF (Leonard), a physician of the 16th century, was a native of Augsburg. In 1573 he travelled into Syria, Arabia, Armenia, and other countries in the east, and returned to his native place in 1576. From thence he removed to Lintz, where he died in 1606. His Travels were printed at Frankfort in 1582. Mr. Ray has published a translation in English. Rauwolf's catalogue of plants observed in the Levant, was published at Leyden in 1755, with the title of Flora Orientalis.—Halleri. Bibl. Botan.

RAWLET (John), a pious English divine, was bachelor of divinity, and many years lecturer of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, to which place he was so much attached that he refused the valuable living of Colehill, in Warwickshire. He died in 1686, aged 44. Mr. Rawlet was the author of the Christian Monitor, which has gone through numerous editions; as also hath his Treatise on Sacramental Covenanting.—Granger.

RAWLEY (Dr. William), an English divine, was born at Norwich about 1688, and educated at Bene't college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. Dr. Rawley was chaplain to the great lord Bacon, some of whose works he published. He had the living of Landbeach, in Cambridgeshire, of which he was deprived in the rebellion, but recovered it at the restoration. He died in 1667.—Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy.

RAWLINS (Thomas), an engraver of the mint in the reigns of Charles I. and II. died in 1670. He wrote three dramatic pieces, called Rebellion, Tom Effence, and Tunbridge Wells.—Biog. Dram.

RAWLINSON (Thomas), a remarkable collector of books, of which he had so great a number as to be obliged to take London house, in Aldergate-street, to contain them. He died in 1725. His library was sold after his death. He is drawn in the Tatler under the name of Tom Folin.—Ibid.

RAWLINSON (Richard), a learned antiquary, was educated at St. John's college, Oxford, where he was admitted by diploma to the degree of doctor of civil law, in 1719. He made collections for a continuation of Wood's "Athenæ Oxonienses," and "History of Oxford," which, with an account of his travels, he bequeathed to the university, with a large collection of medals and books. He also founded an Anglo-Saxon professorship at Oxford. He died in 1755, and his heart, agreeable to his own desire, was put in a marble urn, and placed in St. John's college chapel. Dr. Rawlinson published a translation of Fresnoy's Method of Studying History, 2 vols. 8vo.—Ibid.

RAY (John), or Wray, an English divine and botanist, was born at Black-Nouley, in Essex, in 1628. His father was a blacksmith, but gave his son a good education at Braintree, from whence he removed to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he became fellow, and Greek and mathematical lecturer. While at the university he cultivated the study of botany, which was till then in a very low state; but by his example and exertions became a favourite pursuit. In 1660 he published his "Catalogus Plantarum Circa Cartasfrigiam Nascantium," 12mo.; which laid the foundation of his Synopsis Methodica Stirpium Britannicarum, of which excellent work there are two editions in octavo. The same year he was ordained by bishop Sanderson, but in 1662 he quitted his fellowship. After this he made numerous journeys over the kingdom with his friend Mr. Willoughby, and other gentlemen, in search of plants and other curiosities. He also accompanied the same gentlemen abroad, of which tour he published an account in 1673. He was chosen a fellow of the royal society in 1667, and he contributed numerous papers to the Transactions of that learned body, on subjects natural history. In 1679 he fixed his residence near Black-Notley, where he continued perfecting his collections and works till his death, which happened in 1705. The botanical writings of this excellent man have been universally admired; besides which he published, 1. The Wisdom of God Manifested in the Works of the Creation, 8vo., of which there have been several editions; 2. Three Discourses on the Primitive Chaos, the Creation, Deluge, and Conflagration of the World, 8vo.; 3. Synopsis Methodica Animalium, Quadrupedum, Avium et Piscium; 4. A translation of Rauwolf's Travels in the East, 8vo.; 5. A Persuasive to a Holy Life, 8vo.; 6. A Collection of English Proverbs, 8vo., which has been reprinted several times. After his death were published by Dr. Derham, his History of Insects, 4to.; and a collection of Philosophical Letters between Mr. Ray and several of his correspondents, 8vo.; and his Select Remains were printed by Mr. Scott, in 1760, 8vo.—General Hist. Dict. Biog. Brit.

RAY (Benjamin), was born at Spalding in Essex, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, after which he became curate of Surfleet, and Cowbitt. He wrote an account of a water-spout, printed in the Philosophical Transactions. He died in 1760.—Hist. of the Spalding Society.

RAYMOND (Robert, lord), chief justice of the king's bench, died in 1753. His reports are in great esteem.

RAYNAL (William Francis), was born at St. Genies, in Rouergue, in 1718. He entered early into the society of jesuits, and on taking priest's orders became a celebrated preacher. His love of independence induced him to quit his order in 1748, on which he fixed his residence at Paris, where he had recourse to literature for a support; and was engaged in several works, particularly the Mercury of France. In 1770 he published his celebrated work, entitled, the Philosophical and Political History of the European Commerce in both Indies; which obtained him a great reputation. With a view to a more correct edition he travelled into Holland and England; and when in this country he was honoured with a very flattering mark of distinction, on visiting the house of commons, the speaker of which ordering business to be suspended till he was accommodated with a convenient seat. In 1781 he published, at Geneva, a new edition of his history, greatly improved and enlarged. It was, however, proscribed by the parliament of Paris, and the author would have been apprehended had he not retired to Germany. In 1788 he returned to Paris, and in 1791 he had the courage to address a letter to the national assembly, in which he strongly exposed the dangerous course in which they were engaged, and predicted the evils which would result from the revolution. Raynal died of a catarrh in 1796. His other works are; 1. History of the Stadtholdership, 2 vols.; 2. History of the Parliament of England, 2 vols.; 3. Historical Anecdotes, 3 vols. 12mo.; 4. History of the Divorce of Henry VIII. of England; 5. The Military School, 3 vols.; 6. Historical Memoirs of Europe, 3 vols.; 7. On the Revolutions of the English Colonies in North America, 12mo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

READ (Alexander), a physician, was a native of Scotland, and a man of great abilities. In 1620 he was created doctor of physic at Oxford, by royal mandate. He wrote several books in the line of his profession. He died about 1680.—Wood.

REAL (Cæsar Vichard de St.), an historical writer, was born at Chamberi, where he died in 1692. Dict. Hist.*

REGIOMONTANUS, an astronomer, whose real name was Muller, was born at Konigsberg in 1436. He studied at Vienna under the learned Purbachius, whom he succeeded. He afterwards learnt the Greek language from Theodore Gaza, by which means he was enabled to read Ptolemy, and other mathematicians of antiquity. He visited several countries, and received marks of distinction from sovereign princes, particularly Sixtus IV. who made him archbishop of Ravenna, and employed him in reforming the calendar. He died in that city of the plague, in 1476.—Martin.

REGIS (Peter Sylvain), a French philosopher, was born in the county of Agenois, in 1632. He studied at Paris under Rohault, and afterwards read lectures with great reputation at Toulouse; from whence he removed to Montpellier, and lastly to the metropolis, where he was admitted a member of the academy of sciences. He died in 1707. His works are; 1. System of Philosophy, 3 vols. 4to. This is according to the Cartesian doctrine. 2. Use of Reason and Faith, 4to.; 3. An Answer to a book of Huet's, entitled, Censura Philosophiæ Cartesianæ, &c.—Mor. Bayle.

REIUS (Urban), or Le Roy, a lutheran divine, was born at Langenargen, on the lake of Constance. He studied at Ingolstadt, where also he taught with reputation, and received the crown of poetry and oratory from the emperor Maximilian; but becoming a protestant he was obliged to retire to Strasburg. He died at Zell in 1541. His works have been printed in 3 vols. folio.—Melch. Adam. Vit. Germ. Theol.

REONARD (John Francis), a comic writer, was born at Paris in 1647. He was very fond of travelling, and in a voyage from Genoa to Marseilles, was taken by a Barbary corsair, and carried to Algiers, where, by his skill in cookery, he obtained the favour of his master, but being caught in an amour he was condemned to suffer death, or turn Mahometan. The French consul being made acquainted with the affair, ransomed him and sent him home to France; after which he travelled through Flanders, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, and Poland. He died at Dourdan, near Paris, in 1709. His works, which rank him next to Moliere, have been published in 4 vols. 12mo.—New. Dict. Hist.

REGNIER (Mathurin), a French poet, was born at Chartres in 1573. He was in favour with cardinal Joyeuse, and obtained a pension and a canonry. He died at Rouen in 1613. His poems, which are chiefly satirical, were printed at London in 1733, 4to.; and at Paris in 1746, 12mo.—Moreri.

REGNIER (Francis Seraphin), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1632. His talents recommended him to the patronage of the duke de Crequi, whom he accompanied to Rome in 1662. While there he wrote some Italian sonnets in so good a style as to be admitted a member of the academy della Crusca. In 1684 he succeeded Mezeray as secretary of the French academy. He died in 1713. His works are; 1. Translation of Homer's Battle of the Frogs and Mice. This was done at the age of fifteen. 2. A French Grammar; 3. An Italian translation of Anacreon; 4. French, Latin, Spanish, and Italian Poems; 5. History of the Disputes of France with the Court of Rome.—Moreri.

REGULUS (Marcus Atilius), a Roman consul, who 267 B. C. reduced the Salentines, and in his second consulate defeated Amilcar and Hanno in a naval engagement off the coast of Sicily. This victory was followed by another on land, and the reduction of several places. The Carthaginians sued for peace, which was refused. Xanthippus, a Spartan commander, coming with a reinforcement to the Carthaginians, defeated Regulus who was taken prisoner. The Carthaginians sent him envoy to Rome to propose terms of peace, but on the condition of his return. Regulus advised the senate not to comply with the terms, for which the Carthaginians put him to a cruel death—B. C. 251. The senate gave his widow leave to avenge her husband's death upon some illustrious Carthaginians, which she did with such excess of barbarity as obliged them to stop her progress.—Forn. Livy.

REID (Thomas), a learned divine of the church of Scotland, was born in 1709, and educated at the university of Glasgow, where he took his doctor's degree, and be-

REMBRANDT (Van-Ryn), an eminent painter and engraver, was born at a village on the banks of the Rhine, near Leyden, in 1606. His paintings of historical subjects are the most rare. In the knowledge of the claro-oscuro he stands unrivalled, and his portraits have all the force of nature; but the grounds are very dark, of which being once told, he said, "I am a painter, not a dyer." He also engraved numerous plates after his own designs. Rembrandt died at Amsterdam, according to some in 1668, but to others in 1674.—De Piles. Houbraken.

REMI (St.), archbishop of Rheims, who converted Clovis to Christianity, and baptised that monarch. He died about 535. There are some letters which pass under his name, but they are doubted. There was another saint of this name, or Remigius, who was archbishop of Lyons, and presided in the council of Valentia in 855. He supported with great zeal the doctrine of St. Augustine on grace and predestination in some works which are extant. He died in 875.—Dupin. Baillet.

REMI (Joseph-Hopré), advocate in the parliament of Paris, where he died in 1782, aged 44. At the age of eight years he became blind from the small pox, but recovered his sight at fourteen. He wrote a burlesque, called Days, in opposition to Young's Night Thoughts; but his principal work is an Eloge on Chancellor de l'Hopital, which was crowned by the French academy in 1777, and censured by the Sorbonne. He afterwards wrote the Elogies of Moliere, Colbert, and Fenelon; and furnished the articles of jurisprudence for the new Encyclopedie.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

REMIGIO FLORENTINO, a Dominican of Florence in the 16th century, who translated Ammianus Marcellinus and Cornelius Nepos into Italian. He was also the author of Reflections upon the History of Guicciardini; and of some Italian poems. He died in 1580.—Tiraboschi.

RENAU D'ELISAGARAY (Bernard), a mathematician, was born in Bearn in 1652. He distinguished himself by his improvements in the construction and management of ships, and was besides an able engineer. For his various services he was made counsellor of marine, and chevalier of the order of St. Louis, to which was added a considerable pension. He was admitted a member of the academy of sciences in 1699, and died in 1719. He wrote the Theory of Manœuvring Vessels, printed in 1689, 8vo.; and several letters in defence of his theory, against Huygens and Bernouilli.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

RENAUDOT (Theophrastus), a French physician, was born at London in 1583. He was the first who published a Gazette in France, so called, as is supposed, from the Venetian coin, una Gazetta, for which such papers were originally sold at Venice. Renaudot obtained the privilege of publishing the Gazette of France for himself and family. He died in 1653. His other works are, an Abridgment of the Life of the Prince de Condé, 4to.; the Life of Marshal Gassion; and the Life of Cardinal Michael Mazarin, 4to.—Moreri.

RENAUDOT (Eusebius), grandson of the preceding, was born at Paris in 1646. He entered into orders, and distinguished himself by his great knowledge of the oriental languages. The cardinal de Nouailles took him with him to Rome, where pope Clement V. paid him great respect, and gave him the priory of Fosse in Brittany. On visiting Florence the grand duke gave him apartments in his palace; and the academy in that city chose him a member. He was also a member of the French academy, and of other learned societies. He died in France in 1720. His works are, a Continuation of Nicole's book on the Perpetuity of Faith, 2 vols. 4to.; Historia Patriarcharum Alexandrinorum, Jacobitarum, &c. 4to.; a collection of the Antient Oriental Liturgies, 2 vols. 4to.; Relations of the Indies and China, with Observations; [this is a translation from the Arabic, and has been published in English;] a Translation of the Life of Athanasius from the Arabic, &c.—Moreri.

RESENIUS (Peter), a learned Danish writer, was born at Copenhagen in 1625. He studied the law at Leyden, and professed that faculty afterwards at Padua. On his return to Denmark he was made counsellor of state. He died in 1688. His works are, Jus aulicum Norvegicum, 4to.; an Icelandic Dictionary, 4to.; an edition of the Edda of the Icelanders, 4to.; of this last Mallet gave a translation in his Introduction to the History of Denmark.—Bayle.

RESSIUS (Rutger), professor of Greek at Louvaine, was a native of the principality of Liege, and died in 1545. Erasmus had a high opinion of him. He published Theophilus's Institutions of the Greek Law, 1536; the Aphorisms of Hippocrates; and the Laws of Plato, 1533.—Erasmi. Epist.

RESTAUT (Peter), advocate to the king of France, was born at Beauvais in 1694. He was distinguished by his skill and probity, and died at Paris in 1764. He wrote the Principles of French Grammar, 12mo.; which is accounted the best book on the subject.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

RESTOUT (John), painter in ordinary to the French king, was born at Caen in 1692. He became director of the academy of painting, and died in 1768. Two of his small pictures are of Alpheus saved by Diana, and the Triumph of Bacchus. His son John Bernard was also a member of the academy of painting. He died in 1797. He was an excellent artist.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

RETZ (John Francis Paul de Gondy, cardinal de); was born at Montmirail in Brie, of a noble family, in 1614. He was educated under the celebrated Vincent de Paul, and in 1643 received the doctor's degree from the Sorbonne. The same year he was named coadjutor of the archbishop of Paris; and while he was soliciting the highest dignities in the church he fought several duels. His conduct in other respects was also very unbecoming his profession. In the civil wars he raised a regiment, to which he gave the name of Corinth, because he was titular archbishop of that place. At length he made peace with the court on condition of his being created a cardinal; but he still continued to cabal against the government, for which he was imprisoned at Vincennes and Nantes. He made his escape from the last place, and went into several countries. In 1661 he returned to France, and obtained his pardon and the abbey of St. Dennis. This turbulent and ambitious prelate died at Paris in 1679. He wrote Memoirs of his own Life, printed the first time in 1717, and since at Amsterdam, in 4 vols. 12mo. He also wrote the History of the Conspiracy of Count Fiesco.—Moreri.

REUCHLIN (John), a learned German, was born at Pforzheim in 1455. His name signifying smoke in his native language, he altered it to the corresponding Greek word Capnio, but he is generally known by the former. He acquired a great knowledge of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages. After teaching with reputation at Orleans, he was employed on state matters by some of the German princes. He died at Ingoldstadt in 1522. He wrote De Arte Cabalifica, folio, 1517; and the famous Epistole obscurorum virorum have been attributed to him, but not on sufficient grounds.

REUVEN (Peter), a Dutch painter, was born in 1650. He ornamented the palace of Loo in Holland with some fine pieces, and died in 1718.—Pill.

REVELY (Willey), an English architect, was a disciple of sir William Chambers. He accompanied Athenian Stuart to Greece, and was the editor of his great work on the Antiquities of that country. Mr. Revely was the architect of the new church at Southampton. He died in 1799.—Cent. Mag.

REYNEAU (Charles René), a French mathematician, was born at Brissac in 1650. He taught philosophy at Toulon, and was elected to the mathematical chair at Angers, in 1683. He published a work called, "Analysis demonstrated," by which he undertook to reduce into a body the Theories of Newton, Descartes, Leibnitz, &c. He was a member of the academy of sciences, and died in 1728. His other works are, the Science of Calculation, 2 vols. 4to.; Logic, or the Art of Reasoning, 12mo.—Moreri.

REYNER (Edward), a nonconformist divine, was born in Yorkshire, and educated at Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and about 1627 settled at Lincoln; but in 1662 he was ejected from his living, and died soon after. He wrote Precepts for Christian Practice; Vindication of Human Learning and Universities, &c. His son John Reyner was fellow of Emmanuel college, Cambridge; but being deprived for nonconformity, he practised as a physician at Nottingham, where he died in the flower of his age. He was a man of considerable learning.—Calamy.

REYNOLDS (Edward), an English prelate, was born at Southampton in 1595, and educated at Merton college, Oxford, after which he became preacher at Lincoln's Inn, and rector of Braynton in Northamptonshire. He took the covenant in the civil wars, and was chosen a member of the assembly of divines at Westminster. At the restoration he was one of the presbyterian divines in the Savoy conference, about the Liturgy, but being offered the bishopric of Norwich, he accepted it, and gave great offence to his old friends. He died in 1676. His works have been printed in one volume folio. They are Calvinistic.—Wood, A. O.

REYNOLDS (sir Joshua), a celebrated painter, was the son of a clergyman at Plympton in Devonshire, and born there in 1723. Being intended for the church he received a suitable education under his father, and then removed to Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts; but having a great taste for drawing he resolved to make painting his profession, and accordingly was placed under Hudson, the portrait painter. About 1749 he went to Italy, in company with the honourable Mr. Keppel, his early friend and patron. After studying the works of the most illustrious masters two years, Mr. Reynolds returned to London, where he found no encouragement given to any other branch of the art than to portrait painting. He was of course under the necessity of complying with the prevailing taste, and in that walk soon became unrivalled. The first picture by which he distinguished himself, after his return, was the portrait of lord Keppel. Still he did not confine himself wholly to portraits, but painted several historical pictures of high and acknowledged merit. When the royal academy was instituted he was appointed president, which station he held with honour to himself and advantage to the arts till 1791, and then resigned it. He was also appointed principal painter to the king, and knighted. His literary merits, and other accomplishments, procured him the friendship of the most distinguished men of genius in his time, particularly Johnson, Burke, Goldsmith, and Garrick; and sir Joshua had the honour of instituting the celebrated literary club of which they were members. He was likewise a member of the royal society, and of that of antiquaries; and was created doctor of laws by the universities of Oxford and Dublin. Sir Joshua's academical discourses display the soundest judgment, the most refined taste, and a perfect acquaintance with the works of different masters; and they are written in a clear and elegant style. He died in 1792, and lies buried in St. Paul's cathedral. Having no children, he bequeathed the principal part of his property to his niece, since married to the earl of Inchiquin, now marquiss of Thomond.—Preface to his Works, 2 vols. 4to., and 3 vols. 8vo.

REYRAU (Francis Philip de Laurens de), a French divine, was born at Longueville, in Limousin, in 1734, and died at Orleans in 1782. He became canon-regular of Chancelade, and a member of the academy of inscriptions and belles-lettres. His works are, 1. A Hymn to the Sun; 2. Idylls, in elegant prose; 3. Sacred Poems, 8vo.; 4. Manuale Clericorum, 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

REYS (Antony Dos), a learned Portuguese divine, was born at Pernes in 1690. He obtained some considerable preferment, and was appointed chronologer of the kingdom, but he refused several bishoprics. He died in 1738. His principal works are; 1. Latin Poems; 2. Life of Ferdinand de Menezes, in Latin; 3. Introduction to a Miscellaneous Collection of Portuguese Poets; 4. An edition of the Corpus Illustrum Poetarum Lusitanorum qui Latine Scripserunt, 7 vols. 4to.—Ibid.

RHADAMISTUS, the son of Pharasmanes, king of Iberia. He put to death his uncle Mithridates, whose daughter Zenobia he had married. He was afterwards defeated by the Parthians, on which he stabbed his wife; but his father caused him to be put to death, A. D. 52.—Tacitus.

RHAZIS, an Arabian physician of great learning and experience, who died about 935. He was the first who wrote on the small pox, which treatise was translated and published by Dr. Mead. All his works were printed in folio, 1548.—Friend's Hist. Physic.

RHENANUS (Beatus), a learned German, was born at Rheineck in 1485, and died at Strasbourg in 1547. He was corrector of the press for Frobenius, and by that means formed an intimacy with Erasmus. He wrote a History of Germany, 4to.; Illustri Provinciarum utriusque imperio cum Romano, tum Constantinopolitano, servientis Descriptio, 8vo. He was also the editor of Velleius Paterculus, and of some other works.—Moreri.

RHENFORD (James), professor of oriental languages and divinity at Franeker, was born at Mulheim in 1654, and died in 1712. He wrote several learned treatises on subjects more curious than useful.—Moreri.

RHEZ (John David), was born in the isle of Anglesey in 1534. He became student of Christ church college, Oxford, and at the age of twenty-one went to Italy, where he took his doctor's degree in physic, and was so well skilled in the Italian language as to be appointed moderator of the school at Pistoia. On his return to his native country he practised physic at Brecknock, and died there in 1609. He wrote De Italica Lingua Pronunciatione; Cambro Britannica; Cymerecve Lingua Institutiones et rudimenta, &c.—Wood.

RHODIUS (Ludovicus Caelius), was born at Rovigo in the state of Venice in 1450. He taught Latin and Greek at Padua, where he died in 1525. His principal work is Antiqua Lectiones, printed at Basil in 1566, and at Frankfurt in 1666.—Ibid.

RHOIBUS (Ambrose), a mathematician, was born near Wittemberg in 1577. He became professor of physic and mathematics at Anso in Norway, but in the public confusions of the country he was sent to prison, where he died in 1633. He wrote on the Transmigration of Souls, and other works.—Moreri.

RHODIUS (John), a Danish physician, was born at Copenhagen in 1587, and died at Padua in 1659. His works are; 1. Notæ & Lexicon in Scribonius Largum de compositione medicamentorum, 4to.; 2. Medicinal Observations, 8vo.; 3. A Treatise on Artificial Baths, 8vo.—Moreri.

RHODMAN (Laurence), rector of the university of Wittemberg, was born at Saffoweri, in Saxony, in 1546, and died in 1606. He wrote Historia Sacra, 4to.; and translated Diodorus Siculus into Latin, with other works.—Ibid.

RHODENAMER (John), a painter, was born at Munich in 1564. He settled at Venice, and studied after Tintoret. His pieces are distinguished by high finishing, and brilliant colouring. The time of his death is not known.—De Piles.

RIBADENEIRA (Peter), a Spanish jesuit, was a native of Toledo. He studied at Paris, and at Padua, after which he taught rhetoric with great reputation at Palermo. He died at Madrid in 1611, aged 84. His works are, Lives of the Saints, folio, 1616; the Lives of St. Ignatius Loyola, St. Francis de Borgia, of the Fathers Lainez and Salmeron; a Treatise of the Schism of England; another entitled the Prince, full of bad political maxims; and the Library of Writers among the Jesuits, 8vo.—Moreri.

RIBERA (Anastafius-Pantaleon de), a Spanish poet, called the Scarron of Spain, was born at Madrid, and on account of his wit was entertained at the court of Philip IV. His poems, printed at Saragossa in 1640, are of the burlesque kind. There was a jesuit of this name who was an able professor at Salamanca, where he died in 1591. He wrote Commentaries on the Minor Prophets, fol.; on the Gospel of St. John; on the Epistle to the Hebrews, and on the Apocalypse.—Moreri.

RIGAUD (Dominic), a French ecclesiastic, was born at Toulouse in 1743, and died at Paris in 1803. He translated the works of Plutarch into French with great fidelity; and wrote a poem in eight cantos, entitled, the Sphere, enriched with curious notes.—Novæ Diss. Hist.

RICAUT or RYCAUT (sir Paul), an English writer, was the son of sir Peter Ricaut, knight. In 1661 he became secretary to the earl of Winchelsea, ambassador to the Ottoman court, and while at Constantinople he wrote the Present State of the Ottoman Empire, printed at London in 1670, fol., and in 1675 in 8vo. He was consul at Smyrna eleven years; and in 1685 he became secretary for the provinces of Leinster and Connaught, in Ireland. King William appointed him his resident for the Hanse towns, where he remained ten years. In 1700 he returned to England, and died the same year. His other works are, 1. A Continuation of Knolles's History of the Turks, folio; 2. A Continuation of Platina's Lives of the Popes, fol.; 3. A translation of Vega's Royal Commentaries of Peru, folio.—Eng. Brit.

RICCATI (Vincent), a jesuit, was born at Castel-Franco in the territory of Treviso. He became professor of mathematics at Bologna, and published a learned work on the Integral Calculus, 3 vols. 4to. He died in 1775, aged 68.—Novæ Diss. Hist.

RICCI (Matthew), a jesuit, was born at Macerata in 1552. He went missionary to the Indies, and having finished his studies at Goa, was sent by his superiors to China, where on account of his skill in mathematics he obtained the favour of the emperor, and leave to build a church at Pekin. He died in that city in 1610. Several of his Letters and Memoirs on China have been printed.—Moreri.

RICCI (Michael Angelo), a cardinal, was born at Rome in 1619. He was a profound mathematician, and distinguished himself by an able treatise de Maximis et Minimis. Innocent XI. honoured him with the cardinalship in 1681; but he died the year following.—Tiraboschi.

RICCI (Sebastian), a painter, was born at Belluno in the Venetian territory in 1639. He visited Vienna, Paris, and London, at all which places he acquired considerable distinction. He died at Venice in 1734. His nephew, Marc Ricci, was also a good painter of landscape and history. He died in 1730.—D'Argenville.

RICCI (Laurence), an Italian jesuit, and the last general of the order, was a native of Florence of a distinguished family. He was elected general in 1758, and when the Society was suppressed in 1773, Ricci and some of his fraternity were confined in the castle of St. Angelo at Rome, where he died in 1775.—Newsp. Dir. Hist.

RICCIO (Domenico), a painter of Verona, was born in 1494, and died in 1517. In a church at Verona is a fine picture by him of the gathering of the manna in the wilderness.—De Piles. Pitt.

RICCIOLI (John Baptist), a jesuit, was born at Ferrara in 1598. He became professor of divinity at Parma and Bologna, but he is known chiefly by his mathematical works, which are; 1. Geographiz et Hydrographiz, lib. xii. 1672; 2. Chronologia Reformata, folio; 3. Astronomia Vetus, 2 vols. fol.; 4. Astronomia Reformata, folio. He died in 1671.—Moreri.

RICCOBONI (Louis), an Italian actor and dramatic writer, was born at Modena. He performed at the Italian theatre in Paris some years, but in 1729 he renounced the stage from religious scruples. He died in 1753, aged 76. He wrote several comedies, and a Discourse on the Reformation of the Theatre, 12mo.; Observations on Comedy, and on the Genius of Moliere, 12mo.; Historical Reflections upon the Theatres of Europe, 8vo.; and a History of the Italian Theatre, in 1 vol. 8vo. His wife, madame Riccoboni, was a native of Paris, a good actress, and an ingenious writer. She wrote a number of novels in an agreeable style, printed together at Paris in 9 vols. 12mo. She died in great distress in 1792.

RICHARD I. king of England, surnamed Cœur de Lion, ascended the throne on the death of his father Henry II. in 1189. His coronation was distinguished by a massacre of the Jews. In 1190 Richard joined in the croisade with Philip-Augustus of France, but a division taking place between the two princes, the latter returned to Europe. Richard remained in the East, where he displayed uncommon valour against Saladin, whom he defeated near Cezarea, and having made a truce embarked in a vessel which was shipwrecked on the coast of Italy. He then travelled in disguise through part of Germany, but being discovered by Leopold, duke of Austria, he was made prisoner and sent to the emperor Henry II. who kept him confined in a castle some time. At length he was ransomed by his subjects for a large sum. He landed at Sandwich in 1194, after which he was crowned a second time. Philip-Augustus, having, contrary to treaty, seized on part of Normandy, Richard invaded France with a large army, but a peace was concluded in 1196. The war was renewed in 1199, and Richard, in besieging the castle of Chalons, received a wound from an arrow, of which he died the same year, aged 42. The valour of Richard was disgraced by an inordinate ambition and insatiable avarice.—Rapin. Hume.

RICHARD II. was the son of Edward, prince of Wales, commonly called the black prince, and succeeded Edward III. his grandfather, in 1377. In his minority he displayed remarkable vigour and promptitude in quelling the dangerous insurrection headed by Wat the Tyler, in Smithfield. When that infurgent was slain by Walworth, mayor of London, the young king, then about fifteen years of age, rode up to the irritated populace, and said: "Follow your king, I will be your leader and redress your grievances." The people, struck with astonishment, obeyed the call; and dispersed quietly to their own homes, with the exception of a few ringleaders, who were executed. The remainder of this reign, however, was less fortunate. Discontents prevailed among the nobility, of which Henry, duke of Lancaster, availed himself, and assumed the title of king. Richard was betrayed into his hands by the earl of Northumberland, in 1399, and confined in Pontefract castle, where he abdicated the throne in a written instrument, but was assassinated the same year.—Ibid.

RICHARD III. was the brother of Edward IV. and created duke of Gloucester. He was deformed from the womb, but more depraved in his mind than in his person. He caused his nephews Edward V. and Richard duke of York, to be secretly murdered in the Tower, after which he procured himself to be proclaimed king, June 22, 1483. The duke of Buckingham, who had assisted him in his usurpation, conspired against him, but was taken prisoner and beheaded. Henry, earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII. of the house of Lancaster, was abroad, but returned privately and landed at Milford in Wales, where he was joined by a few followers, which afterwards increased. He then marched against the tyrant, whom he encountered at Bosworth-field, where Richard, after performing prodigies of valour, was slain, and his crown being found was placed on the head of Henry, August 22, 1485.—Ibid.

RICHARD (Thomas), a native of Devonshire, and a benedictine monk in the abbey of Tavistock. He translated into English verse Boetius's five books of the Consolations of Philosophy, printed in the abbey of Tavistock in 1525.—Wood.

Richard (Martin), a landscape painter, was a native of Antwerp, and born with only his left arm; yet he became an excellent artist, and was much admired by Vanduyck. He died in 1636, aged 45. His brother David Richard applied also to painting, but was inferior to Martin.—Pitt.

RICHARDS (Nathaniel), a dramatic writer, was educated at Caius college, Cambridge, where he took his bachelor's degree in 1634. He wrote a tragedy entitled, Mefalina, and his poems were published in 1645.—Lampshire's Lives of Poets.

RICHARDSON (Samuel), a printer and ingenious writer, was born in Derbyshire in 1689. His education was confined, and in 1706 he was bound apprentice to Mr. Wilde, of Stationers' hall, and after the expiration of his time he worked as compositor and corrector of the prefs for some years. At length he took up his freedom and set up business for himself, first in a court in Fleet-street, and afterwards in Salisbury-square. He soon became one of the principal in his profession, and by the interest of Mr. Onslow, speaker of the house of commons, obtained the printing of the Journals of that house. In 1754 he was chosen master of the stationers' company; and in 1760 purchased a moiety of the patent of law printer to the king. In 1740 he published his Pamela, a novel which met with an uncommon reception, and encouraged the author to proceed in the same career. His next performance was Clarissa Harlowe, which is esteemed his masterpiece, though his novel of Sir Charles Grandison possesses great beauties. Besides these works, which have all a fine moral tendency, Mr. Richardson published a volume of Familiar Letters, intended for the use of young people; an edition of Æsop's Fables, with Reflections, and a paper in the Rambler. His correspondence with many persons of distinguished eminence was published in 1804, with his life by Mrs. Barbauld, from whence this is taken. Richardson possessed a very amiable and friendly disposition, and had a strong sense of religion. He died in 1761.

RICHARDSON (John), a native of Cheshire, was bred at Dublin university, where he took the degree of doctor in divinity, and afterwards became bishop of Ardagh, but on the breaking out of the Irish rebellion he was obliged to retire to London, where he died in 1654. He wrote Observations on the Old Testament, in one volume, folio. — Wood.

RICHARDSON (Jonathan), an English portrait painter, was born in 1665. He was the pupil of Riley, whose niece he married. He was, however, but a middling artist, though a worthy and ingenious man. Mr. Richardson assisted his son in publishing an account of statues, bas-reliefs, drawings, and pictures, in Italy, 8vo. 1722. He died in 1745. He published the Life of Milton, 8vo. The younger Richardson wrote the life of his father, and died in 1771. — Gen. Biog. Dict. Walpole.

RICHARDSON (Joseph), a lawyer and poet, was born at Hexham in Northumberland, and in 1774 entered of St John's college, Cambridge, from whence, in 1779, he removed to the Middle Temple, and in due course was called to the bar. He was brought into parliament by the duke of Northumberland, but did not make any distinguished figure as a senator or barrister. He died in June 1803. Mr. Richardson wrote Criticisms on the Rolliad, and Probationary Odes for the Laureatship, two satirical works on public characters, which were popular when published. Besides these he was the author of the Fugitive, a comedy, performed with success. — Genl. Mag.

RICHELET (Cæsar Peter), a French writer, was born in 1631 at Cheminon in Champagne, and died at Paris in 1698. He compiled a curious Dictionary of the French Language, the best edition of which is that of Lyons in 1759, 3 vols. folio. He also published a Dictionary of Rhimes, and other works. — Novv. Dict. Hist.

RICHIEUX (Armand Du Plessis de), a celebrated cardinal and statesman, was born of a distinguished family at Paris in 1585. After completing his studies at the Sorbonne he went to Rome, and in 1607 was made bishop of Lucon. On his return to France he advanced himself into favour by an insinuating address, and by his eloquence was appointed almoner to Mary de Medicis, by whose favour, in 1616, he obtained the appointment of secretary of state, but the death of his friend the marshal D'Ancre occasioned his temporary disgrace, on which he went to Avignon, but Louis XIII. recalled him to the ministry, and he soon took the lead in the management of public affairs. Having a great hatred to the protestants, he pressed the siege of Rochelle in person, and by his vigorous efforts compelled it to surrender at discretion in 1628. After reducing this important place he marched against the Huguenots in other provinces, and by his promptitude and skill restored tranquillity to the kingdom. He next commanded the army in Italy against the Austrians, where he was unsuccessful. He was for some time again in disgrace, but at length recovered the royal favour, and reigned absolute during the remainder of his life. Pope Gregory XV. made him a cardinal, and he was also created a duke and peer of France. Notwithstanding his ambition and cruelty, he had great qualities. He founded the French academy; established the royal botanical garden, and was a liberal patron of men of letters. He died in 1642. His works are, 1. The Political Testament, 2 vols. 8vo.; 2. Method of Controversies concerning Points of Faith; 3. Defence of the Catholic Faith; 4. Christian Instruction; 5. Perfection of a Christian; 6. A Journal, which is very curious; 7. Letters, Relations, &c. — Life of Richelieu by Le Clerc.

RICHER (Edmund), a French ecclesiastic and doctor of the Sorbonne, who became a furious defender of the faction of the league, and vindicated the principle of assassinating heretical princes. He afterwards asserted with equal zeal the superiority of councils over popes, which occasioned considerable controversy and noise in France. His book on ecclesiastical power was proscribed at Rome, and Richer was obliged to make a retraction. He died in 1631. His principal works are;

1. Vindiciæ Doctrinæ majorum de Auctoritate Ecclesiæ in rebus Fidei et Morum, 4to.;
2. De Potestate Ecclesiæ in rebus temporalibus, 4to.;
3. History of General Councils, 3 vols. 4to.;
4. Obstetrix Animorum.—Dupin. Mereri.

RICHEN (Henry), was born in 1686. He was designed for the law, which profession he renounced and applied wholly to literature. He died at Paris in 1748. His works are, 1. A Translation of Virgil's Eclogues; 2. A Collection of Fables; 3. The Life of Mecænas, with notes; 4. Two Tragedies, Sabinus and Coriolanus.—Novv. Diß. Hist.

RICIUS (Paul), a converted Jew in the 16th century. He was a German, and taught philosophy at Pavia with great reputation. The emperor Maximilian appointed him his physician. He had a controversy with Eccius on the question whether the heavenly bodies are animated, which Ricius maintained in the affirmative. He wrote, De Cælesti Agriculturæ, folio; Talmudica Commentariola, quarto; De LXXIII Mosaicæ Sanctionis Ediçtis, 4to. &c.—Mereri.

RICOSOMI (Anthony), professor of eloquence at Padua, where he died in 1599, aged 58. His works are, 1. Historical Commentaries; 2. Treatise on Rhetoric, 8vo.;
- 3. History of the University of Padua;
- 4. Commentaries on some of the Works of Aristotle and Cicero; all written in pure latin.—Trabeschi.

RIDER (William), an English divine, was several years under master of St. Paul's school, and lecturer of St. Vedast, Fosterlane. He published a History of England; a Commentary on the Bible, and other compilations. He died in 1785.—Gent. Mag.

RIDGELY (Thomas), a dissenting minister, was born in 1670 at London, in which city he became pastor of an independent congregation, and obtained a doctor's degree from Scotland. He wrote, a Body of Divinity, in folio, and died in 1737.—Gent. Biog. Diß.

RIDLEY (Nicholas), a learned bishop and martyr, was born in Northumberland in 1500, and educated first at Newcastle, and next at Pembroke-hall, Cambridge, where he was elected fellow in 1524. His great abilities and piety recommended him to the notice of archbishop Cranmer, by whose interest he was made chaplain to the king, and chosen master of Pembroke-hall. In the reign of Edward VI. he was nominated to the see of Rochester, and had a principal share in framing the liturgy, articles, and homilies. In 1550 he was translated to the bishopric of London, and by his interest with the young king he obtained the foundation of those noble charities of Christ's hospital, St. Bartholomew's, St. Thomas's in Southwark, and Bridewell. On the decease of Edward, he unfortunately joined the friends of lady Jane Grey, for which, and his zeal in the reformation, he was by queen Mary sent to Oxford, to dispute with some of the popish bishops, and on his refusing to recant was burnt there opposite Baliol college, in company with bishop Latimer, in 1555. He wrote against Transubstantiation, and after his death were printed some of his Sermons and Letters.—Biog. Brit. Life by Dr. G. Ridley.

RIDLEY (sir Thomas), a learned civilian, was of the same family as the preceding, but born at Ely. He was educated at Eton, and next at King's college, Cambridge. He afterwards became a master in chancery, and vicar-general to the archbishop of Canterbury. He died in 1628. He wrote a View of Civil and Ecclesiastical Law, 8vo. —Wood.

RIDLEY (Gloster), an English divine, was descended from bishop Ridley, whose Line he wrote. He obtained his christian name from being born on board the Gloster East Indiaman at sea in 1702. He received his education at Winchester school, from whence he was sent to New college, Oxford, where he was chosen fellow, and in 1799 took his degree of bachelor of laws. His only church preferment for a long time was the college living of Weston, in Norfolk, and the donative of Poplar, in Middlesex. At last archbishop Secker gave him a prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury, and conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws. He died in 1774. Besides the Life of his ancestor he wrote an Answer to the Confessional in three Letters; Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lectures; Melampus, a Poem; and two Tragedies which were never printed. His son James, who was educated at Winchester, became fellow of New college, Oxford. He obtained the chapelry of Rumbold, in Essex, and wrote the Tales of the Genii, 2 vols., a work of merit; also a novel entituled, James Lovegrove. He died young.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

RIDOLFI (Claudio), a painter of Verona, was born in 1560, and died in 1644. His portraits and historical pictures possess great excellence.—D'Argenville.

RIDPATH (George), a Scotch miscellaneous writer, was born in Stirlingshire in 1663, and died in 1717. He was one of the clerks of session.—Gent. Biog. Diß.

RIEDESEL (John Herman, baron de), minister from the king of Prussia to the court of Vienna, where he died in 1785, aged 45. He published his Travels in Greece, in the German language.—Novv. Diß. Hist.

RIGELS (M.), governor of the pages at the court of Copenhagen, published an excellent History of Denmark. He died in 1802, in his 74th year.—Ibid.

RIENZI (Nicholas Gabrino de), an obscure Roman in the 14th century, who had an excellent education, which was improved by a strong memory and a vigorous understanding. He rose to such a reputation as to be sent by his fellow citizens to Clement VI. at Avignon in order to prevail with that pontiff to return to Rome. His eloquence pleased the pope, though it did not persuade him. Gabrino, on his return, formed the design of making himself master of Rome, with the title of Tribune. Having gained some partizans he entered the capitol, harangued the people, and elevated the standard of liberty. For some time he was successful, his government was popular, and even Petrarch wrote in his favour, comparing him to Brutus. At length a conspiracy was formed against him, on which he fled, but was taken and put to death in 1354.—Life by Brumoy and Cerceau.

RIGALTUS (Nicolas) or Rigault, a learned Frenchman, was born at Paris in 1577. He received his education among the jesuits, who endeavoured to prevail on him to enter into their order, which he refused, and embraced the profession of an advocate. On Casaubon's going to England Rigault succeeded him as librarian to the king, who appointed him procurer-general of the supreme court of Nanci. He was afterwards intendant of Metz. He died at Toul in 1654. His works are, 1. Excellent editions of Cyprian, Tertullian, and Minutius Felix, with Observations and Notes; 2. Continuation of Thuanus's History; 3. De Verbis quæ in Novellis Constitutionibus post Justinianum occurrunt Glossarium, 4to.; 4. Diatriba de Satira Juvenalis; 5. Punus Parafiticum; 6. Auctores finium Regundorum; 7. De Modo saniori Proposito, &c.—Moreri.

RIGAUD (Hyacinth), an eminent painter, was born at Perpignan in 1663. He was director of the academy of painting, and Louis XV. gave him letters of nobility, and the order of St. Michael. He died at Paris in 1749. He has been called the Vandyck of France.—D'Argenville.

RILEY (John), a painter, was born at London in 1646. After the death of sir Peter Lily he gained considerable reputation and employment as a portrait painter. He died in 1691.—Vertue.

RIMALDI (Orazio), an historical painter, was born at Pisa in 1598, and died in 1638.—Felibien.

RINCON (Antonio del), a Spanish painter, was born at Guadalaxara, and died in 1500.—Ibid.

RINUCCINI (Octavio), an Italian poet, was born at Florence, and accompanied Mary de Medicis to France. He invented operas, though there are some who attribute the contrivance to a Roman gentleman named Emilio del Cavalero. The operas of Rinuccini are greatly admired. His poetry is elegant. He died at Florence in 1621.—Trabocchi.

RIOLAN (John), a physician, was born at Amiens, and died at Paris in 1605. He was a zealous defender of the doctrine of Hippocrates against the chemists, and left several works on medicine and anatomy, printed at Paris in 1610 in folio. His son Jake Riolan was also an able physician at Paris, where he died in 1657. He wrote, 1. Comparatio veteris Medicinæ cum novâ, 12mo.; 2. Schola Anatomica, 8vo., reprinted afterwards in folio, under the title of Anatomia Corporis Humani; 3. Gigantomachia, 8vo. This was on the subject of a discovery of the bones of pretended giants.—Moreri.

RIPLEY (George), an English alchemist, who died in 1490. He wrote a work entitled "A Compound of Alchymie, &c." and "Aurum Potabile, or the universal Medicine."—Aspauls Theat. Chymic.

RIPPERDA (John William, baron de), an extraordinary character, was born of a noble family in Groningen, and served some time as colonel of infantry in the Dutch service. In 1715 he was nominated ambassador to the court of Spain, where he gained the favour of Philip V., who made him a grandee of the kingdom, and minister of war and finances. But afterwards he fell into disgrace and was imprisoned at Segovia. He escaped from thence, and going through Portugal went to England, and from thence to Holland. Lastly he made a voyage to Morocco, where he turned Mahometan, but endeavoured to introduce a new religion blended of christianity, judaism, and mohammedanism. He died at Tetuan in 1737.—Novv. Diss. Hist.

RISDON (Tristram), a topographical writer, was born at Winscot, in Devonshire, about 1580. He was educated at Oxford, and died at his family seat in 1640. He wrote the History of his native county; many copies of which are extant in MS. There was printed a mutilated edition of it in 1714, in 2 vols. 8vo. The Chorographical Description was printed from the original in one volume, quarto, in 1785.—Prince's Worthies of Devon.

RISLEY (Thomas), a puritan divine, was born at Warrington, in Lancashire, in 1630, and educated at Pembroke college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, of which he was deprived in 1662 for nonconformity. He died in 1716. He wrote a book called the Curfed Family, 8vo. 1700.—Calamy.

RITSON (Joseph), an English lawyer and antiquary, was born at Stockton-upon-Tees in 1752. He became eminent as a conveyancer in Gray's Inn, and in 1785 purchased the office of high bailiff of the liberties of the Savoy. He was a man of extreme irascibility of temper and self-conceit. He died in 1803. His works are, Observations on Johnson and Stevens's Edition of Shakspeare; 2. Curfory Criticisms on Malone's Edition of Shakspeare; 3. Observations on Warton's History of English Poetry; 4. Descent of the Crown of England; 5. Spartan Manual; 6. Collection of English Songs, 3 vols., and of Scotch Songs, 2 vols.; 7. English Anthology; 8. Metrical Romances, 9 vols.; 9. Bibliographia Poetica; 10.

Treatise on Abstinence from Animal Food. He had a most uncouth and whimsical mode of orthography.—Gent. Mag.

RITTENHOUSE (David), an American astronomer, was a native of Philadelphia, and served his apprenticeship to a clock-maker. He was also a farmer, but pursued his mathematical and astronomical studies with such success that in 1769 the American philosophical society requested him to make his observations on the transit of Venus over the sun's disk, which he performed with great accuracy. He succeeded Franklin as president of that society, and died in 1796, aged 64. Several of his papers are in the American Transactions.—Gent. Mag. Montbly Mag.

RITTERSHUSIUS (Conrad), a German civilian, was born in 1560 at Brunswick, and died professor of law at Altorf in 1613. He published an edition of Oppian's Cynegeticon, and other works. His son Nicolas became professor of law at the same university, and died in 1670. He published Genealogia Imperatorum, Regum, Ducum, Comitum, &c. 7 vols. folio.—Moreri.

RIVALZ (Anthony), an historical and portrait painter, was born in 1667 at Thoulouse, and died in 1735. He studied under his father, and afterwards at Rome, where he obtained a prize of the academy of St. Luke.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

RIVAROL (Anthony de), a French writer, was born in Languedoc in 1757, and died at Berlin in 1801. He translated Dante's Poem on Hell, but his version is not exact. His other works are, a Discourse on the Universality of the French Language, crowned by the academy of Berlin in 1784; Letters on Religion and Morality; a Little Almanack of Great Men, a satire; Letters to the French Nobility, 1792, 8vo.; the Political Life of La Fayette; Prospectus of a new Dictionary of the French Language, with a Discourse on the intellectual and moral Faculties of Man, 4to.; Poems.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

RIVET DE LA GRANGE (Anthony), a learned benedictine, was born in Poitou in 1683, and died in 1749. He employed thirty years of his life in writing the Literary History of France, of which he published 9 vols. in 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

RIVINUS (Andrew), whose true name was Barebmann, a physician, was born at Hall, in Saxony, in 1600. He was professor of poetry and philosophy at Leipzig, where he died in 1656. He wrote Remarks upon the ancient Christian Poets, and other miscellaneous pieces printed under the title of Philo-Physiologica, 1656, 4to. His other works are, 1. Veterum bonorum Scriptorum de Medicina Collectanea, 8vo.; 2. Mysteria Medico Physica, 12mo.—Moreri.

RIVINUS (Augustus-Quirinus), professor of physic and botany at Leipzig, where he died in 1722, aged 70. His works are, 1. Introductio in rem Herbariam, folio, with plates; 2. Ordo Plantarum quæ sunt floræ irregulari monopetalo-tetrapetalo-pentapetalo, folio; 3. Censura Medicamentorum Officialium, 4to.; 4. Dissertationes Medicæ, 4to.; 5. Manuductio ad Chimiæ pharmaceuticam, 8vo.; 6. Notitia Morborum.—Ibid.

RIZZIO or RICCIO (David), an Italian musician, was born at Turin. He played and sung with equal excellence; and accompanying the ambassador of the duke of Savoy to the court of Mary, queen of Scotland, that elegant prince shewed him great favour, and made him secretary for foreign languages. This gave such offence to Henry Darnley, her husband, that he and his associates assassinated Rizzio in her presence in 1566.—[See MARY.]

ROBERT, king of France, called the sage and devout, was crowned in 996, on the death of Hugh Capet, his father. He married his cousin Bertha, but pope Gregory V. declared the marriage void, and excommunicated the king, who took for his second wife the daughter of the count of Arles and Provence. He died in 1031.—Henault, Millot.

ROBERT BRUCE, a Scotch gentleman, who opposed John Baliol for the crown of Scotland, which was awarded to the latter by Edward I. of England. When Baliol was deposed, Bruce was elected king, and in 1314 defeated the English in the famous battle of Bannockburn. He afterwards made peace with Edward III., who renounced all claim to Scotland, for himself and his heirs. Bruce died in 1329, and on his death-bed desired that his heart might be carried to the holy land to be deposited in the holy sepulchre.—Buchanan.

ROBERTELLS (Francis), professor of philosophy and rhetoric at Padua, where he died in 1567. He wrote "Commentaries on some of the Greek and Latin Poets," and other works.—Moreri.

ROBERTSON (George), a landscape painter, was born in London. He made the tour of Italy, where he studied nature as well as the best masters. His manner bears the nearest resemblance to that of Salvator Rosa. He died in 1788.—Europ. Mag.

ROBERTSON (William), a divine of the established church, was born at Dublin in 1705, and educated at Glasgow, after which he obtained some preferment in Ireland, which he resigned on turning Arian in 1764. He published an Apology for his Faith and Conduct, and having obtained a doctor's degree from Glasgow was presented by the company of merchant taylors in London to the mastership of the grammar-school at Wolverhampton, where he died in 1783.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

ROBERTSON (Joseph), an ingenious divine, was born at Knipe, in Westmoreland, in 1726, and educated at Appleby school, from whence, in 1746, he removed to Queen's college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and having taken orders was in 1758 presented to the vicarage of Herriard, in Hampshire. In 1764 he engaged as a writer in the Critical Review, and continued in that capacity till 1785. In 1770 he was presented to the rectory of Sutton, in Essex, and in 1779 to the vicarage of Horn-castle in Lincolnshire. In 1782 he published an Introduction to the Study of Polite Literature, a small but useful volume. This was followed in 1785 by his celebrated Essay on Punctuation, a work of great merit. In 1788 appeared his Dissertation on the Parian Chronicle, which learned performance did not receive the encouragement it deserved. In 1795 he published a new translation of Telemachus, with Notes and the Life of the Author. In 1798 he printed an Essay on the Education of Young Ladies, and the year following an Essay on the Nature of the English Verse. He died in January 1802.—Monthly Mag.

ROBERTSON (William), an historian and divine of the church of Scotland, was born in 1721, and educated at the university of Edinburgh, where he took the degree of doctor in divinity, and having entered into orders became minister of the Old Gray Friars church in that city. He was also appointed one of his majesty's chaplains in ordinary for Scotland, and was offered some considerable preferment in the church of England, which he chose to decline. His first performance was the History of Charles V., a work which displayed superior powers of discrimination, and was written in a very luminous style. For this he was appointed royal historiographer for Scotland. He also was elected principal of the university of Edinburgh. His other works were, the History of Scotland, not altogether void of partiality; the History of America; an Historical Disquisition concerning India, and a single Sermon. Dr. Robertson was a man of most amiable manners and brilliant accomplishments. He died in 1793.—Encycl. Brit. Suppl.

ROBERVAL (Gilles Perfonne, fleur de), was born at a place of the same name in the diocese of Beauvais in 1602. He became professor of mathematics at Paris, where he acquired the esteem of Gassendus and Morin. He succeeded the latter in the mathematical chair of the college royal. His principal works are, 1. A Treatise of Mechanics, inserted in the harmony of Father Merfennus; 2. An Edition of Aristarchus Sanus. He died in 1675.—Moreri.

ROBESPIERRE (Maximilian-Isidore), was born at Arras, of a poor family, in 1759, and brought up at the expense of the bishop of the diocese. After finishing his studies at Paris he entered upon the profession of the law, but not with much success. On the breaking out of the French revolution he became a member of the National Assembly, and commenced a newspaper called L'Union ou Journal de la Liberté, which was conducted with extreme violence. He became the chief of the jacobins, and at length obtained the supreme command in France. To maintain his power he had recourse to the most cruel expedients. The prisons were crowded with unfortunate victims of all ages and of both sexes. Numbers were daily put to death, and the streets were literally deluged with blood. At length a conspiracy was formed against the tyrant, and he was accused of high crimes in the convention. An attempt was made by the jacobins to support their chief, but in vain. After being wounded by a pistol shot which broke his jaw, he was led to the guillotine with twenty-two of his accomplices, July 28th, 1794.—New. Dict. Hist. Anecd. of the French Republic.

ROBIN HOOD, a captain of a band of robbers who made the forest of Sherwood, in Nottinghamshire, their haunt, from whence they made excursions into different parts of England. Some writers affirm that this was a name assumed by Robert, earl of Huntingdon, who was banished from court in the reign of Richard I. Robin Hood had a celebrated second under him called Little John, and they continued their marauding course of life without being brought to justice from 1189 to 1247.—Stowe's Chron.

ROBINS (Benjamin), an ingenious mathematician, was born at Bath in 1707, of quaker parents, which profession he quitted and settled in London as teacher of the mathematics. He distinguished himself when young by confuting a Memoir of Bernoulli's on the Force of Bodies in Motion, and also by a demonstration of the last proposition of Newton's Treatise on Quadratures. In 1742 he published his new Principles of Gunnery, the result of his own experiments. On the return of commodore Anson from his voyage round the world Mr. Robins was employed in fixing the narrative of that famous expedition for the press, which he executed in an admirable manner, though the work passes under the name of Mr. Walter, chaplain of the Centurion. Our author also contributed to the improvements made in the royal observatory at Greenwich, and in 1749 was appointed engineer-general to the East India company. He died at Madras in 1751.—Martin's Eng. Phil.

ROBINSON (Robert), a baptist teacher, was born at Swaffham, in Norfolk, and bred a barber, but being converted by Whitfield, the celebrated methodist, he became a zealous preacher among the calvinists. He afterwards turned baptist and officiated to a congregation of that sect at Cambridge, where he wrote several pieces, among which was a Vindication of Christ's Divinity. He also translated into English Saurin's Sermons, and Claude's Essay on the Composition of a Sermon. Before his death he turned Socinian, and died at Birmingham suddenly in 1790.—Life by Dyer.

ROBINSON (Tancred), an eminent English physician and naturalist, was fellow of the royal society and of the college of physicians. He died in 1748, at a very advanced age. He wrote some medical books and papers on natural history.—Mortimer.

ROBINSON (Mary), an ingenious English lady, was born at Bristol, where she was educated in the seminary kept by the celebrated Miss More and her sisters. Her maiden name was Darby, and her father was captain of a ship. At the age of fifteen she married an attorney of the name of Robinson, which precipitate step appears to have embittered the rest of her life. Being greatly reduced in circumstances she had recourse to the stage, and made her first appearance at Drury lane in the character of Juliet, in which she was instructed by Mr. Garrick. Her reception was very flattering, and she continued to perform in various characters till her representation of Perdita in the Winter's Tale attracted the admiration of an illustrious personage, in consequence of which she quitted the stage. A separation afterwards took place, and she received a pension. In 1784 she had the misfortune to be attacked by a violent rheumatism, which progressively deprived her of the use of her limbs. She died December 21, 1800. Mrs. Robinson wrote a number of poetical pieces under the name of Laura Maria; besides which she was the author of Vancenza, a Romance; Poems, 2 vols. 8vo.; and Nobody, an unsuccessful farce.—Memoirs written by herself.

ROBINSON (Richard), archbishop of Armagh and baron Rokeby, was born in Yorkshire in 1709. He was educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford, after which he became chaplain to archbishop Blackburne of York, who gave him a prebend in his cathedral. In 1751 he went with the duke of Dorset to Ireland, and was preferred to the see of Killala, from whence in 1759 he was translated to Leighlin and Ferns, and in 1761 to Kildare. In 1765 he was advanced to the primacy, and in 1777 created a peer. He built an elegant palace in his diocese of Armagh, with an observatory. He also founded a school, and built four new churches. This munificent prelate died in 1794.—Europ. Mag.

ROCHEFORT (William de), a French writer, was born at Lyons in 1731, and died in 1788. He was a member of the academy of inscriptions, and belles lettres, and published a translation of Sophocles, faithful and elegant. He wrote also a Refutation of Mirabaud's System of Nature, and some other works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

ROCHEFOUCAULT (Francis, duke of), an eminent French writer, was born in 1603. He displayed great talents in a military capacity in the war of the Fronde, and for some time lost his fight by the blow of a musquet. One of his sons was slain at the passage of the Rhine, and another severely wounded. The duke de Rochefoucault, however, is mostly known as an elegant writer. His works are, 1. Memoirs of the Regency of Anne of Austria, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. Reflections and Maxims, oftentimes printed in one small volume. He died in 1680.—Moreri.

ROCHESTER (John Wilmot, earl of), a celebrated English nobleman, was born in Oxfordshire in 1648. He had a liberal education, and possessed uncommon powers of wit, and a fertility of imagination; but he disgraced his fine qualities by the most dissolute principles and licentious conduct. He shortened his days by intemperance, but died very penitent in 1680. His satirical poems are keen, but their obscenity and impiety render them excessively disgusting.—See his life by Burnet.

RODNEY (George Bridges, lord), a gallant English admiral, was born of an antient family in Somersetshire about 1718. He entered early into the navy, and distinguished himself in several actions. In 1759 he obtained a flag, and was employed to bombard Havre-de-Grace. In 1761 he was sent against Martinico, and for his services was created a knight of the bath. Owing to a violent electioneering contest for Northampton, and other causes, he was reduced to such a state of embarrassment as to be obliged to reside on the Continent, where, in the American war, he was tempted by the count de Sartine by brilliant offers to enter into the French service. These overtures he resolutely refused, of which Sartine liberally informed the British government, which recalled Sir George home, and gave him a command. In 1780 he defeated the Spanish fleet, and took several ships; this was soon after followed by a more splendid victory, and the capture of the Spanish admiral don Juan de Langara. But the most important exploit of this brave officer was the defeat of the French fleet under count de Grasse in the West Indies, April 12, 1782, in which the French admiral and a number of his ships were taken. For this he was created a peer, and obtained a pension. His lordship died in 1792.—Annual Register.

RODOLPH I. of Hapsburg, emperor of Germany, surnamed the Clement, was elected in 1273. He defeated Ottocar, king of Bohemia, who did him homage; but afterwards renewing the war, Ottocar lost his kingdom and his life. Rodolph died in 1291, aged 73.—Univ. Hist.

RODOLPH II. son of the emperor Maximilian II. was born in 1552, and became king of Hungary in 1572; of Bohemia in 1575; elected king of the Romans the same year; and in 1576 assumed the imperial throne. His reign was unfortunate: the Turks ravaged his territories; and his brother Matthias having revolted against him obtained the kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia. Rodolph was, however, a patron of science, and had some skill in astronomy. He died in 1612.—Univ. Hist.

ROE (sir Thomas), an able statesman, was born at Low-Layton, in Essex, about 1580, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford. In 1614 he was sent ambassador to the great mogul, where he remained near four years, of which embassy he published a journal. In 1621 he went in the same character to the grand seignior; his conduct at whose court proved of great advantage to the English commerce. During his residence in the East he made a large collection of valuable manuscripts in the Greek and Oriental languages, which, in 1628, he presented to the Bodleian library. He also brought over the famous Alexandrian MS. of the New Testament, sent as a present from Cyril Lucar, patriarch of Constantinople, to Charles I. In 1629 he was sent to negotiate peace between the kings of Poland and Sweden, in which he succeeded. In 1641 he went as ambassador to the diet of Ratisbon; and on his return was made a privy counsellor and chancellor of the garter. He died in 1644. Besides the relation of his travels, which is very curious, there are in print of his Speeches in Parliament; Account of his Negotiations at the Porte; and a Discourse on the King of Spain's surprising the Valteline.—Eng. Brit.

ROEMER (Olaus), a Danish astronomer, was born at Arrhus, in Jutland, in 1644, and educated at Copenhagen. On visiting Paris he became mathematical tutor to the Dauphin; but in 1681 he was recalled by the king of Denmark, who appointed him professor of astronomy at Copenhagen, where he died in 1710. His observations, under the title of Basis Astronomiæ, were printed in 1735, &c.—Moreri.

ROEPFEL (Conrad), a Dutch painter, was born at the Hague in 1677. He excelled in painting fruits and flowers, and died in 1748.—Pilkington.

ROESTRAETEN (Peter), a portrait painter, was born at Haerlem in 1698. He also painted representations of musical instruments, vases, china ware, agates, and shells.—Ibid.

ROGER I. king of Sicily, was born in 1097. He espoused the cause of Anacletus the anti-pope, and took Innocent II. prisoner, whom he released only on condition of being acknowledged in all his newly-acquired dominions. He died in 1154.—Univ. Hist.

ROGER (of Hexham), prior of Hexham about 1138. He wrote a History of the Campaign of the Scotch Army under King David, when the battle of the standard was fought.—Gen. Hist. Dis.

ROGERS (Captain Woods), an English navigator, who failed in a private ship of war from Bristol against the Spaniards in the South Sea; in which voyage he circumnavigated the globe, and published an Account of his Adventures on his return in 1711. He died in 1732.

ROGERS (John), an English divine, was educated at Cambridge, and became chaplain to the factory at Antwerp, where he assisted Tindal and Coverdale in translating the bible into English. In the reign of Edward VI. he returned to England, and obtained a prebend in St. Paul's cathedral, where he was a frequent and zealous preacher. He was the first person executed in the succeeding reign for religion, being burnt at the stake in Smithfield February 4, 1555.—Fox's A.D. and Men.

ROGERS (John), a learned divine, was born at Entham, in Oxfordshire, in 1679, and educated at Corpus-christi college, of which he became fellow. He wrote an able Treatise on the Visibility of the Church against Hoadley; four volumes of Sermons; and he was also the author of a piece in answer to Collins's Scheme of Prophecy. Dr. Rogers obtained the living of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, and died in 1729.—Gen. Hist. Dis.

ROGHMAN (Roland), 'an eminent landscape painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1597, and died in 1686.—Houbraken.

ROMAN (Henry, duke of), prince of Leon, was born at the castle of Bleu, in Brittany, 1579. He distinguished himself by his bravery at the siege of Amiens, and thereby obtained the particular friendship of Henry IV. He became the chief of the Huguenots in the reign of Louis XIII. but after the taking of Rochelle and the establishment of peace in 1629 he retired to Venice, where he was chosen generalissimo of the armies of the republic against the imperialists; but he was recalled by Louis XIII., who employed him in the Grisons against the Germans and Spaniards. But the duke in 1637 gave up the command, and went to Geneva. He afterwards had the command of the regiment of Nassau, at the head of which he was wounded in 1638, and died soon after. He wrote the Interests of Princes, printed at Cologne in 1666, 12mo.; the Perfect Captain, or an Abridgement of Caesar's Commentaries, 12mo.; On the Government of the thirteen Cantons; Memoirs, 2 vols. 12mo. This last performance is very curious, and has gone through many editions. Anne de Rohan, sister of the duke, was a woman of fine genius, and wrote some poems of merit. She was acquainted with the hebrew language.—Moreri.

ROHAULT (James), a French philosopher, was born at Amiens in 1620. He studied at Paris, and became a zealous defender of the Cartesian system, of which he published a popular view in 2 volumes. Of this work Dr. Samuel Clarke gave an edition, with notes, adapting it to the Newtonian system. It has been translated into English, in 2 vols. 8vo. Rohault was also the author of Elements of Mathematics; and a Treatise on Mechanics. He died in 1675.—Moreri.

ROLAND DE LA PLATIERE (J. M.) was born at Villefranche of a reduced family. He was designed for the church, but disliking that profession, he left his native place and went to Nantes with an intention of going to the Indies, but was prevented by the bad state of his health. From thence he went to Rouen, where he was employed by some relations who were engaged in trade. By his commercial abilities he became inspector general of the manufactories of Picardy, and afterwards of those of Lyons, in which situation he formed an intimacy with Brissot, and in 1789 was nominated deputy for the city of Lyons to the constituent assembly. In 1792 he became minister of the interior, but did not long retain that situation. When the party of Girondists to which he belonged was proscribed, he fled from Paris and retired to Rouen, where he stabbed himself in 1793. He wrote some good works on the cotton and linen manufactures; Letters from Switzerland, Italy, Sicily, and Malta, 6 vols.; Dictionary of Manufactures and the Arts depending on them, 3 vols. 4to, &c.—Novv. Dict. Hist. Memoirs of Madame Roland.

ROLAND (Marie-Jane-Philpon), the wife of the preceding, was born at Paris in 1756. Her father was an engraver named Philpon, who was eminent in his profession, and gave her an excellent education. At the age of twenty-five she married M. Roland, though there was a great disparity in their ages. She rendered important services to him in his public capacity as minister, and most of the official writings which he published were the productions of her masculine mind. On his flight she was arrested and sent to the abbey, and after an imprisonment of some weeks was released; but she had scarcely reached her own house before she was again apprehended. In her last confinement she wrote an interesting work entitled, an Appeal to Posterity, or Historical Notices, Anecdotes, and Memoirs of herself, 2 vols. 8vo. At length she was dragged before the revolutionary tribunal and sentenced to the guillotine, which she endured with fortitude, saying, as she looked on the statue of Liberty—"O Liberty, how many crimes are committed in thy name!" She suffered November 8, 1793.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

ROLLE (Michael), a mathematician, was born at Ambert, in Auvergne, in 1652. He became a member of the academy of sciences, and died in 1719. His works are, a Treatise of Algebra; Method of Resolving Equations of all Kinds, &c.—Ibid.

ROLLIN (Charles), a celebrated writer, was born at Paris in 1661. After studying in the college of Pleffis and at the Sorbonne, he became successively professor of languages, rhetoric and eloquence. In 1694

he was appointed rector of the university of Paris, which flourished uncommonly under his direction. He revived the study of the Greek, and introduced many important regulations in the academical exercises. He died in 1741. His works are, 1. An edition of Quintilian, 2 vols.; 2. Treatise on Studying and Teaching the Belles Lettres, 4 vols.; 3. Ancient History of the Egyptians, Carthaginians, Babylonians, &c. 13 vols.; 4. The Roman History from the Foundation of the City to the Battle of Actium; 5. Miscellaneous Pieces, as Lectures, Discourses, &c.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

ROLLO, a chieftain of Norway, who being driven from that country by the king of Denmark, landed in France and settled in Normandy, which was ceded to him by Charles the Simple in 912. Rollo embraced the christian religion, and was baptized by the name of Robert. He assumed the title of duke of Normandy, and was ancestor of William the Conqueror.—Moreri.

ROLLOCK (Robert), a scotch divine, was born in Stirlingshire 1567, and educated at St. Andrews. When James VI. founded the university of Edinburgh Mr. Rollock was appointed the first principal. He wrote several works in latin, and died in 1601.—Ibid.

ROMAINE (William), an English divine, was born at Hartlepool, in Durham, in 1714, and educated at Hertford college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Christ church, where he took his degrees in arts. On entering into orders he became a frequent preacher before the university till he fell into the calvinistical scheme. He then removed to London, and in 1749 became lecturer of St. Dunstan in the west. He was also for some time morning preacher at St. George, Hanover-square, and for a short period Gresham professor of astronomy, which he resigned. In 1764 he was chosen rector of St. Anne, Blackfriars, where, and at St. Dunstan's, he continued to preach to large congregations almost to his death, which happened in 1795. His works have been printed in 8 vols. 8vo. He was editor of Calaneo's Concordance to the Hebrew Bible, 4 vols. folio, 1749, in which he made some unwarrantable alterations to serve the Hutchinsonian doctrine.—Life by Cadogan.

ROMANELLI (John Francis), an historical painter, was born at Viterbo in 1617. He was the disciple of Pietro da Cortona, whose style he imitated. Louis XIII. employed him, and honoured him with the order of St. Michael. He died in 1662. His son, Urban Romanelli, was also a good painter, and died in 1682, aged 44.—Pilgrington.

ROMANO (Julio), a celebrated painter and architect, whose family name was Pippi, was born at Rome in 1492. He was the disciple and friend of Raphael, who made him his heir. His greatest pictures are, the Fall of the Giants, and the Battles of Constantine. He built some fine structures at Mantua, where he was patronized by the duke Frederic de Gonzaga. He died in 1546.—De Piles. Felibem.

ROMANUS I. emperor of the East, was born in Armenia. He became a common soldier in the army of the emperor Basil, whose life he saved in a battle against the Saracens, which proved the foundation of his fortune. Constantine X. whose daughter he espoused, associated him in the empire in 919. He displayed great military talents against the Muscovites and the Turks. To his other eminent qualities he added the distinguishing virtues of humanity and piety. He died in 948.—Univ. Hist.

ROMANUS II. called the younger, was the son of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, whom he succeeded in 959, and died of intemperance in 963. He banished his mother Helena, and debauched his sisters.—Ibid.

ROMANUS III. obtained the imperial throne by his marriage with Zoe, daughter of Constantine the younger, in 1028. He was a weak prince, and was put to death by his wife in 1034.—Ibid.

ROMANUS IV. succeeded in 1068 Constantine Ducas, whose widow Eudocia he married. He defeated the Turks who had ravaged the empire, but in 1071 he was taken prisoner by them, and was generously set at liberty by the sultan Alan. He was afterwards dethroned by Michael the son of Constantine, who deprived him of his eyes. He died the same year.—Ibid.

ROMBOURS (Theodore), a painter of Antwerp, was born in 1597, and died in 1637. He was the disciple of Abraham Janssens, and excelled in painting historical subjects and conversations.—De Piles. Houbraken.

ROME, was antiently called Latium, from its king, Latinus, whose daughter Lavinia married Æneas the Trojan. Romulus founded the city of Rome, to which he gave his name, B.C. 753. He and his followers seized upon the Sabine women at a public spectacle, 750. Alba united to Rome B.C. 675. Sextus Tarquinius having ravished Lucretia, the monarchy was abolished, and the republican government adopted, with two annual consuls, 508. The Romans subdued Carthage B.C. 146. Pompey and Cesar contend for the sovereignty, which occasions a civil war, B.C. 59. Cesar assassinated in the senate-house, 44. The republican government destroyed by Octavianus, who assumes the titles of emperor and Augustus, 27 B.C. The Goths and other northern nations invade the empire about A.D. 250. The seat of empire removed to Constantinople by Constantine, 330. Divided into the eastern and western empires, 379. Rome taken by Alarie, king of the Goths, 410; again by Genferic the Vandal in 455; and by the Heruli in 476. Belisarius recovers Rome for Justinian in 537; but it is retaken by the Goths in 547. Captured by Narfes, one of Justinian's generals, in 553. A.D. 726, it separated from the eastern empire, and became an independent state. In 800 the popes obtained the full possession of Rome, and the surrounding territory, called the ecclesiastical state. Taken by the French in 1798.—Univ. Hist.

ROME DE L'ISLE (John Baptist Louis), a French mineralogist, was born at Gray in Franche-comté in 1736, and died at Paris in 1790. He invented a new system of mineralogy, in which he asserts, that all bodies in the mineral kingdom have a primitive form and figure of their own, to which, after all the various combinations and separations they may suffer, they will again return. He wrote, Cristallography, 4 vols. 8vo.; External Characters of Minerals, 1 vol.; Metrology, 1 vol.; the Action of the Central Fire of the Earth, &c.—Newsp. Dig. Hist.

ROMILLY (John), a celebrated watch-maker, was born at Geneva in 1714, and died at Paris in 1796. He wrote all the articles on clock and watch making in the Encyclopedie; a letter on the impossibility of a perpetual motion; meteorological observations, &c.—Ibid.

ROMNEY (George), an excellent painter, was born in Lancashire of mean parentage. He served his time to an itinerant painter, whom he soon surpassed. He came when very young to London with a picture of the Death of General Wolfe, which obtained the second prize in the exhibition, and sold for a considerable sum. As soon as he had realized a sufficiency to enable him to visit Italy, he crossed the Alps, and after studying there with avidity, returned to London, where he obtained great reputation by his portraits, though he also painted some excellent historical pieces. He died at Kendal in 1802.—Monthly Mag.

ROMULUS, the founder of Rome, and brother of Remus, was the son of Rhea Sylvia, daughter of Numitor, king of Alba. She was placed with the vestals, but being delivered of these two children at a birth, declared that the god Mars was their father. Amulius, who had usurped the throne of Numitor, his brother, caused the children to be thrown into the Tiber, where they were found by Faustulus. On coming of age they discovered their origin, put Amulius to death, and reinstated Numitor. A difference, however, arose between the two brothers, and Romulus put Remus to death. He afterwards founded the city of Rome by collecting a number of strangers, and died B.C. 715.

RONCALLI (Christofano), an historical painter, sometimes called Pomerancio from the place of his birth. He was the disciple of Circignano, and died in 1626.—Pilington.

RONDELET (William), professor of physic and anatomy at Montpellier, was born there in 1507, and died in 1566. He wrote a Treatise on Fishes, 2 vols. folio, in Latin; and several works on medical subjects.—Moreri.

RONSARD (Peter de), a French poet, was born in the Vendomois, in 1524. He was page to the duke of Orleans, and afterwards served James V. king of Scotland, in which country he remained two years, and then returned to France, where he was employed in several negotiations of importance. He obtained some ecclesiastical benefices, and died in 1585. His poems were in his age so much esteemed as to procure him the honourable distinction of the Poet of France. They were printed at Paris in 6 vols. 4to in 1567.—Moreri.

ROODSEUS (John Albert), a portrait painter, was born at Hoorn in Holland in 1615, and died in 1674. His pictures are finely coloured, and beautifully finished.—Houbraken.

ROOKE (sir George), a gallant admiral, was born of an ancient family in Kent, in 1650. He entered early into the navy, and rose by his merit to the first honours of his profession. He gave eminent proofs of his skill and courage in many expeditions, particularly in burning the French ships at La Hogue, and in the glorious action off Vigo. July 23, 1703, he took Gibraltar by bombardment, after which he obtained a decisive victory over the French fleet off Malaga. Yet notwithstanding these eminent services, he was, by the influence of the whig party, obliged to resign the command, and to retire to his estate in Kent, where he died in 1709.—Campbell's Admirals.

ROOKE (Laurence), an English astronomer, was born at Deptford, in Kent, in 1623, and educated at King's college, Cambridge, from whence he removed to Oxford. In 1652 he was chosen Gresham professor of astronomy, which he afterwards exchanged for that of geometry. He was one of the first members of the royal society, and died in 1662. His writings are, Observations on Comets; Directions to Seamen; Method of Observing the Eclipses of the Moon; and Observations on the Eclipses of the Satellites of Jupiter.—Ward's Lives of Gresham Professors.

ROOMER (Edward), solicitor to the treasury. He wrote some satirical papers called Psquins, against Pope, who gave him a place in his Duciad. He was also the author of a dramatic piece called, the Jovial Crew. He died in 1729.—Biog. Dram.

ROOZE (James), a painter, was born at Antwerp in 1686, and died in 1747. He painted historical subjects with great elegance.—Pilington.

ROOS (John Hendrick), a Dutch painter, was born at Otterburg in 1631. He painted landscapes and portraits, but excelled in the former. His brother Theodore was a good artist in the same line. He died in 1698. Philip Roos, son of John Hendrick, far excelled the rest of the family; he had a brother who was also a good painter, and died in 1731, aged 72.—Pilington.

ROQUE (John dela), member of the academy of belles-lettres at Marseilles, died in 1745 at Paris, aged 84. He assisted his brother Anthony in conducting a periodical journal called the Mercury; and he also published Travels in the East, 8 vols. and some operas.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

ROSA (Salvator), a painter and poet, was born at Reneisa, near Naples, in 1615. He excelled in painting combats, sea-pieces, and landscapes, generally romantic scenery, with banditti. He painted with great rapidity, and frequently completed a picture in one day. His Satires have entitled him to the appellation of the Juvenal of Italy. They were printed at Amsterdam in 1719, 8vo. He died at Rome in 1673.—Falibien. Tiraboschi.

ROSAMOND, usually called fair Rosamond, was the daughter of Walter de Clifford, baron of Hereford. She was the favourite mistress of Henry II. who is reported to have secreted her in a labyrinth, at his palace of Woodstock, where, according to some writers, she was discovered, and poisoned by Eleanor, queen of that monarch. But it seems more certain that she died in the nunnery of Godstow, in Oxfordshire. She had two sons by Henry: William, called Longsword, and Jeffery, who became archbishop of York.

ROSCIUS (Quintus), a native of Gaul, who was contemporary with the celebrated performer Ætios, and became the most famous actor of his age. Cicero, who speaks in the highest terms of his talents, undertook his defence against Fannius. The Roman state assigned him a considerable pension, which he appears to have deserved as much by his virtues as his abilities. He died about 61 B.C.—Cic. pro Roscio. Quintilian.

ROSE (Alexander), a Scotch prelate, was born at Aberdeen in 1640, and educated at St. Andrew's. He was promoted to the bishopric of Edinburgh, but when episcopacy was put down in Scotland, he was deprived of the revenues. He died at Edinburgh in 1720.—Skinner's Hist. Ch. of Scotland.

ROSEWELL (Thomas), a presbyterian divine, was born in Somersetshire in 1630, and educated at Oxford, after leaving which university he was presented to the living of Strode in his native county, from whence he was ejected by the Bartholomew act in 1662. In 1674 he officiated to a dissenting congregation at Rotherhithe, and in 1684 was sent to prison on a charge of high treason. At his trial the charge amounted to nothing more than his saying in his sermon something disrespectful of the king's pretensions to curing the evil or scrophula. Notwithstanding the absurdity of the indictment he was found guilty, but Charles II. granted him a pardon. He died in 1691.—Calamy.

ROBIN (John), or Rofius, an antiquary, was born at Eifenach in 1551, and died of the plague in 1626. He wrote Antiquitatum Romanarum, a work of value; the best edition of which is that of Utrecht in 1701, 4to.—Moreri.

ROSS (Alexander), a native of Aberdeen, was master of the grammar school at Southampton and chaplain to Charles I. His works are very numerous; the most known of which is, a View of all Religions, in one volume octavo. He was also the author of a curious performance, called, Virgilius Evangelizans, which is a cento on the life of Christ, taken wholly from Virgil. He died in 1654, aged 64.—Granger.

ROSSI (John Victor), better known under his assumed name of Janus Nicius Erithraus, was born at Rome about 1577, of a noble family, and died in 1647. His principal works are, 1. Pinacotheca in agnium illustrium virorum, 8vo.; 2. Epistolæ, 2 vols. 8vo.; 3. Dialogi, 8vo.; 4. Exempla virtutum et vitiorum, 8vo.; 5. Eudemix, lib. x. 8vo.—Thraufchi.

ROSSI (Bernard Marie de), a learned dominican, was born at Forly in Italy in 1687. He was educated at Florence, and became professor of theology in the convent of his order at Venice; but resigned that situation, and refused several dignities. He died in 1775. His works are numerous. The principal relates to the history and antiquities of the church of Aquileia.—Ibid.

Rosso, commonly called mafter Roux, a painter, was born at Florence in 1496. He studied after the works of Michael Angelo and Parmesan, but without the assistance of a master. His talents, however, recommended him to the patronage of Francis I. king of France, who appointed him superintendent of the works of Fontainebleau. He died there in 1541.—De Piles.

ROTARI (Peter), an historical and portrait painter, was a native of Verona, and was living in great reputation in 1757. The year before he was at Petersburg, where he painted the portrait of the czarina, and others of the imperial family.—Pilkington.

ROTGANS (Luke), a Dutch poet, was born at Amsterdam in 1645. He bore arms in the war of 1672, but after two years service retired to his country seat, where he died of the small pox in 1710. He wrote an epic poem on the life of William III. king of England, which is esteemed by the Dutch. He was also the author of some other pieces in that language.—Moreri.

ROTHENAMER (John), a celebrated historical painter, was born at Munich in 1564, and died in 1604. He imitated the manner of Tintoret, and was liberally patronized by the emperor Rodolph II.—Ibid.

ROTHERAM (Dr. John), an English physician, was a native of Yorkshire. He took his degrees at Edinburgh; and wrote a philosophical enquiry into the nature and properties of water, and some other works. He died in 1787. He is not to be mistaken for John Rotheram, A. M. a divine of the church of England, and rector of Houghton-le-Spring in the county of Durham, 1769. He wrote a valuable discourse on faith, and its connection with good works, 8vo.; Essay on the Truth of Christianity; Apology for the Athanasian Creed, &c.—Genl. Mag.

ROTHMAN (Christopher), astronomer to the landgrave of Hesse, died in 1592. He wrote a treatise on comets, and astronomical letters to Tycho Brahe.—Hutton.

ROUEN (John), a French poet, was born in 1609 at Dreux. Peter Corneille had a great veneration for him, and called him his father in tragedy. He wrote thirty-seven dramatic pieces, of which the best are, Chofroes, Antigone, and Vencefles. He died in 1650.—Moreri.

ROUELLE (William Francis), an apothecary at Paris, and demonstrator in chemistry at the royal botanical garden there, was a native of Mathieu, near Caen, and died in 1770, aged 68. He left his lectures on chemistry in manuscript. His brother Hilary who succeeded him died in 1779.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

ROVILLE (Peter Julian), a Jesuit, was born at Tours in 1681. He wrote the Roman History in conjunction with father Carrou, and had a concern in the Journal de Trevoux. He died in 1740.—Ibid.

ROUBILLIAC (Francis), an eminent statuary, was a native of Switzerland, but resided in London, where he died in 1762. He executed several beautiful monuments in Westminster abbey.

ROUS (Francis), a violent fanatic in the reign of Charles I. was born of a good family in Cornwall, and represented Truro in the long parliament, where he inveighed against arminianism and the bishops. He was one of the lay-members of the assembly of divines, and speaker of Barebone's parliament. He was appointed provost of Eton by the ruling party, and was called the illiterate Jew of Eton. He died in 1659. His works, which are highly enthusiastic, were published in one vol. folio 1657.—Clarendon. Granger.

ROUSE (John), an antiquary, was the author of "A Chronicle of the Kings of England," and "The Antiquities of Warwick." He died in 1491.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

ROUSSEAU (James), a French painter, was born at Paris in 1690. He excelled in landscapes and representations of architecture, and died at London in 1693.—Ibid.

ROUSSEAU (John Baptist), a French poet, was the son of a shoemaker at Paris, and born in 1669. His education was liberal, and he wrote some poetical pieces in his youth, which brought him into so much notice that marshal Tallard took him to England as his secretary. But though he had many opportunities of advancing his fortune, he neglected riches, and even refused some lucrative offices. Several virulent satires having been circulated against persons of eminence, to whom Rousseau was known to have an aversion, the general voice attributed them to him; when, to rid himself of the charge, he suborned a witness to accuse an innocent person of being the writer. The subornation being proved, Rousseau was banished the kingdom in 1713. He then went to Switzerland, and being introduced to prince Eugene, accompanied him to Vienna. He afterwards lost the favour of the prince, on which he went to Brussels, where he contracted an intimacy with Voltaire, which ended in a quarrel, and the two poets lampooned each other without mercy. Rousseau died in 1741. Besides his epigrams, sonnets, and other poems, he wrote some comedies, and a collection of letters. —Nouv. Dict. Hist.

ROUSSEAU (John James), was the son of a watch-maker at Geneva, where he was born in 1712. His mother died in the delivery, which he says was the first of his misfortunes. Some of the first books which fell in his way were Plutarch and Tacitus. His education, however, was very confined, and he was put apprentice to an engraver; where, however, according to his own account, he learned nothing but pilfering. He ran away from his master, and in a destitute condition was taken under the protection of a lady named madame de Warrens, who had quitted the protestant religion for the catholic. This good woman appears to have had somewhat of the zeal of proselytism in her charity, for she sent the young fugitive to a seminary of her persuasion at Turin. He did not long remain there, but hired himself as footman to a lady, who died shortly after. Having some talents for music, he set up as a teacher in that art at Chamberi, from whence in 1741 he went to Paris, where he lived in great poverty a considerable time. At length he was taken into the service of M. Montague, French ambassador at Venice, but having a misunderstanding with his employer he returned to Paris, where Dupin, farmer-general, gave him a place in his department. In 1750 he obtained a prize from the academy of Dijon for the best answer to the question "Whether the re-establishment of the arts and sciences has conduced to the purity of morals?" This success prompted him to produce a discourse on the inequality of men, and on the origin of societies; a work full of bold flights and dangerous positions. In 1758 he published a letter to d'Alembert upon the project of establishing a theatre at Geneva. In this letter, which was well written, he declared himself against theatrical exhibitions, though he had before published a comedy, and also a pastoral, both adapted for the stage. He next published his Dictionary of Music, in which are many excellent articles. He had before given a letter on the French music, or rather a censure of that music. In 1761 appeared his romance of the New Heloise, 6 vols. It is in the form of letters, exhibiting a strange mixture of beauties and deformities; but it was read with avidity. This work was eclipsed by his Emilius, a moral romance in 4 vols. in which he condemns every other mode of education but that of following nature. Rousseau in this work attacks the prophecies and miracles of the Christian religion, while he praises the gospel, and draws a beautiful picture of its divine author. The parliament of Paris condemned the book, and prosecuted the writer; who fled to Switzerland, where he received so many insults on account of his principles that he returned to Paris, and on the invitation of Mr. Hume went to London in 1766, where he obtained a pension; but having quarrelled with his friend he went back to France, where he sometimes appeared in the Armenian dress. He was of a restless, proud, and fretful disposition, imagining that there was a conspiracy of the men of letters against him, and that all mankind were his enemies. He died of an apoplexy, at Ermenonville, near Paris, in July 1778. His works have been published in 33 vols. 8vo. and 12mo. —Rousseau's Confessions. Nouv. Dict.

Roux (Augustin), a physician, was born in Gascony in 1726, and took his degrees at Bourdeaux. He died in 1776. He continued Vandermonde's Journal of Medicine; and was the author of a treatise on Purifying Liquors; Typographical Annals; the New Portable Encyclopædia, 2 vols. 8vo.; Memoirs of Chemistry, &c. —Nouv. Dict. Hist.

Rowe (Nicolas), an English poet, was born at Little-Beckford, in Bedfordshire, in 1663, and educated at Westminster school, after which he entered in the Middle Temple, where he was called to the bar, but never distinguished himself in that profession. At the age of twenty-five he produced his Ambitious Step-mother, a tragedy; which was well received, and encouraged him to pursue the dramatic career, which he did with increasing reputation. In 1709 he published an edition of Shakspeare, with an account of his life. The duke of Queensberry appointed him under-secretary of state; and on the accession of George I. he was made poet-laureat, and land-surveyor of the customs in the port of London. He received also other marks of favour, and died in 1718. Besides his tragedies, many of which still hold their place on the English stage, he wrote some poems, and translated Lucan's Pharsalia, and Quillet's Callipædia, into verse.—Biog. Brit.

Rowe (Elizabeth), an ingenious and pious lady, whose maiden name was Singer, was born at Ilchester, in Somersetshire, in 1674. At the age of twenty-two she published a collection of poems, under the name of "Philomela." Matt. Prior is said to have paid his addressee to her, but she declined the offer, and married Mr. Thomas Rowe, an ingenious young gentleman, who soon left her a widow, in which state she continued the remainder of her life. She died suddenly at Frome in 1737. The principal of her poems is one on the History of Joseph. She was also the author of a collection of letters, entitled, "Friendship in Death," and after her decease Dr. Watts printed a volume of her thoughts, under the title of Devout Exercises of the Heart.—Ibid.

Rowe (Thomas), an ingenious gentleman, was the son of Mr. Benoni Rowe, a dissenting minister, and born in London in 1687. He was educated at the Charterhouse, and afterwards at Leyden; and in 1708 returned to London. Two years afterwards he married miss Singer, mentioned in the preceding article. Some time after this marriage, he addressed a beautiful ode to his wife, under the name of Delia. He formed the design of giving a translation of the whole of Plutarch's Lives, but finished only eight. He died in 1715.—Ibid.

Rowe (John), a dissenting divine, was the son of a pious minister at Crediton in Devonshire, and was educated at Oxford, after which he became lecturer at Witney in that county. In 1654 he was appointed preacher at Westminster-abbey, from whence he was ejected for nonconformity in 1662. He died in 1677. His works are, Immanuel, or Christ's Love explained; Heavenly Mindedness, and Earthly Mindedness, 12mo.; Life of his Father; Sermons.—Calamy.

Rowe (Thomas), a nonconformist divine, was born at North-Petherwin in Devonshire, and educated at Exeter college, Oxford, after which he became minister of Litcher in Dorsetshire, where he was silenced in 1662. He afterwards officiated to a dissenting congregation at Wimborn, and died about 1698. He wrote a pious book called The Christian's Work.—Ibid.

Rowland (Henry), a Welsh divine and antiquary, was a native of Anglesey, of which island he published an elaborate account, in a quarto volume, entitled, Mona Nestaurata. He died in 1722.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

ROWLEY, a monk of Bristol. [See CHATERTON.]

ROWLEY (William), a dramatic writer in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Wood speaks of him with commendation, and Shakspeare assisted him in one of his plays. There was also one Samuel Rowley of the same period, who wrote two historical plays.—Biog. Dram.

ROWNING (John), an ingenious divine, was fellow of Magdalen college, Cambridge, and rector of Anderby in Lincolnshire. He died in 1771, aged 72. Mr. Rowning published an excellent Compendium of Natural Philosophy, in 2 vols. 8vo. which has passed through several editions, and used to be a text book for students at Cambridge.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

ROXANA, the wife of Alexander the Great, was the daughter of a Persian prince, and celebrated for her beauty. At the death of Alexander she was pregnant of a son, who was named the young Alexander. Cassander murdered both the mother and child.—Justin.

ROY (Julian le), a celebrated clock and watch-maker, was born at Tours in 1686. When very young he shewed an uncommon turn for mechanical pursuits, and in 1713 was admitted into the company of clock-makers at Paris, where he acquired a high reputation, and died in 1759. His son, Peter Le Roy, became watch-maker to the king, and died in 1785. He published, 1. Memoires pour les Horlogers de Paris, 4to.; 2. Etreennes Chronometriques; 3. Treatise on the Labours of Harrison and Le Roy, for Discovery of the Longitude at Sea, 4to.; 4. Letter to M. de Marivetz.—Julian David Le-Roy, another son of Julian, became a member of the national institute, and attached himself to architecture. He wrote, 1. On the Ruins of the finest Monuments of Greece, folio; 2. On the Construction of Christian Temples, 8vo.; 3. Observations on the Edifices of the Antients; 4. Of the Marine of the Antients, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

ROZKE (Mademoiselle), an ingenious artist, was born at Leyden in 1632. She neither used oil nor water colours in her pictures, but silk floss on the ground, disposed according to the different degrees of the bright and dark tints, which she applied with great judgment and taste. In this manner she executed historical subjects, landscapes, and portraits. She died in 1682.

ROZIER (Francis), a French agriculturist, a doctor in divinity and prior of Nanteuil, was born at Lyons in 1734, and slain at the siege of that place by a bomb in 1793. He made numerous observations on the improvement of lands, and the means of simplifying the various objects of husbandry. His principal work is, A Complete Course of Agriculture, 10 vols. 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

RUBENS (Peter Paul), a famous painter, was born at Antwerp in 1577. After studying in his own country, he went to Italy, where he greatly improved himself after the works of the best masters, but chiefly Titian. On his return to Antwerp he gained so great a reputation as to be sent for to Paris to paint the gallery of the palace of Luxemburg. He was afterwards employed by the infanta Isabella and the king of Spain in some important negotiations, which he executed with such credit as to be appointed secretary of the privy council. On going to England with a commission from the king of Spain, he obtained the favour of Charles I. who conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and made him some valuable presents. While here he painted the banqueting-house. Rubens died very rich at Antwerp in 1640. He wrote a treatise on painting, and another on Italian architecture, folio.—De Piles. D'Argenville.

RUBENS (Albert), son of the preceding, was born at Antwerp in 1614. He was greatly esteemed by the archduke Leopold, governor of the Low Countries, and died in 1657. He wrote, 1. De Re Vestitaria Veterum; 2. Diatribæ de Gemma Tiberiana, de Gemma Augustæ, &c.; 3. Regum et Imperatorum Romanorum Numismata, folio; 4. De Vita Flavii Manlii Theodori, 12mo.—Moreri.

RUCCELLAI (John), an Italian writer, was born of a noble family at Florence in 1475. He embraced the ecclesiastical state, and was sent on an embassy to France by his relation pope Leo X. but the death of that pontiff destroyed his hopes of preferment. He died in 1526. He wrote the tragedies of Rosamonde, and Orestes; but his principal performance is an excellent poem on Bees, printed at Padua in 1714, 8vo.—Tiraboschi.

RUDBECK (Olaus), a Swedish physician, who was professor of medicine at Upsal, where he died in 1702, aged 73. His chief works are; Exercitatio Anatomica, 4to.; Atlantica, five Manheim, vera Japheti posterorum sedes ac Patera, 3 vols. folio, with an atlas in another volume; Leges West-Gothicæ, folio.; a Collection of Plants engraved on plates, 2 vols. folio; Laponia illustrata, et iter per Uplandianam, 4to.; Dissertation upon the Bird called Selui in the Bible. His son was also a learned physician and botanist. He published a Catalogue of Lapland Plants; Specimen Lingux Gothicæ, &c.—Halleri Bibl. Botan.

RUDDIMAN (Thomas), a Scotch schoolmaster and printer, was born in 1674, and died in 1757. He was near fifty years keeper of the advocates' library at Edinburgh. He completed the "Diplomata et Numismata Scotiæ," to which he prefixed an excellent preface. He also published Institutions of Latin Grammar, and some other works.—Life by Chalmers.

RUE (Charles de la), a French poet, was born at Paris in 1643. He entered among the jesuits, and became professor of belles-lettres and rhetoric. In 1667 he published a Latin poem on the Conquests of Louis

XIV. which Corneille translated into French verse. He was a very eloquent preacher, and died at Paris in 1725. He wrote Latin tragedies, poems in that language, and 3 vols. of Sermons. He is not to be confounded with another of the same name, who was a benedictine, and published an edition of Origen. He died in 1739.—Moreri.

RUFFHEAD (Owen), an English law writer and biographer, died in 1769. He wrote the Life of Pope, and published a Collection of the Statutes at Large.

RUFINUS, a father of the church, was born at Aquileia. He was for some years the most intimate friend of St. Jerome, but attaching himself to Origen, a division broke out between them, and they wrote against each other with great asperity. Rufinus retired to Palestine, where he founded a monastery on mount Olivet, and had numerous followers. He died in Sicily in 410. Rufinus translated into Latin the works of Josephus, and several of the writings of Origen. He also gave a version and continuation of Eusebius, and wrote a Defence of Origen, Lives of some of the Fathers of the Desert, an Explanation of the Creed, and other works.—Cave. Dupin.

RUFUS, a physician of Ephesus, who gained a great reputation in the reign of Trajan. Of all his works we have only the Greek names of parts of the body; and a treatise on the Diseases of the Reins and Bladder.

RUGENDAS (George Philip), a painter, was born at Augsburg in 1666, and died in 1742. He painted with his left hand, and excelled in representing sieges and battles.—Pilkington.

RUGGE (George), fellow of Clare hall, Cambridge, and author of the famous Latin comedy called Ignoramus, performed in that university before James I. in 1614. He died about 1640.—Biog. Dram.

RUHNKENIUS (David), a learned critic, was born in Prussian Pomerania in 1723. He became professor of history, and librarian of Leyden; and died in 1798. His works are; Epistolæ Criticæ in Homeri et Hesiodi hymnos; De Vita et Scriptis Longini; Timæi Sophistæ Lexicon; Historia Critica Oratorum Græcorum, 2 vols. He also published accurate editions of Velleius Paterculus, and Rutilius Lupus.—Life by Wyttenbach.

RUINART (Thierry), a learned benedictine, was born at Rheims in 1657, and died in 1709. He was the coadjutor of Mabillon in his literary labours, and published, 1. The Acts of the Martyrs, 4to.; 2. History of the Persecution of the Vandals, 4to.; 3. an edition of the works of Gregory of Tours, folio; 4. The Life of Father Mabillon; 5. Life of Pope Urban V.—Moreri.

RULE (Gilbert), a Scotch divine, was born at Elgin in 1628, and educated at Aberdeen. He was ejected from the living of Alnwick in Northumberland in 1662 for nonconformity. After this he studied physic, and took his doctor's degree, but at the revolution he was appointed principal of the university of Edinburgh, where he died in 1705. He wrote a Defence of Nonconformity; and some weak pieces against episcopacy. There are some curious specimens of his pulpit oratory in the Scotch Presbyterian Eloquence.—Calamy.

RULLAND (Martin), a German physician, was professor of medicine at Lawingen in Suabia, and physician to the emperor Rodolph II. He died in 1602. His works are, Medicina Practica, 12mo.; Lexicon Alchymiz, 4to.; Hydriaticæ, 8vo. This is a treatise on Mineral Waters. His son Martin was also a physician, and wrote some books, which are now obsolete.—Moreri.

RUMPHIUS (George-Everard), a physician and naturalist, was born in 1627. He became consul at Amboyna, where he applied himself to botanical researches with ardour. What is astonishing, is that though he became blind at the age of forty-three, he still continued his favourite pursuits. His collection of the plants of Amboyna was published in 1735, in 6 vols. folio. He also wrote Imagines Piscium Testaceorum, folio; and the Political History of Amboyna.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

RUNDLE (Thomas), a learned prelate, whose advancement to the English bench was opposed in the reign of George II. on account of his free principles. At length he obtained the bishopric of Derry in Ireland, and died in 1743. A volume of his Letters has been printed, written in a lively and agreeable style.—Whiston's Life.

RUPERT (Prince), son of Frederick, king of Bohemia, by Elizabeth, daughter of James I. came to England at the beginning of the civil war, and distinguished himself very gallantly in defence of his uncle Charles I. In the reign of Charles II. he commanded the fleet, and defeated the Dutch in 1673. He was well skilled in chemistry; and was the inventor of mezzotinto, of which he is said to have taken the hint from a soldier scraping his rusty fusil. It is also said that the first print executed in this way was done by his highness. It may be seen in the first edition of Evelyn's Sculpture. The prince died in 1682.—Granger.

RUSCELLI (Jerome), an Italian writer, was born at Viterbo, and educated at Venice. His principal works are, Rimario (a Dictionary of Rhymes), and Imprese Illustri (the Illustrious Coats of Arms). He died at Rome in 1565.—Tiraboschi.

RUSHWORTH (John), an industrious collector, was born in Northumberland about 1607, and educated first at Oxford, and next at Lincoln's-inn, where he was called to the bar. In 1640 he was appointed assistant clerk of the house of commons, being very expert in taking down speeches in short hand. He was employed by the parliament in several concerns; and his relation, sir Thomas Fairfax, general of the forces, made him his secretary. He sat for Berwick in Richard Cromwell's parliament; but died in the king's bench, where he was confined for debt, in 1690. His Historical Collections, in 7 vols. folio, are useful, but his fidelity is oftentimes questionable.—Biog. Brit.

RUSSEL (lord William), the third son of William, the fifth earl and first duke of Bedford, was born about 1641. In 1667 he married Rachael, second daughter of Thomas Wriothesley earl of Southampton, and widow of lord Vaughan, a lady of distinguished talents and piety. His lordship soon obtained a seat in the house of commons, where he sided with the whigs, and laboured with great zeal for the exclusion of the duke of York from the succession. He afterwards entered into various schemes for effecting this object, and some of them being considered treasonable he was tried, condemned, and beheaded in July, 1683. After the revolution the parliament passed an act to consider who were the advisers of the murder (so they called it) of his lordship. His excellent lady, whose letters have been printed in one volume octavo, continued a widow till her death in 1723, at the age of 87, having lived to see her son succeed to the Bedford title and estates.—Ibid.

RUSSEL (Elizabeth, lady), was the third daughter of sir Anthony Cooke, and born in 1529. She received a learned education, and married first sir Thomas Hobbey, who died in 1566. Her next husband was lord John Russel, son and heir of Francis, the second earl of Bedford, who left her a widow in 1584. She had by her last marriage one son and two daughters, Anne and Elizabeth. The latter was buried in Westminster abbey, where the attitude of the statue on her monument leads the vulgar to believe the story that she died by pricking her finger with a needle. Lady Russel translated from the French a religious book on the Sacrament, printed in 1605. She died about 1600.—Ibid.

RUSSEL (Alexander), physician to the English factory at Aleppo, was born and educated at Edinburgh. In 1755 he published the History of Aleppo, which has been since reprinted, and translated into different languages. He returned to England in 1759, and became physician to St. Thomas's hospital. He died in 1770. He is not to be confounded with Dr. Richard Russel, who wrote an excellent treatise on the Virtues of Sea Water, and died in 1768.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

RUSSIA. In 862, Rurick, great duke of Novogrod, reigned here, and in 981, Wladimer, the 4th prince, was the first Christian king. About 1058 Boleslans, king of Poland, conquered Russia. Andrew I. who began his reign in 1158, laid the foundation of Moscow. About 1200 the Mungul Tartars conquered it, and held it till 1540, when John Basilowitz threw off their yoke. About the middle of the 16th century the Russians reduced Siberia. In 1721 Peter the Great assumed the title of emperor.—Univ. Hist.

RUST (George), a learned bishop, was educated at Christ college, Cambridge, and after the restoration became dean of Connor by the interest of bishop Jeremy Taylor, whose funeral sermon he preached. He afterwards was advanced to the see of Down, and died in 1670. He wrote a Discourse on Truth; and some other theological pieces.—Wood.

RUTH, a Moabitish woman, who married first Mahalon, son of Elimelech and Naomi, and afterwards Boaz, by whom she had Obed, the father of Jesse, and grandfather of David. There is a history of her which forms a distinct and beautiful book in the sacred canon, and is supposed to have been written by Samuel.—Gray's Key O. T.

RUTHERFORTH (Thomas), an English divine, was born in 1712. He became fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge; and rector of Shenfield, in Essex, and Barley, in Hertfordshire. He wrote a System of Natural Philosophy, 2 vols. 4to.; and some works on the nature of moral virtue. He also communicated to the Spalding society, a correction of Plutarch's description of the instruments used to renew the vestal fire. He died in 1771.—Hist. of the Spalding Society.

RUTILIA, a Roman lady, was the sister of Publius Rutilius, and the wife of Marcus Aurelius Cotta. Seneca, in a book which he wrote in his exile, speaks of her as a model for her sex.

RUTILIUS-RUFUS (Publius), consul of Rome 105 B. C. His love of justice gave such offence to some of the Roman knights that they accused him of peculation, and he was banished. Upon his passage from Italy to Asia, all the cities where he came shewed him the greatest honours, so that his progress had more the appearance of a triumph than an exile.—Livy.

RUTILIUS (Claudius), a Latin writer in the fifth century, was born at Toulouse in the fifth century. He left an itinerary in elegiac verse, printed at Amsterdam in 1687, 12mo.—Vossius de Poet. Lat.

RUYSCH (Frederic), an eminent anatomist, was born in 1638 at the Hague. After taking his doctor's degree he settled at Amsterdam; and when the czar, Peter the Great, visited that city, he became his pupil, and purchased his collection of natural curiosities and preparations. Ruysch was a member of the royal society of London, the academy of sciences at Paris, and other learned bodies. He died in 1731. His anatomical works, which contain many new discoveries, have been printed in 4 vols. 4to. His son Henry published Theatrum Animalium, 2 vols. folio.—Halleri Bibl. Anat.

RUYSDAAL (Jacob), an eminent landscape painter, was born at Haerlem in 1636. His pictures, which exhibit nature with great force and clearness, are very valuable. He died in 1681. His brother, Solomon, who died at Haerlem in 1670, was also a good landscape painter, but not equal to Jacob.—Houbraken.

RUYTER (Michael Adrian), a brave Dutch admiral, was born at Flushing in 1607. He went to sea at an early age, and after passing through the different ranks of the service, became an admiral in 1641. Not long afterwards he defeated the corsairs on the coast of Barbary. In 1653 he was second in command under Van Tromp, whom he ably supported against the English in three engagements. In 1659 he was sent to succour the king of Denmark against the Swedes, and for his services was ennobled by that monarch. After many gallant actions he was killed on the coast of Sicily in a combat with the French in 1676.—Moreri.

RYAN (Lacy), a dramatic writer and actor, was born in Westminster in 1694. He was the first performer of Marcus in Cato, and died at Bath in 1760.—Biog. Dram.

RYCKHAERT (Martin), a landscape painter of Antwerp, was born in 1591, and died in 1636. He was esteemed by Vandyck and other eminent artists. There was also one David Ryckhaert, of the same place and age, who painted rural subjects.—Houbraken.

RYER (Peter du), a French dramatic writer, was born at Paris in 1605, and died in 1658. He was secretary to Louis XIII. which place he sold, and afterwards held a similar situation under the duke of Vendome. His works procured him a place in the French academy.—Moreri.

RYMER (Thomas), an English antiquary and critic, was born in Yorkshire; and educated at the school of Northallerton, in Yorkshire, from whence he removed to Cambridge. He became historiographer royal, and formed an immense collection of public acts, treaties, conventions, and state letters, under the title of Fœdera, published at London in 20 volumes folio. An edition also has been printed at the Hague in 10 vols. Rymer was the author of a View of the Tragedies of the Last Age, in which he shews more spleen than judgment. He died in 1713.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

RYSBAC (John Michael), an excellent statuary, who died in London in 1770, aged 78.—Mortimer.

RYSBÆCK (Peter), an eminent landscape painter of Antwerp, was born in 1657. His figures and trees are well designed, and he painted expeditiously, and with spirit.—Houbraken.

RYVES (Sir Thomas), a civilian, was educated at Winchester school, from whence he was sent to Oxford, where, he studied the law, and afterwards became king's advocate in Doctor's commons. He died in 1651. He wrote, The Vicar's Plea; Historia Navalis Antiqua; Historia Navalis Media, &c.—Wood, A. O.

RYVES (Bruno), an English divine, was a relation of the above. In the reign of Charles I. he was persecuted by the presbyterians; but at the restoration he obtained the deanry of Windsor. He died in 1677. Dr. Ryves wrote Mercurius Rusticus, a loyal paper in the rebellion, and also several pamphlets and sermons.—Wood.

RYVES (Eliza), an ingenious lady, was born in Ireland, of a respectable but reduced family, and the small fortune which was left her was consumed in a law-suit, on which she had recourse to her pen for a subsistence, and compiled part of the Annual Register. She also wrote, "The Hermit of Snowdon," a novel; and translated several pieces from the French. Miss Ryves died in 1797.—Monthly Mag.

S.

SA or SAA (Emanuel), a Portuguese Jesuit, who was employed by pope Pius V. in revising a new edition of the Bible. He died in 1596. His works are; Scholia in quatuor Evangelia; Notationes in totam Sacram Scripturam; Aphorismi Confessionariorum.—Moreri.

SA DE MIRANDA (Francis), a Portuguese writer, and chevalier of the order of Christ, was born at Coimbra in 1495, and died in 1558. His poetical works consist of satires, comedies, and pastorals, printed at Lisbon in 1614, 4to.—Ibid.

SAADAS-GAON, a Jewish rabbi, who was chief of the school established at Sora, near Babylon, and died in 943. His works are; Sepher Hæmounoth, or a book on the belief of the Jews; Arabic translation of the Old Testament, and Commentaries on Ezra and Daniel.—Buxtorf.

SAA8 (John), member of the academy at Rouen, was born in 1703, and died in 1774. Hewas an ecclesiastic, and wrote, an Account of MSS. of the Cathedral of Rouen; an Abridgment of the Historical Dictionary in 4 vols; Criticisms on the Supplement to Moreri; and some religious pieces.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

SAAVEDRA (Miguel Cervantes de), a celebrated Spanish writer, was born at Madrid in 1549. He appears to have had a liberal education, though of his early life little is known, but he served as a common soldier under Colonna, and lost his left hand at the great victory of Lepanto. After this misfortune he became chamberlain to the cardinal Aquaviva at Rome, but in 1574 he had the misfortune to be taken by a Barbary corsair, and carried to Algiers, where he continued in slavery above five years. At length he was ransomed by the religious society of redemption; and on his return to Spain, being in a very reduced state, he had recourse to his pen for a subsistence. He wrote a great number of dramatic pieces, which were performed with success at Madrid. But he seems to have gained more fame than fortune, for he wrote the first part of his immortal work, Don Quixote, in prison, where he was confined for debt! It was printed at Madrid in 1605, and the remainder in 1615. Though this romance was written to expose local and temporary folly, it will be read at all times and in all countries with delight. Cervantes wrote besides this, his exemplary novels, another entitled, Perfiles and Sigismunda, and Galatea. He died in 1617.—Nich. Antonio. Bibl. Script. Hispan.

SAAVEDRA FAJARDO (Diego), a Spanish writer and statesman, was born of a noble family in the kingdom of Murcia, and after being ambassador in Switzerland, was appointed a member of the supreme council of the Indies. He died in 1648. His works are, the Idea of a Politic Prince; the Gothic Crown; and the Literary Republic; this last is curious and well written.—Nich. Antonio. Bibl. Script. Hispan.

SABAS, the founder of a sect called Messalians, who maintained that the Gospel is to be followed literally. In conformity with this rule Sabas made himself an eunuch. The sect appeared about 310, but became extinct at the close of that century. There was a saint of this name who was superior of the monasteries in Palestine, and died in 531.—Dupin. Mæst.

SABATEI-SEVI, a Jewish impostor, was born at Smyrna in 1626. He declared himself the Messiah, and was acknowledged by several of the rabbins and numbers of the Jews, who sent letters to their dispersed brethren in all parts of the world, announcing the great event. Sabatei, however, was arrested at Constantinople, and sent to prison, whither the misguided Jews flocked in crowds, and bribed the governor by large presents for the liberty of kissing his chains. The sultan Mahomet having ordered him to be brought into his presence, demanded of him a miracle as a proof of his mission, which Sabatei declined. Mahomet then gave him his choice to turn Mussulman or be put to death, on which the pretended prophet accepted the former condition, but was afterwards sent to prison, where he died in 1676.—Kidder's Demonstration of the Massias, folio.

SABBATHIER (Peter), a benedictine of St. Maur, was born at Poitiers in 1682, and died at Rheims in 1742. He spent twenty years in a collection of the Latin versions of the Bible, which was published in 1743, under the title of Bibliorum sacrorum Latinæ versiones antiquæ, 3 vols. folio.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SABELLICUS (Mark Anthony Cocceius), an Italian writer, was born at Vicovaro about 1436. He became professor of the belles-lettres at Udina, and afterwards librarian of St. Mark at Venice. He died in 1506. His works are, a Universal History, 1 vol. folio; History of the Republic of Venice, fol.; and some miscellanies in prose and verse.—Tiraboschi.

SABELLIUS, the founder of a religious sect called by his name in the third century, was a native of Lybia. He maintained, that there is no distinction of persons in the Trinity, and his followers became very numerous. The heresy was condemned in the council of Constantinople in 381.—Cave. Dupin. Mûsœum SABEO (raustus), an Italian poet, who published a good edition of Arnobius at Rome in 1542, folio, and Latin epigrams in 1536, for which the emperor gave him a gold chain. He died in 1558.—Moreri.

SABINA (Julia), the wife of the emperor Adrian, and celebrated for her private and public virtues. When Adrian found his end approaching he compelled her to take poison, that she might not survive him, A.D. 138.—Aurélius Victor.

SABINUS (Aulus), a Latin poet, who composed elegant epistles in verse, which are lost. He was the contemporary and friend of Ovid.—Moreri.

SABINUS (Francis Floridus), a learned Italian, who died in 1547. He compiled a book of Interpretations of the Civil Law, and wrote an able Apology for the Latin Language.—Moreri.

SABINUS (George), a modern Latin poet, was born in the electorate of Brandenburg, in 1508: he became professor of the belles lettres at Frankfurt on the Oder, rector of the academy of Königsberg, and counsellor to the elector of Brandenburg. He died in 1560.—Moreri.

SABLIÈRE (Anthony de Rambouillet de la), a French poet, who died at Paris in 1680. His madrigals were published by his son. His wife Hésélén de la Sablière was greatly esteemed by the most celebrated wits of the age. She entertained La Fontaine in her house many years, and the poet in return has immortalized her in his verses.—Ibid.

SACCHI (Andrew), an Italian painter, was born at Rome in 1599. He studied under Albano, and surpassed all the artists of the Italian school in the force and beauty of colouring. His pictures are very valuable. He died at Rome in 1661.—Felibien. D'Argenville.

SACCHINI (Antony Marie Gasper), an eminent musician, was born at Naples in 1735, and died at Paris in 1786. His operas are composed in a fine style, and many of the best were executed by him in London.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SACHEVERELL (Henry), a celebrated divine, was born at Marlborough, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, of which he became fellow, and proceeded to the degree of doctor in divinity in 1709. He translated into English verse part of Virgil's first Georgic in Dryden's Miscellanies, and Mr. Addison addressed to him his Account of English Poets: but what has made his name remarkable was his trial by impeachment for two political sermons, before the lord mayor in 1709. This trial occupied the public attention in an extraordinary manner; and though the doctor was suspended for three years, as soon as the period was expired he was presented to the valuable living of St. Andrew, Holborn. He died in 1724.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SACHTLEVEN (Herman), a landscape painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1609, and died in 1685. His pictures are valuable. There was also Cornelius Sachtleven, a landscape painter, but not equal to Herman.—Houbraken.

SACKVILLE (Thomas), the first lord Buckhurst, and earl of Dorset, was born in 1536. He wrote, "The Induction, or Introduction to the Mirror of Magistrates," a series of poems; and a tragedy called Gorboduc, which was acted in 1561 before the queen at Whitehall. He became a member of the privy council, and was one of the commissioners on the trial of Mary queen of Scots. In 1598 he was appointed lord treasurer, and in 1601 sat as high steward on the trial of the earl of Essex. At the accession of James I. he was created earl of Dorset. He died in 1608.—Biog. Brit.

SACKVILLE (Edward), earl of Dorset, grandson of the above, was born in 1590. In 1613 he fought a desperate duel in Zealand with lord Bruce, who was slain, of which an account may be seen in the Guardian, vol. 2, No. 129. He was one of the principal commanders sent in 1620 to assist Frederick, king of Bohemia, and was at the memorable battle of Prague in 1620. The year following he was sent ambassador to the court of France. In 1624, by the death of his elder brother, he succeeded to the title and estate. He was in great favour with king Charles, and became knight of the garter, president of the council, and lord privy seal. He died in 1632. He was succeeded by his son Richard, who dying in 1677, the title devolved to his son.—Ibid.

SACKVILLE (Charles), who was born in 1637. He received a private education, after which he went on his travels, and on his return to England was elected member of parliament for East Grinstead. In the Dutch war of 1665 he served as a volunteer under the duke of York, and the night before the famous sea engagement wrote a famous song. On the death of his uncle the earl of Middlesex, he succeeded to the title and estate, as he did to his father's in 1677. His lordship engaged early in the interest of the prince of Orange, and conducted the princess Anne to Northampton. For this he was made a member of the privy council, lord chamberlain, and knight of the garter. He died in 1706. Lord Dorset was a great patron of men of letters, particularly Mr. Prior. He was himself a man of genius, and wrote some poetical pieces of merit.—Biog. Brit.

SACKVILLE (George, lord viscount), was the third son of the first duke of Dorset, and born in 1716. He received his education first at Westminster school, and next at Trinity college, Dublin, when his father was lord lieutenant of Ireland. In 1737 he obtained a commission in the army, and distinguished himself at the battles of Dettingen and Fontenoy. He was afterwards with the duke of Cumberland in Scotland, where he contributed to the quelling of the rebellion. In 1758 he was appointed lieutenant-general, and sworn a member of the privy council. The same year he commanded with the duke of Marlborough in the expedition against St. Malo. Soon afterwards he went to Germany, where, at the battle of Minden, Aug. 1, 1759, he commanded the British and Hanoverian horse. In the action orders were sent to bring them up, but these were so confused and unintelligible that the troops did not arrive in time to have any share in the victory. The British general was in consequence violently censured, his name was struck out of the list of the privy council, and a court martial dismissed him from the service. On the accession of the present king he was restored to favour; and in 1769, by the will of lady Elizabeth Germaine, he succeeded to her property, on which occasion he took her name. The next year he fought a duel with governor Johnstone, who had reflected on him in a speech in the house of commons. In 1775 his lordship was appointed secretary of state for the American colonies, and first lord of trade; but on a change of administration he lost his places, and was advanced to the peerage. He died in 1785.—Europ. Mag. vol. viii.

SACY (Louis de), a French writer, was advocate of the parliament of Paris, and a member of the French academy. He died in 1727, aged 73. He published a Translation of Pliny's Letters, and the Panegyric on Trajan, 3 vols.; also Treatises on Friendship and Glory; with other pieces in an elegant style.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

SADDER, or Saahdi, a Persian poet, was born at Schiraz A.D. 1193. He quitted Persia when it was invaded by the Turks, and went into Palestine, where he was taken prisoner by the crusaders, and compelled to labour in the fortifications. He was afterwards ransomed by a merchant of Aleppo, whose daughter he espoused with a handsome dowry; but the marriage was unhappy, owing to the bad temper of his wife. Saahdi died in 1291. His poems are highly esteemed. The principal are, Gulistan, or the Garden of Flowers; Bostan, or the Garden of Fruits; and Molamat, the Sparkles; an English version was printed at Calcutta in 1795. folio.—D'Herklot.

SADLER (John), an engraver, was born at Brussels in 1550. His merits recommended him to the patronage of the duke of Bavaria, by which means he was enabled to visit Italy; but he died at Venice, not long after his arrival. His brother and disciple Raphael Sadler, was also a good artist. Giles Sadler, their nephew, died at Prague in 1629. He surpassed his uncles; and was pensioned by the emperor Rodolph II. His Vestigi della Antichita di Roma, folio, 1660, is an esteemed work.—Mozzi.

SADLER (sir Ralph), a statesman, was born at Hackney, in Middlesex, about 1507. He was educated under Thomas Cromwell earl of Essex, and became master of the royal wardrobe, afterwards a member of the privy council, and secretary of state. He died in 1587.—Gen. Hist. Diet.

SADLER (Anthony), an English divine, was born at Chilton, in Wiltshire, in 1610. He was educated at Edmund hall, Oxford, where he proceeded to his doctor's degree, and at the restoration was appointed chaplain to the king. He died in 1680. He wrote a divine masque, dedicated to general Monk, 1660, several sermons and tracts.—Wood, A. O.

SADLER (John), a law writer, was born in 1615. He published a work, entitled, "Rights of the Kingdom, or Customs of our Ancestors." He died at Warmwell, in Dorsetshire, in 1674.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

SADOC, a famous Jewish doctor, and founder of the sect of Sadducees, lived two centuries before Christ. He taught that virtue is to be practised for its own sake, and that there are neither punishments nor rewards hereafter. His followers were very numerous.—Josephus.

SADOLET (James), an Italian writer, was born at Modena in 1478. He became secretary to pope Leo X. who compelled him to accept the bishopric of Carpentras, which he would modestly have declined. Paul III. made him a cardinal, and appointed him legate to the court of France. He died in 1547. His works are Discourses, Epistles; Expositions of the Psalms, and St. Paul's Epistles; and Poems; all published together at Verona in 3 vols. 4to. His Latin is very correct and beautiful.—Turbesin.

SAGE (Alain-René), an ingenious French writer, was born at Ruys, in Brittany, in 1677, and died at Paris in 1747. He wrote some good dramatic pieces, but his greatest performances are, the Adventures of Gil Blas; the Bachelor of Salamanca; and the Devil on Two Sticks; in composing which, however, it is evident that he was much indebted to some Spanish works. He also published Guzman de Alfarache, or the Spanish Rogue; the Letters of Aristænetus, from the Greek; and New Adventures of Don Quixote, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SAGE (David le), a French poet, was born at Montpellier, and was the author of a collection of sonnets, elegies, satires, and epigrams, called, "The Follies of Le Sage." He died about 1650.—Moreri.

SAGE (John), a Scotch divine, was born in Fifeshire in 1652. He was educated at St. Andrew's, and in 1684 was episcopally ordained. After the revolution he was chosen by the episcopalians bishop of Edinburgh, but was much persecuted by the presbyterian party. He died in 1711. Bishop Sage wrote an able defence of episcopacy, entitled, the Principles of the Cyprianic Age; and some other works.—Skinner's Hist. Ch. of Scotland.

SAGITTARIUS (Gaspard), a Lutheran divine, and professor of history at Halle, in Saxony, was born at Lunenburg in 1643, and died in 1694. He published Dissertations on the Oracles; the Succession of the Princes of Orange, to William III.; History of the City of Hardewyck; Life of St. Norbert; Historia Antiqua Norbergix; Genealogy of the Dukes of Brunswick, &c.—Moreri.

SACREDO (John), a noble Venetian, who was procurator of St. Mark, and elected doge in 1675. He published a History of the Ottoman Empire, in Italian, 1677, 4to.

SAINT-AMAND (Marc Anthony-Girard de), a French writer, was born at Rouen. He passed the greatest part of his life in travelling and rhyming, by which he did not better his fortune. His best piece is an ode "On Solitude." He died in 1660.—Moreri.

SAINT-AULAIRE (Francis-Joseph de Beau-poil, marquis de), an ingenious French nobleman, was born in the Limousin, and bore arms in his youth, but afterwards quitted that profession, and devoted himself to ease and literature. He was admitted a member of the French academy in 1706, and died at Paris in 1742, aged 98. He wrote some lively pieces in the manner of Anacreon.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SAINT-ALDEGONDE (Philip de Marnix, lord du Mont), a statesman, was born at Brussels in 1538. The cruelties of the Spaniards in the Low Countries induced him to retire to Heidelberg, where he became a member of the ecclesiastical council. In 1572 he returned to his own country, and was deputed by the States to go to England, to solicit aid from queen Elizabeth. He afterwards went to France for the same purpose, and to offer the sovereignty of Flanders to the duke de Alençon, whom he accompanied to England. He wrote a book called Alvearium Romanum; by way of ridiculing the church of Rome. He died at Leyden in 1598.—Moreri.

SAINT-CYRAN. [See VERGER.]

SAINT-JOHN (Henry), viscount Bolingbroke, was born at Battersea in Surry in 1672. He was educated at Eton school, from whence he removed to Christ church, Oxford. In 1707 he married, and became member of parliament for Wotton Bassett, when he joined the tory party, of which Mr. Harley, the speaker, was the head. In 1704 he was appointed secretary at war, but when his friend Harley resigned the seals in 1707 Mr. St. John followed his example. In 1710 he became secretary of state on Mr. Harley's being made chancellor of the exchequer. He sustained almost the whole weight of the difficulties in negotiating the peace of Utrecht, and in 1712 was created baron St. John, viscount Bolingbroke, and at the same time appointed lord lieutenant of the county of Essex; but these honours not answering his expectations he formed the design of taking the lead in public affairs from his friend Harley, then earl of Oxford, which in the end was unfortunate to both. On the accession of George I. the seals were taken from the secretary, and the papers in his office secured, on which he withdrew to France, where the pretender invited him into his service, which he declined at first, but afterwards accepted. In the mean time he was impeached of high treason in England, and the same year lost the favour of his new connexions. In this situation he set himself about making his peace at home, in which he succeeded, but did not receive a full pardon till 1723, on which he returned to England, where he recovered his family inheritance. During his residence abroad he married a niece of madame de Maintenon, with whom he had a large fortune. His restless and ambitious turn led him to join the opposition, against sir Robert Walpole, whose administration he attacked in the Craftsman, and several pamphlets. His lordship died of a cancer in his face, at Battersea, in 1751. The best of his works appears to be his Letters on the Study and Use of History. His genius was fine and vigorous, and his style flowing and neat; but his prejudices against Christianity were inveterate. All his works were published after his death by Mallet, in 5 vols. 4to. Lord Bolingbroke was the intimate friend of Swift and Pope, the latter of whom has immortalized his name in his Essay on Man.—Biog. Brit.

SAINT-MARTHE (Gaucher de), more known under the name of Scévola de St. Marthe, was born in 1586. He exercised several state employments in the reigns of Henry III. and Henry IV. and died greatly esteemed in 1629. He wrote a number of Latin poems, and some in French; also a work entitled, Gallorum doctrina illustrium, &c. He had three sons; Abel de St. Martbe, the eldest, became counsellor of state, and keeper of the library at Fontainebleau. His poems were published in one volume quarto. He died in 1652. Scavola and Louis were twins, and resembled each other in person and mind. They were historiographers of France, and published in conjunction some genealogical works of merit. The former died in 1650, and the last in 1656. There were some other ingenious persons of this family.—Moreri.

SAINT-FOIX (Germain Francis Poullain de), a French writer, was a native of Rennes in Brittany. He served some time in the army, but quitted that career, and devoted himself to literature at Paris, where he became historiographer of the order of the Holy Ghost. He died at Paris in 1776, aged 74. His works are, 1. Turkish Letters, an epistolary romance; 2. Historical Essays on Paris, 7 vols. 12mo.; 3. History of the Order of the Holy Ghost, 3 vols. 12mo.; 4. Comedies, 3 vols. 12mo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

SAINT-GERMAIN (Robert, count de), was born in Franche-Comte in 1708, and received his education among the Jesuits, after which he entered into the army, and distinguished himself in the wars of 1741 and 1757. Being disgusted with the treatment he received in his own country, he entered into the Danish service, and was made field-marshal. Having lost his property by the bankruptcy of a house at Hamburgh, he retired to a small estate in Alsace; but some time after the accession of Louis XVI. he was drawn from his retreat, and made minister at war, in which department he introduced several good regulations, and reformed many abuses. He died in 1778. He wrote his own Memoirs, which were printed in 1779, in 1 vol. 8vo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

SAINT-LAMBERT (Charles Francis de), member of the French academy, and afterwards of the national institute, was born at Nancy in 1717, and died in 1802. His works are, 1. the Feats of Love, a Comedy; 2. Essay on Luxury; 3. the Four Parts of the Day, a poem; 4. the Seasons, a poem. Voltaire gave this the preference to the celebrated work of Thomson, but without reason. 5. Oriental Tales, &c.—Ibid.

SAINT PIERRE (Eustace de), a burgher of Calais, who signalized himself when that place was besieged by Edward III. king of England, in 1347. The brave resistance made by the inhabitants so irritated the monarch, that he is said to have demanded six of their principal citizens to be delivered up to him that they might be put to death. Eustace offered himself for one, and was joined by five others, who went out to the English camp in their shirts, with halts about their necks, and bearing the keys of the city. At the entreaty of queen Philippa Edward pardoned these virtuous men, and dismissed them with presents. The story, however, is not certain.

SAINT-PIERRE (Charles Irenæus Cabré de), a French ecclesiastic and politician, was born in Normandy in 1658. He accompanied cardinal Polignac to the conference at Utrecht, and he was also admitted a member of the French academy; but after the death of Louis XIV. he was excluded for some political opinions which he had hazarded. He died in 1743. His principal works are, Project for a Universal Peace between the Powers of Europe, 3 vols. 12mo.; Memoirs for Correcting the Police; Critical Reflections on the Labours of the French Academy, &c.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

SAINT-SIMÓN (Louis de Rouvroi, duke de), was born at Paris in 1675. After serving in the army he was employed in state affairs, and in 1721 sent ambassador to Spain to demand the infant in marriage for Louis XV. Having a difference with the regent, the duke of Orleans, he retired to his estate, where he died at a very advanced age. His Memoirs, which are very curious, have been printed in 13 vols. 8vo. Strasburg.—Ibid.

SAINT-YVES (Charles), an able oculist, was born near Rocroi in 1667, and died in 1736. His Treatise on Disorders of the Eyes, printed at Amsterdam in 4to. and 8vo. is very much esteemed.—Ibid.

SALADIN, or SALAHEDDIN, a celebrated sultan of Egypt and Syria, succeeded Adad, and distinguished himself in the time of the crusades by his valour. He made great conquests in Syria, Arabia, Persia, and Mesopotamia; after which he defeated the Christians with a great slaughter, near Tiberias, and took Guy de Lusignan, king of Jerusalem, prisoner. This was followed by the surrender of Jerusalem, where he behaved with great generosity to the Christians. He died in 1193. Not long before his death he caused his winding sheet to be displayed as a standard before his army, and a herald to proclaim this affecting lesson of mortality, "This is all that remains to Saladin, the vanquisher of the East, after all his conquests."—History of Saladin by Maria, 1758.

SALARIO (Andrew), a painter of Milan, was a disciple of Leonardo da Vinci. His pictures are valuable. He died at Florence in 1559, aged 72.—De Piles.

SALE (George), an English writer, who was well versed in the oriental languages. His greatest work is an excellent translation of the Koran, to which he prefixed a curious dissertation. Mr. Sale was also one of the principal authors of the Antient Universal History. He died in 1736.—Gen. Beg. Dis.

SALESBURY (William), a Welsh grammar gian at the beginning of the 17th century, was bred to the law. He assisted bishop Davies in translating the New Testament into Welsh, printed in 1620. He was also the author of a Welsh Dictionary; a Treatise on Rhetoric, and poems.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

SALIMBENI (Venura), an historical painter, was born at Sienna in 1557, and died in 1613. At Wilton there is a fine picture by him of the descent of the Holy Ghost.—Pilkington.

SALLENGRE (Albert Henry de), an ingenious writer, was born at the Hague in 1694. He was educated at Leyden, after which he became an advocate; but died in the flower of his age of the small pox in 1723. He wrote the History of Montmaur, 2 vols. 12mo.; Memoirs of Literature, 2 vols.; Novus Thesaurus Antiquitatum Romanarum, 3 vols. fol.; Essay on the History of the United Provinces, 4to.—Moreri.

SALLO (Dennis de), was born at Paris in 1626. He was a counsellor in the parliament of Paris, and distinguished himself by his literary talents, and the urbanity of his disposition. He formed the project of the Journal des Savans, which commenced in 1665, and was the first literary journal ever published. De Sallo died in 1669.—Moreri.

SALLUST (Caius Crispus), a Latin historian, was born at Amiternum, in Italy, educated under the grammarian Pretectatus, and after going through different employments at Rome, became successively quaestor and tribune. His manners, however, were depraved, and he was degraded from the rank of senator, to which he was restored by Caesar, who gave him the government of Numidia, to repair his dissipated fortune. On his return to Rome he built a superb palace, and spent the rest of his life in luxury and debauchery. He died B.C. 34. It is surprising that such a man as Sallust should spare time to literature; yet his talents were unquestionably great, and his Histories of Catiline's Conspiracy, and of the Jugurthine Wars, throw a veil over the defects of his moral character. The best editions of Sallust are the Elzevir, 1634, 12mo.; the Variorum, Amsterdam, 8vo.; and Barbou, Paris, 1761, 12mo.

SALMANASAR, king of Assyria, succeeded his father Tiglathphalasar, B.C. 728. He took Samaria, and carried the inhabitants into captivity, thereby putting an end to the kingdom of Israel. He was afterwards defeated at sea by the Tyrians, and died 714 B.C.—Jos. phus.

SALMASIUS, or Salmassius (Claude), a learned writer, was born at Saumur in 1588. He received his first education under his father, and was afterwards sent to study at Paris and Heidelberg. He succeeded Scaliger as professor of history at Leyden. Richelieu offered him a pension of 12,000 livres a year on condition of settling in France, which Salmasius us refused. The king, however, conferred on him the order of St. Michael, and the brevet of a counsellor of state. In 1649 he signalized himself by an able defence of Charles I. king of England, which was replied to by Milton. The year following he went to Sweden on an invitation from queen Christina. He died at the Spa in 1653. His principal works are, Historiæ Augustæ Scriptores Sex, folio; De Modo Ufurarum; Dissertatio de fanore trepezitico, in tres libros divisio; De re militari Romanorum; De Hellenistica, 8vo.; and several editions of ancient authors, as Florus, Polyhistor, Simplicius on Epictetus, &c.—Biog.

SALMERON (Alphonfus), a learned Jesuit, was born at Toledo, and studied at Paris. He was one of the first and most zealous disciples of Loyola; and gained great reputation at the council of Trent. He contributed greatly to the establishment of a college at Naples, where he died in 1585. He left numerous Commentaries on the Scriptures, and other works, in 8 vols. folio.—Moreri.

SALMON (William), a practitioner in physic, and a voluminous compiler of books, as "The Complete Physician, or Druggist's Shop opened;" a large Herbal, in 2 vols. folio; Treatise on Astrology; Polygraphice, or the Art of Painting, &c. This last is the best of his works. He died about 1700.—Granger.

SALMON (Thomas), an English historian, and general writer, who died in 1743. He had a concern in the Universal History; compiled a work, called, the Present State of all Nations; and was the author of a Geographical Grammar, 8vo.; the plan of which was adopted by Guthrie. Salmon was also the author of a valuable book, entitled, the Chronological History of England, 2 vols. 8vo.; and of an Examination of Burnet's History of his own Times.—Gen. Biog. Lit.

SALMON (Nathaniel), brother of the above, was educated at Bene't college, Cambridge. He entered into orders, but being hindered of preferment by becoming a non-juror, he turned physician. He died in 1742. His works are, a Survey of the Roman Stations in Britain, 2 vols. 8vo.; the History of Hertfordshire, folio, the Antiquities of Surry, 8vo.; Lives of bishops since the Restoration—It. J.

SALONINA, wife of the emperor Gallienus, was a great benefactress to the city of Rome, and a friend of men of learning and genius. She accompanied her husband in most of his military expeditions, and was murdered with him in 268.

SALTER (Samuel), an English divine was born at Norwich, and educated at the Charter-house, from whence he was sent to Bene't college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He became preacher to the Charter-house, and in 1761 master. He died in 1778. Dr. Salter was a man of extensive learning and prodigious memory; so that he always preached without notes.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SALVI (John), an historical painter, was born near Urbino in 1504, and died in 1590. He copied the works of great masters with surprising accuracy.

SALVI (Nicolas), an architect, was born at Rome in 1699. The most considerable of his works is the fountain of Trevi, executed by the order of Clement XII. He died in 1751.—D'Argenville.

SALVIAN, or SALVIANUS, a divine of the 5th century, is supposed to have been a native of Cologne, and died at Marseilles about 484. His principal piece is a Treatise on Divine Providence. His works, which are written in an elegant style, have been printed in 2 vols. 8vo. 1624.—Dupin. Mereri.

SALVIANI (Hippelitus), a learned physician, was born of a noble family in Umbria, and practised with great reputation at Rome, where he died in 1572, aged 59. He wrote, 1. a Treatise on Fishes, folio; 2. De Crisibus ad Galeni censuram; 3. some Italian Poems and Comedies.—Tiraboschi.

SALVIATI (Francis), a Florentine painter, was born in 1510. His family name was Rossi, which he changed out of respect to cardinal Salviati, by whom he was patronized. He died in 1563. His heads are admirably executed, and the draperies and attitudes are also very fine. Joseph Porta, his disciple, altered his name to that of Salviati. He was an excellent painter, and well versed in chemistry and the mathematics. He was a native of Venice, and died in 1585.—De Piles. Felibien.

SALVIATI (Leonard), a learned writer, was born at Florence in 1540, and died in 1589. He was one of the first members of the academy Della Crusca, and appointed one of the compilers of the dictionary published under the name of that society. He also wrote two comedies; a criticism on Tasso, called, Infarinato; and Observations on Boccaccio.—Tiraboschi.

SALVINI (Antony Marie), was a native of Florence, and professor of Greek in that university. He was a member of the academy Della Crusca, and had a considerable share in the completion of its dictionary. He also published translations from several Greek authors; the Satires and Art of Poetry of Horace; the Metamorphoses of Ovid; and other works from the Latin; Boileau's Art of Poetry, from the French; and Addison's Cato, from the English. His own writings are, a Funeral Oration for Magliabechi; Sonnets; and Academical Discourses. He died in 1729.—Tiraboschi.

mata; Icones Medicorum; and other works.—Lit. Hist. of Hungary.

SAMPSON (William), an author in the reign of king Charles I. who wrote a play, entitled, "The Vow Breaker." He also assisted Markham in his tragedy of "Herod and Antipater."

SAMPSON (Henry), an English divine and physician, was born at South Leverton in Nottinghamshire, and educated at Pembroke-hall, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and became fellow; but was ejected after the restoration for nonconformity. He then went abroad and studied physic at Padua and Leyden, where he took his doctor's degree. On his return to England he was chosen a member of the college of physicians. He died in 1705. He made large collections for a History of Nonconformists, which he never published.—Fun. Sermon by Horne.

SAMSON, the son of Manoah, of the tribe of Dan. He was endowed with extraordinary strength, and obtained several advantages against the Philistines. At length his mistress betrayed him into the hands of his enemies, who put out his eyes, and made him work at a mill. On a public festival, when the Philistine lords were assembled in the temple of Dagon, Samson was sent for to shew them sport. Laying hold of two pillars of the building as if to support himself, he bowed, pulled down the whole building, and was buried in the ruins with above 3000 of the Philistines, B. C. 1117.—Bible.

SAMUEL, a prophet of the tribe of Levi, was called in his youth when attending Eli the high priest. He consecrated Saul king of Israel, and afterwards anointed David to that office. The books of Judges and Ruth are attributed to him. He died aged 96, B. C. 1057. After his death Saul had recourse to a witch at Endor to bring up his ghost.—Bible.

SAMWELL (David), a native of Nantglva in Denbighshire. He was surgeon of the ship Discovery, with captain Cook, and was an eye-witness of the death of that celebrated navigator, of which event he wrote a circumstantial account in a quarto pamphlet. He was also the author of some Welsh poems. He died in 1799.—Ozney's Camb. Biog.

SANDON (Noel Stephen), a learned Jesuit, was born at Rouen in 1676. He became professor of rhetoric at Paris, and had the charge of educating the prince of Conti. He was afterwards appointed librarian to the king, and died in 1733. His principal works are Latin poems, 2 vols; and a Translation of Horace, with Notes, 2 vols. 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SANCHES (Antonio Nunes Ribeiro), a Portuguese physician, was born in 1699. He studied at Leyden under Boerhaave, after which he went and settled in Russia, where he became physician to the emperor.

and to the army. In 1742 he left that country and went to Paris, where he died in 1783. He wrote a Dissertation on the Origin of the Venereal Disease; another on Earthquakes; and a Method of Studying Medicine.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SANCHEZ (Thomas), a Spanish Jesuit, was born at Corduba in 1551, and died at Granada in 1610. His works, in 5 vols. folio, display great learning.—Nic. Antonid. Bibl. Scrip. Hist.

SANCHO, called the Strong, king of Castille, and son of Ferdinand. He dethroned his brothers, the kings of Galicia and of Leon, and seized their dominions. He was slain in 1072.—Mariana SANCHO (Ignatius), an extraordinary negro, was born in 1729, on board a slave ship, in its passage to Spanish America. At Carthagena he was baptized, and received the name of Ignatius. He was brought to England by some ladies, and afterwards became butler to the duchess of Montague, who left him an annuity of 30*l.* a year. He then set up a small shop in the grocery line, having married a young woman of West Indian origin. Being passionately fond of the stage, an attempt was made to bring him forward in the characters of Othello and Oroonoko, but a defect in his articulation put a stop to it. He was very intimate with Sterne, Garrick, and other eminent men; his correspondence has been published, and shews marks of strong natural genius and observation. He died in 1780.—Life by Jekyll, prefixed to his Letters.

SANCHONIATHON, a Phœnician historian, who wrote antiquities of his country, translated into Greek by Philo of Byblus. But only some fragments remain in Porphyry and Eusebius. Sanchoniathon is supposed to have lived in the time of Gideon, judge of Israel.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

SANCROFT (William), archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Evesfield, in Suffolk, in 1616, and educated at Emanuel college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship; which he lost on account of his loyalty in 1649. He then went abroad, and returned soon after the restoration, when he became chaplain to the bishop of Durham, who presented him to the valuable living of Houghton-le Spring, and a prebend in his cathedral. In 1664 he was made dean of York, from whence a few months after he removed to the deanry of St. Paul's, towards rebuilding which he contributed 1400*l.* In 1677 he was raised to the highest station in the church, where he conducted himself with zeal and judgment. He was one of the seven bishops sent to the Tower by James II.; but at the revolution he scrupled taking the oaths, for which he was deprived of his seat. He then led a private and devout life at Evesfield, where he died in 1693. He wrote a curious little dialogue in Latin, against Calvinism, called, the Predestinated Thief; also, Modern Politics taken from Machiavel, &c. and several sermons. His manuscripts were purchased by bishop Tanner, who gave them to the Bodleian library, Oxford.—Bio. Brit.

SANCTORIUS, professor of medicine at Padua, was born at Capo d'Istria in 1561. He made a number of curious experiments on insensible perspiration; to estimate which he caused a balance to be made with a seat, in which he placed himself after his meals. The result of his observations he published in his Medicina Statica Aphorismi; which has been translated into English by Quincy. Sanctorius also wrote Methodus Vitandorum Errorum qui in Arte Medica Contingunt, 4to. He died at Venice in 1636.

SANDBY (Thomas), professor of architecture in the royal academy of London, was born at Nottingham in 1721, and died in 1798.—Gen. Mag.

SANDEMAN (Robert), a Scotch minister, was born at Perth in 1723, and educated at St. Andrews. He formed a sect which still goes by his name. In 1766 he went to New England, where he gathered many followers, and died in 1772. He wrote an Answer to Hervey's Dialogues, in two volumes, exhibiting more alperity than argument.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SANDERS (Nicholas), a zealous Roman-catholic writer, was born at Charlewood in Surry, and educated first at Wykeham's school near Winchester, and next at New college, Oxford, of which he became fellow. About 1560 he went to Rome, where he entered into priest's orders, was made doctor of divinity, and accompanied cardinal Hosius to the council of Trent, and afterwards to Poland. Pope Gregory XIII. sent him nuncio to Ireland, where, to avoid falling into the hands of the English, he wandered about in the woods and bogs, and perished of want in 1581. His principal work is his treatise against the reformation, entitled, De Origine ac Progressu Schismatis Anglicani, 8vo.—Wood, A. O.

SANDERS (Robert), a literary compiler, was born in Scotland about 1729. He wrote a novel called Gaffer Greybeard, 4 vols. 12mo; and put together for the booksellers, the Complete English Traveller, folio; and the Newgate Calendar. He was also amanuensis to lord Lyttelton, when his lordship was engaged on the History of Henry II. He died in 1783.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SANDERSON (Robert), a learned English prelate, was born at Rotherham, in Yorkshire, in 1587, and educated first at the grammar school there, and next at Lincoln college, Oxford, where he was chosen fellow in 1606. He resigned his fellowship in 1619, on obtaining the rectory of Boothby Pannell, in Lincolnshire, which he enjoyed above forty years. In 1631 he became chaplain to the king, who always had a great regard for him; and in 1642 appointed him regius professor of divinity at Oxford. Dr. Sanderson frequently attended his majesty in the Isle of Wight; and at his desire wrote his Judgment of Episcopacy, when the parliament proposed to abolish that form of church government. At the restoration he was promoted to the bishopric of Lincoln, and was moderator at the Savoy conference between the Episcopal and Presbyterian divines. He died in 1663. Bishop Sanderson was one of the greatest casuists of his time, profoundly learned, and of great piety and moderation. His chief works are, Artis Logicæ Compendium; a Collection of Sermons, folio; Cases of Conscience; Lectures read in the divinity school at Oxford; De Juramenti Obligatione; De Obligatione Conscientiæ; Pax Ecclesiæ, about predestination, &c.—Life by Walton. Biog. Brit.

SANDERSON (Robert), a learned antiquary, was usher of the court of chancery, and clerk of the rolls. He continued Rymer's Fœdera, from the 16th to the 20th volume, and died in 1741.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

SANDIUS (Christopher), a Socinian writer, was born in 1644, at Königsberg, in Prussia, and died at Amsterdam in 1680. He wrote, 1. Nucleus Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ; 2. Library of Socinian Writers, 8vo.; 3. Interpretationes Paradoxæ in Joannem; 4. De Origine Animæ; 5. Scriptura Sanctæ Trinitatis Revelatrix, &c.—Morei.

SANDRART (Joachim), a painter, was born at Frankfort in 1606. He was employed by the king of Spain: but he is principally known by his work, entitled, The Lives of Celebrated Painters; and as the founder of an academy at Nuremberg, where he died in 1683.—Felbim.

SANDYS (Edwin), an English prelate, was born in 1519, at Hawkhead, in Lancashire. He received his education at St. John's college, Cambridge, and about 1547 was elected master of Catherine hall. At the accession of Mary he was vice-chancellor, and on refusing to proclaim her was deprived of his office, and sent first to the Tower, and afterwards to the Marshalsea; but after a confinement of some weeks he was set at liberty, on which he went abroad. When Elizabeth came to the throne he returned to England, and was appointed one of the commissioners for revising the Liturgy. He was also made bishop of Worcester, and had a share in the translation of the Scriptures commonly called the Bishops Bible. In 1570 he was translated to London, and in 1576 to York, where a wicked conspiracy was formed to fix on him the imputation of adultery, which was discovered and the actors punished. He died in 1588. His sermons and letters have been printed.—Biog. Brit.

SANDYS (Sir Edwin), second son of the above, was born about 1561, and educated at Oxford, under the learned Hooker. He then went on his travels, and the result of his observations he published under the title of Europæ Speculum, in quarto. He was knighted by James I. and died in 1629, and left 1500*l.* to the university of Oxford, for the endowment of a metaphysical lecture.—Ibid.

SANDYS (George), brother of the preceding, was born at Bishopsthorpe in Yorkshire in 1577. He received his education at Oxford, after which he travelled through several parts of Europe and Asia. In 1615 an account of his travels was printed in folio, with plates. Of this curious and accurate work numerous editions have been published. He also translated the Psalms into verse, and Ovid's Metamorphoses; and both Dryden and Pope bestow upon him great commendations. He died in 1643.—Wood. Granger.

SANNAZARIUS (James), an Italian poet, was born at Naples in 1458, and died in 1530. His Latin poems were printed at Naples in 1718, 12mo., and are written in an elegant style. The most celebrated of his Italian poems is his Arcadia, printed first in 1502, and several times since.—Trabeschi.

SANSON (Nicholas), a French geographer, was born at Abbeville in 1600, and died in 1667. He was engineer and geographer to the king. His maps are very accurate and valuable. He was also the author of Disquisitiones Geographicæ in Pharum Galliz, 2 vols. 12mo.; and other works on geography.—Niceron.

SANSOVINO (James, called Fattis), a sculptor and architect, was born at Florence in 1479. The mint, and the library of St. Marc at Venice, are magnificent specimens of his skill. When a tax was laid upon the inhabitants of Venice, Titian and himself were exempted from the impost. He died in 1570. His son, Francis Sansovino, took his degrees in law at Padua, but afterwards set up a printing-office at Venice, where he died in 1586. He published a translation of Plutarch; Chronology of the World; Annals of the Ottoman Empire; and a curious collection of novels, entitled, Cento Nouvelle Scelte de piu Nobili Scrittori della lingua Volgare, 4to.—D'Argenville. Trabeschi.

SANTEUL (John Baptist), a poet, was born at Paris in 1630. He became a member of the society of canons regulars of St. Victor, and obtained a pension from the king. He died in 1697. His Latin poems are deservedly admired; they have been printed in 3 vols. 12mo.; and a Collection of Hymns in the same language, in 1 vol. 12mo. His brother Claude was also a good Latin poet. He died in 1684.—Morei.

SANTI di Titi, an historical and portrait painter, was born at Florence in 1538, and died in 1603. There are some beautiful pictures by him in his native city.—Piles.

SAPOR I. king of Persia, succeeded his father Artaxerxes about A.D. 238. He took Mesopotamia, Syria, and Cilicia, and made the emperor Valerian prisoner, but after being defeated by Odenatus, he was assassinated by his subjects, A.D. 273.

SAPOR II. succeeded his father Hormisdas. He was a warlike prince, and gained many advantages over the Romans; but tarnished his glory by a dreadful persecution of the christians. He died in 380.—Un. Hist.

SAPPHO, was a native of Mitylene, in the isle of Lesbos. She excelled in lyric poetry, and flourished about 600 B. C. She was held in such estimation by her countrymen that they stamped her image on their coins. The manners of Sappho were loose, and she is said to have fallen in love with a young man named Phaon, who slighted her, on which she threw herself into the sea. Fragments of her poems are extant.

SARASIN (John Francis), a French author, was born at Hermanville, near Caen, in 1604, and died in 1654. He wrote Odes, Eclogues, Epigrams, and other poems; also a History of the Conspiracy of Wallstein; a treatise on the Game of Chess; History of the Siege of Dunkirk, &c.—Moreri.

SARAVIA (Adrian), a protestant divine; was born at Hesdin in Artois in 1590. He became professor of divinity at Leyden, but afterwards came to England, where he obtained a canonry of Canterbury. He was the intimate friend of the famous Hooker, and attended him on his death-bed. Dr. Saravia died in 1611. His theological works have been printed in 1 vol. folio.

SARBIEWSKI (Mathias Calimir), a jesuit, was born in Poland in 1595. After studying at Rome, where he received marks of favour from pope Urban VIII. he returned to Poland, and became professor of philosophy and theology at Wilna. He was also appointed preacher to king Ladislaus V. He died in 1640. His Latin poems are very elegant; the best edition is that of Barbou, at Paris, in 1759, 12mo.—Moreri.

SARDANAPALUS, a famous king of Assyria, who is supposed to have been the same with Phul, mentioned in the Scripture. Arbaces, governor of Media, entering the royal palace, and seeing Sardanapalus, dressed as a courtesan, surrounded by his eunuchs and mistresses, was so disgusted that he immediately formed the design of conspiring against him. Belshazzar, governor of Babylon, entered into his views; and a civil war commenced, in which the king was defeated and closely besieged in Nineveh, where he set fire to his palace, and perished in the flames, B. C. 820.—U. Hist.

SARJEANT (John), a Romish priest, whose real name was Smith. He was born in Lincolnshire about 1621, and educated at Cambridge. Afterwards he became secretary to the bishop of Durham, but in 1642 he went to Lisbon, and changed his religion. In 1659 he returned to England, and wrote some books against the protestant religion, one of which was answered by archbishop Tillotson. Sarjeant died about 1670.—Gen. Hist. Di.

SARPI (Peter Paul), commonly called Father Paul, was born at Venice in 1552. He became a member of the religious order of Servites, and when a young man acquired an uncommon reputation for his various learning and penetrating genius. Besides his acquaintance with the languages, ancient and modern, he was well versed in mathematics, philosophy, theology, and medicine. Some authors have attributed to him, but without reason, the discovery of the circulation of the blood. In the disputes between the republic of Venice and pope Paul V. father Paul distinguished himself with such ability in behalf of his country, that the pope ordered him to Rome, and on his refusal excommunicated him. This did not abate the zeal of this virtuous citizen, who continued to maintain the rights of Venice against the pretended authority of the pope with vigour. An attempt was then made to murder him, and he was attacked on the bridge of St. Mark by five assassins, who left him pierced with wounds. This infamous deed roused the indignation of the senate, who proclaimed large rewards for the apprehension of the assassins, who were never discovered. Though by medical aid he recovered from his wounds, the effects ruined his health, and he died in 1623. His last words were, Esse perpetua, supposed to allude to the liberties of his country. Father Paul wrote several esteemed works; as, 1. The History of the Council of Trent, printed in Italian at London in 1619, and in Latin the year following; 2. Considerations on the Censures of Paul V. against the Republic of Venice; 3. Treatise on the Interdict; 4. De Jure Asylorum; 5. Treatise concerning the Inquisition; 6. Treatise of Benetices; 7. Letters.—Memoirs printed at Venice, 1766.

SARTO (Andrew de), a painter, so named from being the son of a taylor, was born at Florence in 1478, and died in 1530. His pictures are admirably designed, and are remarkable for the excellence of the draperies.—De Piles.

SATURNINUS, a heretic of the second century, who held that the world was created by angels, and that the intercourse of the sexes is unlawful.—Dupin. Masim.

SATURNINUS (Publius Sempronius), a Roman general, who having gained several victories over the Barbarians, assumed the title of emperor A. D. 263. He was a man of great bravery, but was murdered by his soldiers for his severity in 267. There was another of this name who was highly esteemed by Aurelian, and regarded as the best of his generals. The people of Alexandria proclaimed him emperor in 290, but he refused the title. The troops, however, compelled him to accept it. He slew himself not long after at Apamea, where he was besieged by Probus.—Crevier. Univ. Hist.

SAVAGE (Richard), an English poet, was the natural son of the countess of Macclesfield, by earl Rivers, and born in 1697. This unnatural woman caused him to be brought up without a knowledge of his origin, and framed a story of his death to prevent his father from leaving him a proper support. By the death of his nurse he found some papers which disclosed the secret; but every effort made by him to gain his mother's favour was ineffectual. Having the misfortune to kill another man in a drunken quarrel his mother devised every means she could to get him executed; and when he was condemned she endeavoured to prevent his receiving a royal pardon. However his friends procured him a reprieve; and lord Tyrconnel took him into his family. But the temper and conduct of Savage were most unfortunate. He quarrelled with his patron and was discarded. Queen Caroline allowed him a pension of 50*l*, which he lost at her death, and was reduced to great distress. He died in the prison at Bristol, where he was confined for a trifling debt, in 1743. Savage had considerable genius, but it was uncultivated. The best of his poems is entitled, the Bastard.—Life by Dr. Johnson.

SAVAGE (Samuel Morton), a dissenting divine, was born at London in 1721. He received his education under Mr. Eames, and afterwards assisted Dr. Jennings as lecturer in mathematics and philosophy. In 1762, when the academy removed to Hoxton, he filled the divinity chair. In 1785 he quitted the academy. The university of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of doctor in divinity in 1767. He died in 1791. Dr. Savage printed some single discourses, and a volume of his sermons has been printed since his death, with his life prefixed, from whence this article is taken.

SAVAGE (John), an English divine, was lecturer of St. George, Hanover-square, and rector of Clothall, Hertfordshire. He was very fond of attending Westminster school, where he had been bred, and when he died in 1747, the scholars erected a monument to his memory in the cloisters.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SAVARY (James), a French merchant, was born at Douay in Anjou, in 1622. He made a fortune by commerce, after which he became secretary to the king. He wrote the Perfect Negotiator, which passed through many editions, in 2 vols. 4to. He died in 1690. His sons, James and Philemon, published their father's work under the title of a Universal Dictionary of Commerce 3 vols. folio.—Moreri.

SAVARY (N.), a French traveller, was born at Vitre, in Brittany. In 1776 he went to Egypt, from whence he travelled through Greece and the islands of the Archipelago. On his return to France, in 1780, he published the Koran, translated from the Arabic. 2 vols. 8vo.; Letters on Egypt. 3 vols.; and Letters on Greece. He died in 1788.—New Dict.

SAVERY (Roland), a French painter, was born at Cambray in 1576, and died in 1639. He painted landscapes, which he adorned with figures in an excellent style.—De Pile.

SAVILLE (sir Henry), a learned Englishman was born at Bradley, in Yorkshire, in 1549, and educated at Merton college, Oxford, of which he became fellow and warden. In 1596, queen Elizabeth, to whom he had been tutor in the Greek language, gave him the provostship of Eton college; and James I. on his accession, conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He died in 1621, and was buried at Eton. Sir Henry was a munificent patron of learning. He founded two professorships at Oxford, one of astronomy and the other of geometry. He published editions of Chrysostom's works, and of Bradwardin's Treatise de Causa Dei. He also translated part of Tacitus; and wrote a Treatise on Military Affairs, or the Roman Warfare. &c.—Biog. Brit.

SAVILLE (sir George), baronet, of Yorkshire; a public spirited and patriotic English senator, died in 1784, aged 59. He distinguished himself by his opposition to the American war, and by bringing in the bill for repealing the penal statutes against the Roman catholics, for which his house was destroyed in the memorable riots of June 1780.—Gen. Mag.

SAUL, king of Israel, was the son of Kish of the tribe of Benjamin, and anointed king 1095 B. C. He obtained signal advantages over the Philistines and Amalekites, but having spared the spoil, contrary to the divine command, the prophet Samuel informed him the sceptre should depart from him. Being jealous of David he endeavoured several times to take his life; and being defeated by the Philistines on mount Gilboah, he slew himself.—Bibl.

SAUNDERS (Charles), a dramatic writer in the reign of Charles II. While king's scholar at Westminster he wrote a play, called, "Lamerlane the Great," but the time of his death is not known.—Biog. Dram.

SAUNDERS (Richard), an English astrologer and quack, who published the Astrological Judgment and Practice of Physic, 4to. 1677; and a folio volume on Physiognomy and Chiromancy, Moles, Dreams, &c. He died in 1680.—Granger.

SAUNDERS (sir Edmund), a person who rose to be a judge from being a common beggar. A lawyer of Clement's Inn perceiving his genius, took him into his office and made him his clerk. He afterwards became an eminent counsel, and rose to be chief justice in the court of king's bench. He died in 1683.—Life of the Lord Keeper Norb.

SAUNDERSON (Nicholas), an eminent mathematician, was born in 1682, at Thurlston in Yorkshire. He lost his sight when twelve months old by the small pox; but was sent to the free school at Penniston, where he made a great proficiency in classical learning. At the age of eighteen he was introduced to Mr. West, a gentleman of fortune, and a lover of the mathematics, who instructed him in algebra and geometry, and he made such a progress that his friends sent him to Cambridge, where he delivered lectures on mathematics to crowded audiences. Having been created master of arts by royal mandate, he was appointed Lucasian professor of mathematics in 1711; and in 1728 he received the degree of doctor of laws when the king visited the university. He died in 1739. His Elements of Algebra were printed at Cambridge in 1740. in 2 vols. 4to.; and his Treatise on Fluxions was also printed after his death, in one volume octavo.—Martin.

SAVONAROLA, a Dominican, was born at Ferrara in 1452. He became celebrated as a preacher at Florence, where he publicly declaimed against the vices of the clergy, and the corruptions of the Roman church, for which he was excommunicated by the pope, and condemned to the flames, which sentence was executed in 1498. He wrote Sermons; a treatise, entitled, the Triumph of the Cross, and other works, printed at Leyden in 6 vols. 12mo.—Life by Picus Mirandula.

SAVOT (Louis), a French antiquary, was born at Saulieu, in Burgundy, in 1579. He was physician to Louis XIII. and died in 1640. His works are, 1. Discours sur Antient Medals, 4to.; 2. Architecture Françoise des Batimens Particuliers, 4to.; 3. De Causis Colorum, 8vo.—Moreri.

SAURIN (James), was the son of a protestant lawyer at Nîmes, where he was born in 1677, and went with his father into exile to Geneva after the repeal of the edict of Nantz in 1685. In the 17th year of his age he quitted his studies to go into the army, but soon returned to Geneva. On finishing his education he came to London, and preached with acceptance among his fellow exiles for about 5 years. Here he married, soon after which he went to Holland, and became minister of the French church at the Hague, where he died in 1780. He was a most eloquent preacher, and constantly followed by crowds of hearers. His Sermons, in 12 vols. are impassioned, and powerfully persuasive. They have been translated into English by Robinson and Munser. But Saurin's greatest work is entitled, Discourses, historical, critical, and moral, on the most memorable Events of the Old and New Testament, 6 vols. folio.

SAURIN (Joseph), a mathematician, was born in 1659 at Courteson, in the principality of Orange. He entered into the ministry among the protestants, but in 1690 he abjured that religion at Paris, and obtained a pension from the government. He was also a member of the academy of sciences. Rousseau having been accused of writing some libellous verses against persons of distinction, falsely charged Saurin as the author, who was honourably acquitted, and his accuser banished. He died at Paris in 1737. He contributed many valuable papers to the Journal des Savans, and wrote a Memoir of his Own Life.—Ibid.

SAURIN (Bernard Joseph), son of the last mentioned, was an advocate of parliament, and a member of the French academy. He was very intimate with Voltaire, Montesquieu, and Helvetius, the latter of whom allowed him a pension. He died in 1782. He wrote several plays of great merit, as Spartacus, and Blanche and Richard, tragedies; and the Anglomania, a comedy. His dramatic works were printed in 1783, in 2 vols. 8vo.—Ibid.

SAUSSURE (Horace Benedict de), a naturalist, was born at Geneva in 1740. His father, who was a member of the council of two hundred, wrote several works on agriculture, and died in 1790. The son displayed so early a genius as to be appointed professor of philosophy at Geneva when he was only twenty-one. He travelled into several countries, particularly Italy, and when at Naples made several observations on Mount Vesuvius with sir William Hamilton. He afterwards visited and measured Mount Ætna; and ascended the highest parts of the Alps. This virtuous and ingenious man, after enriching the republic of letters by his enquiries, and rendering his country essential benefits, was nearly ruined by the French revolution, and died of chagrin in 1796. He wrote, 1. An Eloge on Bonnet; 2. Dissertatio Physica de Igne; 3. Dissertatio Physica de Electricitate; 4. Project for Reforming the College of Geneva; 5. Essays on Hygrometry; 6. Travels in the Alps, 4 vols. 4to. &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SAUVAGES (Francis Bissier de), a French physician, was born at Alais in 1706. He became royal professor of medicine and botany at Montpellier, member of the royal society of London, and of several other learned bodies. He was called the Boerhaave of Languedoc, and died at Montpellier in 1767. His works are, 1. Theoria Febris; 2. Nosologia Methodica, 5 vols. 8vo.; 3. Physiologia Mechanica, 1 mo.; 4. Methodus Foliorum, 8vo.; 5. Translation of Hales's Statical Essays from the English, &c.—Nouv. D.A. Hist.

SAUVEUR (Joseph), a French mathematician, was born at La Fleche, in 1653. He was dumb till he was seven years of age, and then the organs of speech were so imperfect that he was never able to speak plain. He shewed an early turn for mathematics, which study he cultivated at the Jesuits' college, Paris, and at the age of twenty had prince Eugene for a pupil. In 1686 he was appointed mathematical professor in the royal college. He wrote a Treatise on Fortification; and another on Music; besides several papers in the memoirs of the academy of sciences, of which he was a member. He died in 1716.—Martin.

SAWYER (sir Robert), an eminent lawyer, was a great admirer of lord chief justice Hale, whose virtues he imitated. He was attorney-general from 1681 to 1687, but was removed by James II. for refusing to assist him in his arbitrary designs. He died in 1692.—Granger.

SAXE (Maurice count), was the natural son of Frederic Augustus I. elector of Saxony and king of Poland, and of the countess of Koenigsmark. He was born in 1696, and in his childhood evinced proofs of a martial spirit. In 1709 he served with prince Eugene and Marlborough in the Netherlands. He next displayed great valour under his father in the war against the Swedes, particularly at the siege of Stralsund. In 1717 he was with Eugene in Hungary, where he raised the siege of Belgrade, and contributed much to the defeat of the Turks. After the peace of Utrecht he went to France, where the duke of Orleans gave him the brevet of field-marshal. Having obtained a regiment he employed himself in improving military tactics, and introducing a new exercise. In 1726 the states of Courland elected him their sovereign, on which Poland and Russia joined against him, and after a brave defence the count was obliged to quit the government and the country in 1729. He then returned to France, where he applied to the study of the mathematics, and in a fit of illness wrote his R-eries, or Military Memoirs; a work of equal service to the general and common soldier. On the death of his father in 1733 war was rekindled, and the elector of Saxony, his brother, offered him the command of all his forces, which he declined, giving the preference to the French service. He then joined the marshal Berwick on the Rhine, and displayed great skill and bravery at the siege of Philipsburg, for which he was made lieutenant-general. In 1741 the count took Prague, which was followed by the capture of Agria. In 1744 he was made marshal of France, and commander-in-chief in Flanders. The next year he gained the battle of Fontenoy, though he was so ill as to be carried on a litter. This victory was followed by the fall of several strong towns, particularly Brussels. In 1746 he gained the battle of Rocour, and the same year was appointed marshal of all the French armies, and governor of all the places conquered in the Low Countries. He died in 1750, and was buried in the Lutheran church of Strasburg.

SAXO, surnamed the Grammarian, was born in the isle of Zealand, in Denmark. He went to Paris in 1177, and became a member of the religious order of St. Genevieve. He died in 1204. He wrote the History of the Northern Nations, which was printed at Sora in 1644, folio.—Moreri.

SAY (Samuel), an English poet, and dissenting minister, was born in 1675, and died in 1743. His poems have been printed in one volume 4to.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

SCALA (Bartholomew), an Italian statesman, was born at Florence about 1424. He was held in great esteem by Cosimo, duke of Tuscany, and obtained several honourable appointments in his native country; where he died in 1497. He wrote a History of Florence in Latin; Letters; and other works.—Tiraboschi.

SCALIGER (Julius Casar), a learned writer, was born in 1484, at Ripa, in the territory of Verona, of a noble family. In his youth he served in the army, and afterwards became page to the emperor Maximilian; but being obliged to leave Italy he went to France, where he practised as a physician, and died at Agen, in 1558. His works are, 1. Treatise on the Art of Poetry, folio; 2. De Causis Linguarum Latinarum, 4to.; 3. Exercitationes against Cardan, 4to.; 4. Commentaries on Aristotle's History of Animals, fol.; 5. Animadversiones Historiarum Plantarum, 8vo.; 6. In Theophrasti libros; 7. De Causis Plantarum Commentarii, fol.; 8. Commentarii in Hippocratis librum de insomniis, 8vo.; 9. Epistole, 8vo.; 10. Latin Poems, 8vo.—Niceron.

SCALIGER (Joseph Justus), son of the preceding, was born at Agen in 1540. He studied at Paris, where Turnebus was his tutor in the Greek language. Becoming a Calvinist he removed to Leyden, where he obtained a professorship, and died in 1609. Scaliger was a man of extensive learning, but petulant, and excessively illiberal. His principal works are, 1. De Emendatione Temporum, folio; 2. Canones Illogici; 3. De Tribus Sectis Judæorum, 2 vols. 4to.; 4. Latin Poems, 8vo.; 5. Notes on Ancient Authors.—Ibid.

SCAMOZZI (Vincent), a celebrated architect, was born at Vicenza in 1552, and died at Venice in 1616. His principal works are at Venice, and the most remarkable is the citadel of Palma. Amidst the variety of his employments he composed a treatise on his art, of great merit. The title is Idea della Architettura Universale, 2 vols. folio.—Felbina. D'Argenville.

SCANDERBEG, or George Castriot, king of Albania, a province dependant on the grand seignior, was born in 1404, and delivered by his father John Castriot, with his three brothers, as hostages to Amurat II.

who poisoned the rest, but spared him on account of his youth. The sultan caused him to be circumcised, and gave him the command of some troops, with the title of fangiak. On the death of his father in 1432, he formed the design of recovering the throne of his ancestors, and being sent some time after against Hungary he entered into a secret treaty with Huniades Corvinus, king of that country, seized the sultan's secretary, and compelled him to write and seal an order to the governor of Albania, commanding him to deliver the capital to Scanderbeg. He then repaired to that country, and ascended the throne in 1443. Amurath laid siege to Croia, the capital of Albania, but was twice defeated. The war was continued by his successor Mahomet II. till 1461, when the independence of the country was settled by treaty. Scanderbeg after this went to Italy to assist Ferdinand, king of Arragon, who was closely besieged in Bari. The Albanian hero relieved the place, and contributed to the defeat of the count of Anjou. He died in the states of Venice in 1467.—Life by Poncet, 1709.

SCAPULA (John), a learned lexicographer of the 16th century. He completed his education at Lausanne, after which he was employed in the printing-house of Henry Stephens, and while engaged in correcting his famous Theaurus Lingua Graeca, Scapula made a secret abridgement, which was printed in 1580, under the title of a Greek Lexicon, and proved the ruin of Stephens.

SCARBOROUGH (Sir Charles), first physician to Charles II. James II. and William III. He succeeded Dr. Harvey as lecturer on anatomy and surgery, and was the first who applied mathematical principles to anatomy and medicine. He died in 1693. Sir Charles wrote, Syllabus Musculorum; and other works.—Granger.

SCARRON (Paul), a celebrated writer, was born at Paris in 1610. His father, who was a counsellor of the parliament, compelled him to enter into the ecclesiastical state, and he obtained a canonry at Mans, where he lost the use of his limbs, on which he removed to Paris, and procured a pension. In 1652 he married mademoiselle d'Aubigne, afterwards the famous madame de Maintenon. Scarron, who was a man of infinite humour, died in 1660. He wrote a number of comedies; a travesty of Virgil's Aeneid; and the Comic Romance; besides several poems. All his works were printed at Paris in 1786, in 7 vols. 8vo.—Niceron.

SCHAAF (Charles), professor of the oriental languages at Leyden, was born at Nuyts in the electorate of Cologne, in 1646, and died of an apoplexy in 1729. His principal works are, 1. Grammatica Chaldaica et Syriaca, 8vo.; 2. Novum Testamentum Syriacum, with a Latin translation, 4to.; 3. Lexicon Syriacum Concordantiale, 4to.; 4. Epitome Grammaticae Hebraeae, 8vo.—Moreri.

SCHAAEN (Giles), a painter, was born at Alkmaar in Holland, in 1616. He resided a considerable time at Paris, where he acquired great reputation as a portrait and historical painter. He died in 1668.—Houbraken.

SCHALCKEN (Godfrey), an eminent painter, was born at Dort in 1643. He was a disciple of Gerard Douw, and resided for some time in London, where he painted a remarkable portrait of William III. by candlelight, the king holding the candle himself. He died at the Hague in 1706.—It.

SCHATEN (Nicholas), a German jesuit, died at the end of the 17th century. He wrote, 1. Historia Westphaliae, folio; 2. Annales Paderbornenses, fol.—Moreri.

SCHELLE (Charles William), an able chemist, was born at Stralsund in 1742, and died in 1786. He was a member of the academy of Stockholm, and of the royal society of medicine at Paris. His Treatise on Air and Fire, written in the German language, has been translated into French, and is highly esteemed.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SCHIELSTRATE (Emanuel de), librarian of the Vatican, and canon of St. John de Lateran at Rome, was a native of Antwerp, and died in 1692, aged 43. He wrote, 1. Antiquitates Ecclesiae Illustratae, 2 vols. fol.; 2. Ecclesia Africana sub Primato Carthaginiensi, 4to.; and other works on ecclesiastical history, but very partial to the papal authority.—Ibid.

SCHIEFFER (John), a learned writer, was born at Stralsburg, in 1621. He became professor of elocution and politics at Upsal, and librarian of that university, where he died in 1679. He wrote, 1. De Militia Navali Veterum; 2. Upsalia Antiqua; 3. Laponia, which has been translated into English, under the title of the History of Lapland, folio; 4. Sueciz Litterata; 5. De Re Vehiculari Veterum.—Moreri.

SCHMIDT (George Frederic), an engraver, was born at Berlin in 1713, and died in that city in 1775. He studied at Paris under Larmessin, and was admitted a member of the academy of painting. He excelled chiefly in engraving portraits.—Novæ Diss. Hist.

SCHÖFFLIN (John Daniel), professor of history in the Lutheran university of Strasburg, was born at Sulzburg in the Brisgaw in 1694, and died at Strasburg in 1771. His works are, 1. Historia Euringo-Badensis Carlsruhe, 7 vols. 4to.; 2. Alsatia Diplomatica, 2 vols. fol.; 3. Alsatia Illustrata, 2 vols. fol.; 4. Alsaticarum rerum Scriptores, fol.; 5. Vindiciæ typographicæ, 4to.—Ibid.

SCHOMBERG (Henry de), marshal of France, was descended of a German family. He served in 1617 in Piedmont under marshal d'Estrees, and afterwards against the Huguenots in the civil wars. In 1625 he was made field-marshal, and two years afterwards defeated the English at the Isle of Rhe. In 1629 he forced the passage of Sufa, on which occasion he was severely wounded. The next year he took Pignerol, and relieved Casal. In 1632 he defeated the rebels in Languedoc at the famous battle of Castelnaudary, for which he was made governor of that province. He died the same year of an apoplexy. He wrote a Relation of the War of Italy, printed first in 1630, and again in 1682.—Moreri.

SCHOMBERG (Frederic Armand, duke of), was born of an illustrious family, but different from the preceding. He served first under Frederic Henry, prince of Orange, and his son William, but in 1650 he passed into the French service, and obtained the government of Gravelines and Furnes. In 1661 he was sent to Portugal, where he commanded with such success as to force Spain to make peace. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes, he left France and went to Brandenburg, where the elector made him minister of state. He accompanied the prince of Orange to England at the revolution, was created a peer, made knight of the garter, and had a large sum voted him by parliament. In 1689 he went with William to Ireland, and was shot by mistake as he was crossing the Boyne, by the French refugees of his own regiment.—Rapin. Moreri.

SCHONER (John), a mathematician, was born at Carlsstadt, in Germany, in 1477. When a very young man he was chosen professor of mathematics at Nuremberg, and gained a considerable reputation by his astronomical tables, published after those of Regiomontanus. His other works are, Treatise on Drilling; Organicum Uranicum; Use of the Globes; and a Treatise on the Astronomical Equator. He died in 1547.—Mérel. Adam. Martin.

SCHULEMBURG (Matthias John, count), was born in 1661. He was first in the Polish service, and with a small army succeeded in repelling several attacks made by the Swedes under Charles XII. In 1708 he was at the battle of Malplaquet, where his conduct gained him the esteem of prince Eugene. In 1711 he entered into the Venetian service, and compelled the Turks to raise the siege of Corfu. In 1726 he came to England on a visit to his sister, the countess of Kendal, but he returned again to Venice, where he died in 1743.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SCHULTENS (Albert), a learned German divine, was born at Groningen, and became professor of the Oriental languages, first at Franeker and afterwards at Leyden, where he died in 1741, aged 70. His principal works are, a Commentary upon Job, 2 vols. 4to.; Commentary on the Proverbs, 4to.; The Life of Saladin, translated from the Arabic, folio; Aninadversiones Philologicae et Criticae ad varia loca veteris Testamenti; a Hebrew Grammar, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SCHULZE (John Henry), a physician, was born at Colbitz, in Germany, in 1687, and died professor of medicine at Hall in 1745. He was well acquainted with the Oriental languages, and wrote, 1. Historia Medicinæ à rerum initio ad annum urbis Romæ 535 deducta, 4to.; 2. Physiologia Medica, 8vo.; 3. Pathologia generalis et specialis; 4. De Materia Medica; 5. Dissertationes Medicæ et Historicæ, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SCHURMAN (Anna Maria de), a learned lady, was born at Cologne in 1607. At the age of six years she cut out figures in paper with great exactness, and at eight she painted flowers in crayons in a pleasing manner. She also made a surprising proficiency in learning. She understood the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages, and was acquainted with several modern. She applied to music, painting, and engraving with great success, and her writing was remarkable for its beauty. In 1630 she became a disciple of the enthusiast Labadie, after whose death she retired to Wiewart, in Friesland, where she died in 1678. Her Opuscula, or Pieces in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, were printed in 1652, 4to. She also wrote Latin Poems, and a Defence of Female Study.—Niceron.

SCHURTZ-FLERSCH (Conrad Samuel), a learned German, was born at Corbac, in the county of Waldeck, and became professor of Greek at Wittemburg, and counsellor and librarian to the duke of Saxe Weimar. He died in 1708. His works are, 1. Disputationes Historiæ Civiles, three vols. 4to.; 2. Epistles, 3 vols. 8vo.; 3. a Continuation of Sleidan's History, 4to. 1678; 4. Dissertationes on Miscellaneous Subjects.—Ibid.

SENUUR (Theodore Vander), a Dutch painter, was born at the Hague in 1628. He studied at Paris under Sebastian Bourdon, after which he visited Italy. He died in 1705. He enriched his back grounds with representations of antient ruins.—Pilkington.

SCHWARTZ (Berthold), a monk of the order of Cordeliers at the end of the thirteenth century, was a native of Eriburg, in Germany, and an able chemist. As he was making some experiments with nitre he discovered the composition of gun-powder, which was first applied to warlike purposes by the Venetians in 1300.—Moreri.

SCHYNDAL (Bernard), a Dutch painter, was born at Haerlem in 1659. He painted shepherds, ale-houses, &c. He died in 1716.—Pilkington.

SCHWARTZ (Cornelius), a painter, was born at Ingolstadt in 1550, and died at Munich in 1594. He painted at Venice under Titian, and gained for excellent a style as to be called the Raphael of Germany.—Fedichen.

SCHWERIN (Christopher, count) a general and field-marshal in the Prussian service, was born in 1684. He entered early into the army, and distinguished himself on many occasions. In 1741 he gained the battle of Molwitz at the moment when the Prussians thought themselves lost. He was slain at the battle of Prague in 1757. The king of Prussia erected a statue to his honour, and the emperor of Germany a monument on the spot where he was slain.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

SCIOPIUS (Gasper), a learned grammarian, was born at Neumark, in the Upper Palatinate, in 1576. At the age of twenty-three he turned roman catholic, but his character was bad. He wrote an abusive satire on the family of Joseph Scaliger, who replied by exposing that of his adversary. Sciopius also wrote against James I. of England, and attacked the jesuits with great asperity. At the close of life he employed himself in explaining the apocalypse. He died at Padua in 1649. His principal works are, 1. Verisimilium, lib. iv. 8vo.; 2. Commentarius de Arte Critica, 8vo.; 3. De sua ad Catholicos Migratione; 4. Notationes Criticæ in Phædram, in Priapeia; 5. Suspectarum Lectionum; 6. Clasificum Belli Sacri; 7. Collyrium Regium; 8. Grammatica Philosophica, 8vo.—Moreri.

SCIPIO (Publius Cornelius), surnamed Africanus, a celebrated Roman. He made his first campaign, at the age of seventeen, under his father, whose life he saved in the battle of Tefin. After the battle of Cannæ he prevented the Roman officers from abandoning their country as they had intended, out of despair of saving it. Scipio was elected ædile at the age of twenty-one. His father and uncle having fallen in battle he obtained the command in Spain, where he defeated the enemy and took New Carthage in one day. He put an end to the war in that country by a decisive battle, and then crossed over into Africa, where he defeated Asdrubal and Syphax B. C. 203. He afterwards gained the battle of Zama, which victory produced peace between Rome and Carthage. Scipio obtained a triumph, and the appellation of Africanus for these brilliant services. He was also honoured with the consular dignity twice, but envy of his glory brought upon him a charge of peculation. Scipio appeared before the people and defended himself so effectually that his accusers were left alone, and he entered the capital with universal acclamations. The affair, however, was brought forward again before the tribunes, but he had retired to his country house, where he died B. C. 180. The virtues and generosity of Scipio, especially to his female captives, were as distinguished as his valour and prudence.—Livy.

SCIPIO (Lucius Cornelius), surnamed Asiaticus, was brother of the preceding, with whom he served in Spain and Africa. His services obtained him the consulate B. C. 189. He afterwards conducted the war in Asia against Antiochus, over whom he gained a great victory on the plains of Magnesia. For this he was honoured with a triumph and the appellation of Asiaticus. Cato the censor, however, preferred a charge against him of peculation, and his goods were sold to pay the supposed debt he owed to the republic.—Ibid.

SCIPIO-NASICA was the cousin of the preceding, whom he defended with great eloquence before the people. He was refused the consulship at first, but afterwards obtained that dignity, and gained some signal victories in Spain.—Id.

SCIPIO (Publius Æmilianus), was the son of Paulus Æmilius, and adopted by the son of Scipio Africanus. He was called Africanus the Younger in consequence of his victories over the Carthaginians. He served the office of ædile and afterwards of consul, in which situation he laid siege to, and sucended in taking. Carthage B. C. 147. For this he was chosen consul the second time, and took Numantia B. C. 133, whence he acquired the surname of Numantinus. He was assassinated in his bed five years afterwards, as is supposed by the direction of the triumvirs, who suspected him of aspiring to the dictatorship.—Livy.

SCIPIO (Publius), father-in-law of Pompey, retired into Africa with the remains of the vanquished army after the battle of Pharsalia, and having joined the troops of Juba, king of Mauritania, was for some time successful, but was defeated by Cæsar at Thapsus, and fell in battle.—Plutarch.

SCLATIER (William), an English divine, was born in Somersetshire and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of Brasenose college, and proceeded to his degree of doctor in divinity. He obtained the living of Otterden, in Kent, where he died in 1647. He wrote elegies and epitaphs under the title of Threnodia Britannica, 4to.; Pala-Albion, or the History of Great Britain to the reign of James I., folio, in Latin and English verse; Psalms, or Songs of Zion; Genethliacon, five Stemma Regis Jacobi, fol. This is a genealogy of that monarch from Adam. There was another William Sclater, doctor in divinity, a member of King's college, Cambridge, and vicar of Pitminster, Somersetshire, where he died in 1626. He wrote a Commentary on the Epistles to the Romans and Thessalonians, folio. His son became minister of Cullumpton, in Devon, and prebendary of Exeter. He published some sermons.—Wood.

SCOPAS, an architect and sculptor of the isle of Paros, flourished B. C. 430. He built the famous mausoleum for Artemisia, in honour of her husband, but his chief work was a statue of Venus, which was esteemed superior to that of Praxiteles.—Pliny.

SCORZA (Sinibaldo), a painter and engraver, was born at Voltaggio in the territory of Genoa, and died in 1631, aged 41. He engraved after the designs of Albert Durer, with great exactness, and painted animals, flowers, and landscapes.—De Piles. Felibien.

SCOT (Reynolde), an English writer, was born in Kent of a genteel family, and educated at Oxford, after which he retired to his paternal estate, where he wrote, 1. a perfect Platform of a Hop Garden, quarto, 1576; 2. the Discovery of Witchcraft, 4to.; 3. Discourse upon Devils and Spirits. In the two last he combats the absurdities of witchcraft and incantations with great success, but he was replied to by many learned men, and also by James I. in his Demonology. Mr. Scot died in 1599.—Wood.

SCOTLAND. The antient inhabitants of this part of the island of Great Britain were called Caledones, and were of Celtic origin. In the fourth century they were named Picts and Scots. The Romans under Agricola conquered Caledonia, A. D. 85, but in 121 they built a wall to prevent the incursions of the Picts from the Solway Frith to the Tyne. After the departure of the Romans the Picts extended their territories southward. The first sole king of Scotland was Kenneth II. in 839. In 1296 Edward I. of England subdued the country. In 1603 James VI. succeeded to the crown of England, and thereby became the first king of Great Britain. In 1707 the two countries were united by act of parliament.—Buchanan. Hume.

SCOTT (Michael), a native of Fifeshire in Scotland, was greatly esteemed by Alexander II., and knighted by him after the battle of Largo. He died in 1291. His skill in chemistry and mathematics made him pass for a magician. Fragments of his works on natural history, mathematics, and philosophy remain.—Life by Sir George Mackenzie.

SCOTT (John), a learned divine, was born at Chippenham, in Wiltshire, in 1638, and educated at Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of doctor in divinity. He was successively minister of St. Thomas's, Southwark, rector of St. Peter le-Poor, London, and of St. Giles in the Fields, to which was added a canonry of Windsor. He wrote a very esteemed work called the Christian Life, in one vol. folio, and five vols. 8vo. He was also the author of several Sermons, Cases of Conscience Resolved, and Tracts against Popery.—Funeral Sermon by Johnson.

SCOTT (Daniel), a learned writer, was born in London, and educated for the ministry under Mr. Jones at Tewkesbury, and afterwards at Utrecht, where he took the degree of doctor of laws. While there he joined the society of mennonites or baptists, but never entered on the ministerial function. In 1725 he published an Essay towards a Demonstration of the Scripture Trinity, which passed through three editions. In 1741 he printed a new Version of St. Matthew's Gospel, with critical notes, and in 1745 an Appendix to Stephens's Greek Lexicon, 2 vols. folio. He died in 1759.—Monthly Mag. Jan. 1803.

SCOTT (Thomas), brother of the above, was a dissenting minister first at Hitchin, in Hertfordshire, and afterwards at Norwich, where he died in 1746. He published some occasional Sermons, and an attempt to prove the Godhead of Christ, by settling the sense of a single text, John xx. 28. He had two sons, viz. Dr. Joseph Nicol Scott, who was for some time pastor of an independent congregation at Norwich, but quitted the office on turning airian, and became a physician. He published two volumes of Sermons, and revised the folio edition of Bailey's dictionary. His brother, Thomas Scott, was minister of a dissenting congregation first at Lowestoff, in Suffolk, and next at Ipswich, from whence he removed to Hapton, in Norfolk, where he died about 1775. He published several single Sermons, and a small volume of Lyric Poems; but he is best known by a translation of the Book of Job into English verse, with notes, of which two editions have been printed.—Monthly Mag. Jan. 1803.

SCOTT (John), an English poet, was the son of a tradesman in London, and born in 1730. His father retiring from business to Amwell, in Hertfordshire, our author had his education there. He wrote, when young, Elegies, descriptive and moral, which were admired by some good poets. All his poems were printed together in one volume octavo, in 1782. Mr. Scott was also the author of Observations on the Poor; a Digest of the Highway and Turnpike Laws; and a piece on the Authenticity of Rowley's Poems. He died in 1783.—Europ. Mag.

SCOTT (Samuel), an English painter, whose sea pieces and views rank with those of Vandervelde. He died in 1772.—Pitt.

SCOTT (David), an historian, was born near Haddington, in East Lothian, in 1675, and died in 1742. He was imprisoned several times on account of his attachment to the house of Stuart. He was the author of a History of Scotland.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SCOUAL (Henry), a Scotch episcopal divine, was born at Saltoun, in East Lothian, and educated at Aberdeen, where he took the degree of master of arts, after which he entered into orders and was made professor of divinity, but died at the age of twenty-eight in 1678. His principal performance is an admirable tract on the Life of God in the Soul of Man.—Preface to his works, 8vo.

SCRIBONIUS-LARGUS, a Roman physician in the time of Augustus or Tiberius, some of whose works are extant, and were printed at Basil in 1529.—Friend's Hist. Phys.

SCRIVERIUS (Peter), a Dutch writer, was born at Haerlem, where he died in 1653. He wrote, "Batavia Illustrata," 4to.; and Batavia Comitumque Historia. He also published editions of Vegetius, and other writers, on Military Affairs.—Ibid.

SCROGGES (Sir William), an English judge, was born at Deddington, in Oxfordshire, in 1623, and educated for the church but entered into the royal army, and afterwards of Gray's Inn, where he was called to the bar. In 1669 he was knighted, and made sergeant at law, and in 1678 chief justice of the king's bench. He displayed so much zeal at the trials of the persons charged with being concerned in the popish conspiracy that articles of impeachment were preferred against him by the Commons, and he was removed from his place in 1681. He died in 1683. Several of his speeches have been printed in the State Trials.—Wood.

SCUDDER (Henry), a presbyterian divine, was minister of Coligbourne Ducis in Wiltshire, and bachelor of divinity of Cambridge. He wrote a noted book called the "Christian's Daily Walk," 8vo., and died before the reformation.—Granger.

SCUDERI (George de), was born at Havre-de-Grace in 1601, and admitted a member of the French academy in 1650. He died in 1665. His works, which are very indifferent, consist of Plays, Poems, an Apology for the Theatre, Political Discourses and Harangues.—Moreri.

SCUDERI (Magdalen de), sister of the preceding, was born in 1607. She was an author from necessity, and wrote a great number of romances and other works, as Clelia, 10 vols. 8vo.; Artamenes, or the Grand Cyrus, 10 vols.; Ibrahim, or the illustrious Bassa, 4 vols.; Conversations and Discourses, 10 vols.; a Discourse on Glory, &c. She was admitted a member of the academy of Ricovrati at Padua, and had pensions from cardinal Mazarin and Louis XIV. She died in 1701.—Niceron.

SCULTETUS (Abraham), a German divine, was born at Grumberg, in Silesia, in 1566, and died at Emden in 1626. He was professor of divinity at Heidelberg, and was sent as deputy from that university to the synod of Dort. He wrote, Medulla Patrum, and several other learned works.

SCYLAX, a geographer and mathematician of Caria, who flourished B. C. 522. He was employed by Darius, son of Hytaspes, in making discoveries in India. Some attribute to him the invention of geographical tables. His Periplus was published by Gronovius in 1697 at Leyden.—Vossius de Math.

SEAMAN (Lazarus), a non-conformist divine, was born at Leicester, and bred at Emmanuel college, Cambridge. In the civil wars he distinguished himself with so much zeal on the side of parliament as to be appointed master of Peter-house, Cambridge, where he took his doctor's degree. He was also a member of the assembly of divines at Westminster. He died in 1675. His library was the first that ever was sold by auction in England. He printed several sermons.—Calamy.

SERA (Albert), a native of Etzeel, in East Friesland, was the author of a work on natural history published at Amsterdam in 1734, in 3 vols. folio. The explanations are in Latin and French.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SEBASTIAN, king of Portugal, was the posthumous son of the Infant John, by a daughter of the emperor Charles V. and succeeded John III. in 1557. He engaged in an unsuccessful war with the Moors in 1574, and in 1578 he went in person to assist Muly Mohammed, son of Abdalla, king of Morocco, against the king of Fez; but in a battle fought near Tangiers Sebastian was slain. As his body was not found two false Sebastians appeared afterwards in Portugal, but one was executed and the other sent to the galleys.—Univ. Hist.

SEBASTIAN del Plombo, so called from a place which was given him by pope Clement VII., though he is also known by the name of Sebastian of Venice, was born in that city in 1485, and died in 1547. As a painter he rivalled Raphael, by a beautiful picture of the resurrection of Lazarus.—De Piles. Felibien.

SECKENDORF (Guy Louis de), a German historian, was born in Franconia in 1626. He became privy-counsellor to the elector of Brandenburg, and chancellor of the university of Hall, where he died in 1692. He wrote a History of Lutheranism, in Latin, 2 vols. fol.; State of the Princes of Germany, 8vo.; and a Description of the Germanic Empire, 8vo.—Moreri.

SECKER (Thomas), a learned and pious prelate, was born at Sibthorpe, in Nottinghamshire, in 1693. He was educated at Tewksbury under the learned Mr. Jones with a view to the ministry among the dissenters; but in 1716 he went to Leyden, where he studied physic and took his degree in that faculty. After his return to England he entered himself of Exeter college, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of doctor of laws. On entering into orders he became chaplain to bishop Talbot, and in 1733 was instituted to the rectory of St. James, Westminster. The year following he was consecrated bishop of Bristol, and in 1757 translated to Oxford. In 1750 he obtained the deanry of St. Paul's, and in 1758 was advanced to the archbishopric of Canterbury. He died in 1768. The sermons, charges, and lectures of this excellent prelate are distinguished by their perspicuity and eloquence.—Life by Bishop Porteus.

SECONDUS (John), a Latin poet, was born at the Hague in 1511. He studied law under Alciatus, and afterwards became secretary to the archbishop of Toledo. He died at Utrecht in 1536. His poems are various but excellent. The most celebrated are the Basia, or the Kisses, which have been translated into several languages.—Moreri.

SECONDAT DE MONTESQUIEU (John Baptist), son of the celebrated author of the Spirit of Laws, died in 1796, aged 79. He was a counsellor in the parliament of Bourdeaux. His works are, 1. Memoir on Electricity, 8vo.; 2. Observations on the Mineral Waters of the Pyrenees, 12mo.; 3. Considerations on the Constitution of the French Marine, 8vo.; 4. Natural History of the Oak, folio.—Novu. Dict. Hist.

SECOUSSE (Denis-Francis), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1691, and educated under Rollin, after which he became an advocate, but quitted the law for literature. He was employed by the chancellor D'Aguesseau as censor-royal, and in other public services. He became blind, and died in 1754. He published, a Collection of Royal Ordinances; Memoirs for a History of Charles the Bad, 2 vols. 4to.; and several Dissertations in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions.—Ibid.

SECURIS (John), a physician, was born in Wiltshire, and educated at New college, Oxford. He practised with reputation at Salisbury, where he died about 1570. He published an Almanack; also a piece intitled, A Detection and Querimony of the daily Enormities and Abuses committed in the three Branches of Physic.—Wood.

SEDAINE (Michael John), a French dramatic writer, was born at Paris in 1719. He was brought up a mason, but a taste for the theatre induced him to quit his business, and to write comedies, which he did with great success. His comic operas possess considerable merit, and some of them have been translated into English, as Richard Cœur de Lion, and Blue Beard. He was a member of the French academy, and secretary of that of architecture. He died in 1797.—Novu. Dict. Hist.

SEDGWICK (Obadiah), a non-conformist divine, was born at Marlborough, in Wiltshire, in 1600, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford. On entering into orders he became chaplain to sir Horatio Vere, whom he accompanied in his expedition to the Low Countries. In the time of the rebellion he was a frequent preacher before the parliament, and a member of the assembly of divines. He died at Marlborough in 1657. He wrote a number of religious treatises and sermons.—Wood.

SEDLLEY (sir Charles), a poet, was born at Aylesford, in Kent, about 1630. He was one of the wits of the court of Charles II., who had a great regard for him. His daughter became mistress to James II., who created her countess of Dorchester; but sir Charles was zealous for the restoration, and being asked the reason answered, "from a principle of gratitude; for since his majesty has made my daughter a countess it is fit I should do all I can to make his daughter a queen." He died in 1701. His poems are loose and indifferent. He also wrote some Plays.—Ibid.

SEDULIUS (Cæcilius), an ecclesiastic and poet of the fifth century, who wrote a Poem on the Life of Christ intitled, Paschale Carmen. It was published by Aldus in 1502, 8vo.—Moreri.

SEE-MA-KOANG, a Chinese mandarin and philosopher of the eleventh century. He enjoyed the favour of the emperor, and had several important places, which he resigned and retired to a solitary place, where he wrote a History of China, commencing at the 403d year before the christian era. He was also the author of some moral treatises.—Novu. Dict. Hist.

SEED (Jeremiah), a learned divine, was born at Clifton, in Cumberland, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts and obtained a fellowship. He was afterwards presented to the rectory of Enham, in Hampshire, where he died in 1747. His Sermons, in four vols. 8vo., are very excellent.—Preface to his Sermons.

SEGAR (sir William), garter king at arms, was author of "Honour Civil and Military," folio, 1602. He was imprisoned for granting the royal arms of Arragon, with a cunton of Brabant, to George Brandon, the common hangman; but it appearing that he was imposed upon he was released. He died in 1638. Edmonson's Baronage is principally taken from sir William's MSS.—Granger.

SEGHERS (Gerard), a painter, was born at Antwerp in 1592, and died there in 1651. He studied under Janssens, and improved himself in Italy after the best masters. He painted religious subjects, also musical assemblies and feasts. His brother Daniel was a disciple of Velvet Breughel, and entered among the jesuits, but continued his profession. He excelled in painting flowers and insects, and died in 1660.—Friblin.

SEGNERI (Paul), an Italian jesuit, was born at Nettuno in 1624. His celebrity as a preacher occasioned him to be called to Rome by pope Innocent XII. to whom he became chaplain. He died in 1694. His works are, Sermons, 7 vols.; the Unbeliever without Excuse; the Pastor instructed; the Illusions of the Quietists, &c., all collected in 3 vols. folio.—Moreri.

SEGRAIS (John Regnault de), a French poet, was born at Caen in 1624, of a noble family, and educated at the jesuits' college for the priesthood, which profession he declined. Madame de Montepusier became his friend, and appointed him her gentleman in ordinary. He was afterwards patronized by madame de la Fayette. In 1676 he retired to his native place, where he married a lady of fortune. He was a member of the French academy, and died in 1701. Segrais wrote some elegant Eclogues; and translated the Georgics and Eneid of Virgil into French verse. His prose works are, a Collection of Novels; and Segraisiana, or a Miscellany of History and Literature.—Moreri.

SEGUI (Joseph), a French divine, was born at Rodez in 1689. He obtained a poetical prize of the French academy in 1732, and was afterwards admitted a member of that body. He died at Meaux, where he had a canonry, in 1761. His works are; Panegyrics, 2 vols. 12mo.; Sermons, 2 vols.; and Academical Discourses, 1 vol. His panegyric on St. Louis is his master-piece.—Novv. DiA. Hist.

SEGUIER (John Francis), an eminent botanist, was born at Nîmes in 1703. He was bred to the law, but renounced that profession to follow his favourite pursuits. He accompanied the marquis Scipio Maffei on his travels in France, England, Holland, and Germany; and on his return to his own country became principal of the academy of Nîmes. He died in 1784. His works are; Bibliotheca Botanica, 4to.; Planta Veronenses, 3 vols. 8vo.; and a Translation of the works of Maffei.—Novv. DiA. Hist.

SEJANUS (Ælius), a celebrated Roman, was the son of Seius Strabo, a Roman knight, and captain of the prætorian guards. Sejanus first introduced himself into the favour of Caius Cæsar, the grandson of Augustus, and afterwards to that of Tiberius, who made him his confidant. He also contrived, by his pliability of temper and insinuating address, to gain the affections of the people, the soldiers, and the senate. He was appointed commander of the prætorian guards, and had the disposal of all places of trust and honour, which he gave to his own creatures. Inflamed by ambition, he aspiring to the imperial throne, and to gain his end murdered Drusus, the son of the emperor, after which he declared his intention of marrying Livia, the widow of Drusus, but this was opposed by Tiberius. The emperor at length perceiving the real views of his favourite, caused him to be accused before the senate, on which he was deserted by all his friends and sent to prison, where he was strangled A. D. 31. His body, after being dragged about the streets, was thrown into the Tiber.—Tacitus.

SELDEN (John), a learned writer, was born at Salvington, in Sussex, in 1584. From Chichester school he removed to Hart hall, and from thence to the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar, and became distinguished as a profound lawyer and antiquary. He drew up a Treatise on the Civil Government of England before the Conquest, at the age of twenty-two, which gained him great reputation among the learned of his time. In 1614 he published his Titles of Honour, and in 1618 his history of Tythes, which gave great alarm to the clergy, and was answered by several writers. Being prosecuted in the high commission court, he subscribed a submission and acknowledgement of his fault. In 1621 he was committed to custody as the principal promoter of the protest made by the commons respecting their privileges. In 1623 he was chosen member of parliament for Lancaster, and in the following one he sat for Great Bedwin, in Wiltshire. He afterwards sat again for Lancaster, and was a strenuous opposer of the duke of Buckingham, and had a principal share in drawing up the petition or right. For his continued opposition to the court he was sent to the Tower in 1628, from whence he was removed to the king's bench, and in 1631 admitted to bail. In 1636 he published his Defence of the King's Dominion over the British Seas, in answer to Grotius. In 1642 he was offered the great seal, which he declined accepting. Though he took the covenant, and was appointed by parliament keeper of the records, as also a member of the assembly of divines, he refused to write in their defence. He died in 1654, and was buried in the Temple-church. His works were published in 6 vols. folio, 1726.—Biog. Brit.

SELEUCUS NICANOR, king of Syria, was one of the generals of Alexander the Great, after whose death he seized upon Babylon, but was driven out by Antigonus, on which he fled to Ptolemy, with whose assistance he formed an army and defeated Antigonus, who was slain B.C. 301. Seleucus then began the Syrian race of kings called Seleucides, but was assassinated by Ptolemy Ceraunus, B.C. 280.

SELM I. emperor of the Turks, was the second son of Bajazet II. whom he dethroned and murdered, as he did his two brothers in 1512. Having secured the throne by these crimes, he turned his arms with great success against Egypt and Persia. The former country he completely conquered, and put an end to the dominion of the Mamelukes, which had lasted above 260 years. He died in 1520.—Univ. Hist.

SELM II. grandson of the above, succeeded his father Solyman II. in 1566. In 1570 he broke the treaty which his father had made with the Venetians, and took the island of Cyprus, but the year following he lost the battle of Lepanto, which obliged him to sue for peace. He died in 1574.—Univ. Hist.

SELIS (Nicolas Joseph), a French poet, was born at Paris in 1737. He became professor of the belles-lettres in the central school of the Pantheon, and a member of the national institute. He died in 1802. His works are, a Translation of Persius, with notes, 8vo.; Relation of the Disorder, Confession, and Death, of M. de Voltaire; Epistles in Verse; Letter to de la Harpe on the College of France; Discourse on Central Schools, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SELKIRK (Alexander), an adventurer, was born at Largo in Scotland about 1680. He was a good navigator, and made several voyages to the South Sea, in one of which, having a quarrel with his commander, he was put ashore on the island of Juan Fernandez, with a few necessaries, a fowling-piece, gunpowder, and shot. Here he lived alone near three years, and was then taken off by captain Woods Rogers. During the time of his remaining on the island he had nearly forgotten his native language. De Foe is supposed to have worked up his narrative into the romance of Robinson Crusoe.—Dampier's Voyages. Rogers's ditto.

SELLER (Abbeduego), a divine of the church of England, was born at Plymouth in 1647, and was educated at Lincoln college, Oxford, which he left without taking a degree. After entering into orders he became rector of Combeintine-head, in his native county, and afterwards had a living in London, but was deprived at the revolution for not taking the oaths. He died about 1720. His works are, 1. Remarks relating to the State of the Church in the three first Centuries, 8vo.; 2. The Devout Communicant, frequently reprinted under the title of the Week's Preparation for the Sacrament, 12mo.; 3. Tracts against Popery.—Wood.

SELLIUS (Godfrey), a native of Dantzic, who was a member of the royal society of London. He resided chiefly in France, and died at Charenton in 1757. His works are principally translations, as a Voyage to Hudson's Bay; the Natural History of Ireland; History of the United Provinces; History of the Antient Revolutions of the Globe, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SEMIRAMIS, queen of Assyria, was the wife of Ninus, on whose death she assumed the government during the minority of her son Ninias. She built the famous city of Babylon, which she adorned with works of great magnificence. She also distinguished herself as a warrior, and marched with a large army towards India, but was defeated, and compelled to retreat with a prodigious loss. B.C. 2108 she relinquished the throne to her son, and died soon after.—Bayle.

SENNAC (John), a French physician, who died at Paris in 1770. He was first physician to the king, and superintendant-general of the mineral waters of the kingdom. His principal works are, a Translation of Heister's Anatomy, with Physical Essays on the Use of the Parts of the Human Body; 3 vols. 12mo.; Treatise on the Plague, 4to.; On the Structure of the Heart, 2 vols. quarto; de recondita Febrium natura et curatione, 8vo.; Reflections on Drowned Persons, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SENAULT (John Francis), a Roman Catholic divine, was born at Antwerp in 1599, and died at Paris in 1672. He was a member of the congregation of the oratory, and a celebrated preacher. He wrote a Treatise on the Use of the Passions, which has been translated into English; a Paraphrase on Job, 8vo.; the Christian Man, and the Criminal Man, 4to.; the Duties of a Sovereign, 12mo.; Lives of Religious Persons, and Sermons.—Moreri.

SENECA (Lucius Annæus), a celebrated orator, was born at Corduba in Spain. He settled at Rome, where he was greatly distinguished as a pleader. His declamations are printed with the works of his son.—Quintilian.

SENECA (Lucius Annæus), a philosopher, son of the preceding, was born at Corduba, A.D. 8. He received a liberal education at Rome, where he applied himself to elocution, and displayed great abilities as an orator, but being afraid of exciting the jealousy of Caligula, who aspired to the glory of eloquence, he relinquished that profession and obtained the office of quaestor.

But a charge being brought against him of having an amour with Julia Livilla, he was banished to Corsica, where he wrote his Epistles, and Books of Consolation. After an exile of some years he was recalled by Agrippina, wife of the emperor Claudius, and appointed tutor to her son Nero. This office Seneca discharged with great honour, and was bountifully rewarded; but when his pupil came to the throne, Seneca, who knew his disposition, solicited him to accept of the villas and riches which he had received for his attendance on him, and that he might retire to a life of study and solitude. This the emperor refused, but soon found an opportunity of destroying his preceptor. When the conspiracy of Piso was discovered, the name of Seneca was implicated, and orders were sent to him to put an end to himself. The philosopher, without expressing any concern, took poison, which had no effect; he then had his veins opened, but the blood flowed so slowly, that he was removed into a hot bath, and from thence to a stove, where he was suffocated A.D. 65. His wife, Paulina, resolved to die with him, and had her veins opened, but Nero being informed of it, was fearful that this would excite a general indignation against him, and commanded that the blood should be stopped and her life preserved. The moral treatises of Seneca are very excellent, and have induced many to believe that he was secretly a Christian. There are also some tragedies ascribed to him, though some attribute them to the father. The best edition of this writer is that of Gronovius, at Amsterdam, 1672, 3 vols.—Tacitus.

SENECAI, or SENECA' (Antony Bauderon de), a French poet, was born at Macon in 1643. He became valet-de-chambre to Maria Theresa, wife of Louis XIV. and on the queen's death was taken into the service of the duchess of Angoulême. He died at Macon in 1737. His works are, epigrams, novels in verse, satires, and fugitive poems, which possess merit.—Moreri.

SENNACHERIB, king of Syria, succeeded his father Salmanassar, B.C. 714. Hezekiah, king of Judah, having refused to pay him tribute, he entered that country, where he took several fortresses, and laid siege to Jerusalem. But his army being smitten with a pestilence in the night, he was obliged to return to his own country, where he was slain in a temple by his two sons, B.C. 710.—Bible.

SENNERTUS (Daniel), a physician, was born at Breslaw in 1572. He was at first a shoemaker, but having a great turn for medical studies, he applied with such diligence as to become professor of physic at Wirtemberg. He applied chemistry to practice, and by decrying the antients procured enemies among his brethren. He died in 1637. His works were printed at Venice in 1640, in 3 vols. folio, and at Lyons in 1676, in 6 vols. folio. His son, Andrew Sennertus, became professor of the Oriental languages at Wirtemberg, where he died in 1689, aged 84. He wrote some treatises on the Hebrew language.—Moreri.

SEPULVEDA (John de), a Spanish writer, was born at Cordova in 1491. He became chaplain and historiographer to Charles V. and wrote "A Vindication of the Cruelties of the Spaniards in America," against Las Casas; and some other works. He died in 1572.—Nich. Antonio de Scrip. Hisp.

SERAPION (John), an Arabian physician, who flourished about A.D. 890. His works were printed at Venice, in folio, 1497. He is not to be confounded with Serapion of Alexandria, a medical author, who lived in the fifth century.—Friend.

SERENUS SAMMONICUS, a physician in the third century, who was preceptor to Gordian the younger. A Latin poem on medicine by him, is in Maittaire's "Corpus Poetarum." He was put to death by order of Caracalla. There was another Serenus, a mathematician, who wrote a Treatise on Conic Sections, published by Halley.—Moreri. Vossius.

SERGIUS, patriarch of Constantinople in 610, was a native of Syria, and the chief of the sect of Monothelites, the principle of which was, that there are only one will, and one operation in Christ. This heresy was condemned in a council, held at Constantinople A.D. 380. Sergius died in 639.—Dupin. Cave.

SERLIO (Sebastian), a celebrated architect of Bologna, in the 16th century. Francis I. invited him to France, where he improved and ornamented the royal palaces, particularly Fontainebleau. He died in that country about 1552. He wrote a Treatise on Architecture, printed at Venice in 1584, 4to.—Fedibien.

SERRES or SERRANUS (John de), a French protestant divine, who escaped with difficulty from the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and became minister at Nismes in 1563. He was in the confidence of Henry IV. who employed him in several important affairs. He wrote a treatise, entitled De Fide Catholica, the object of which was to reconcile Catholics and Protestants, the consequence of which was that the author was disliked by both. He died in 1598. His other works are, an Edition of Plato in Greek and Latin, 3 vols. folio; Treatise on the Immortality of the Soul, 8vo.; Inventory of the History of France, 2 vols. folio; De Statu Religionis et Reip. in Francia; Memoirs of the Third Civil War of France, 3 vols. 8vo.; History of five Kings of France, &c.—Moreri.

SERRES (Oliver de), a French agriculturist, was born in 1539, at Villeneuve-de-Berg, near Viviers. Henry IV. who delighted in his conversation, employed him in the improvement of his plantations. He died in 1619. He was the first who introduced the culture of the white mulberry tree into France, on which he wrote a treatise, republished in 1785. His Theatre of Agriculture, printed in 4to. is an esteemed book.—Moreri. Haller's Bibl. Botan.

SERTORIUS (Quintus), a Roman general, was born at Nursia. He made his first campaign under Marius, against the Cimbri, but lost his eye in the first battle. He afterwards accompanied Marius and Cinna when they entered Rome, and slew their enemies. On being proscribed by Sylla, he fled to Spain, where he put himself at the head of the other exiles, and was regarded as a prince in that country, which he governed with great wisdom and moderation. He repulsed several armies that were sent against him, but was at last defeated by Pompey and Metellus. He was assassinated by one of his officers, B. C. 73.—Livy.

SERVANDONI (John Nicolas), an architect and painter, was born at Florence in 1695. He resided the greatest part of his life at Paris, where he had the management of the scenery belonging to the theatre. In 1749 he came to London to design the magnificent edifice on Tower-hill, erected for the display of fireworks to celebrate the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. His "Descent of Æneas into Hell" is his best performance as a painter, and the portal of St. Sulpice at Paris is his master-piece in architecture. He died in 1766.—New. Dict. Hist.

SERVETUS (Michael), a physician, was born in 1509 at Villaneuva, where his father was a notary. He was brought up to the profession of an advocate at Toulouse, but afterwards studied physic at Paris, where he took his doctor's degree. Having embraced the Arian doctrine respecting the person of Christ he held a correspondence with Calvin on the subject, and many letters passed between them which only irritated them against each other. Servetus, who was settled at Vienne, in Dauphiny, published a book in favour of his notions entitled, Christianismi reformatio, but he cautiously avoided putting his name to it. The author, however, was discovered by Calvin, who gave information of it to the magistrates of Vienne, by whom Servetus was banished, and his effigy and book burnt at the gallows. He then formed the design of going to Naples to practice as a physician, and imprudently passing through Geneva, though in disguise, he was discovered again by Calvin, by whose means he was apprehended, and having refused to recant his opinions was burnt alive in 1553. He wrote several books on the trinity, a translation of Ptolemy's Geography, and some medical treatises. In one of them he says, "that the mass of blood passes through the lungs by means of the pulmonary veins and arteries," from which general assertion some writers have ascribed to him the discovery of the circulation of the blood.—Mosheim Moreri.

SERVIUS TULLIUS, king of the Romans, was the son of a female slave in a good family. He married the daughter of Tarquin the elder, whom he succeeded B. C. 577. He distinguished himself as a warrior and legislator, introduced the distinction of ranks among the citizens, and ascertained the population of Rome, which amounted to 84,000. He was murdered by his son-in-law, Tarquin the superbi, B. C. 534.—Livy.

SESTO (Cesare de), a painter of Milan, was the best of all the disciples of Leonardo de Vinci, and died at the beginning of the sixteenth century. His pictures are distinguished by the taste and spirit of the composition, and the grace of the figures.—De Pilei.

SESOSTRIS, king of Egypt, who lived some ages before the siege of Troy. His father caused all the children who were born on the same day with him to be liberally educated, that they might become his companions, by which means Sesostris obtained a number of faithful warriors and able ministers. He extended his conquests through various countries, and this inscription was found in many places after his death—Sesostris, the king of kings, has conquered this territory by his arms. He greatly enriched his country, and cultivated the sciences. At a very advanced age, and having lost his sight, he put an end to himself.—Univ. Hist.

SESSA, an Indian philosopher or mathematician, and the inventor of the game of chess, which he communicated to his king, Scheram, who was so pleased with it that he ordered him to demand what he pleased for a reward. Sessa asked only for a single grain of wheat to be laid on the first square, two for the second, and so on in progression throughout the sixty-four squares. The king, astonished and offended that he should demand so mean a gift, directed that he should have just what he asked and no more. But before a quarter of the number was gone through it was found that all the granaries in the kingdom would not supply the demand. The king, astonished at Sessa's ingenuity, crowned him with honours. He lived about the eleventh century.—New. Dict. Hist.

SETTLE (Elkanah), an English poet, was born at Dunstable, in Bedfordshire, in 1648, and educated at Trinity college, Oxford, but went to reside in London, without taking a degree. He there wrote some tragedies; as Cambyfes King of Persia, the Empress of Morocco, Fatal Love, &c. He also wrote

Some poems, particularly the Medal Reversed, and Azariah and Hushai, both against Dryden, and with such success, says Dr. Johnson, that he left the palm doubtful, and divided the suffrages of the nation. Settle was likewise the author of several political pamphlets in favour of the whigs. He died in the Charter-house in 1724.—Johnson's Poets. Biog. Dram.

SEVERUS (Lucius Septimius), a Roman emperor, was born in Africa, of a noble family. He passed through various offices of the state, and was distinguished for his ambition, activity, and avarice. After the murder of Pertinax he caused himself to be proclaimed emperor on the borders of Illyricum, and took as his associate Albinus, who commanded the army in Britain. His reception at Rome was gratifying to his vanity, but he was opposed by Pescennius Niger, who had a numerous army in the East. Many battles were fought between them, but at length Niger was destroyed and his head sent to Severus, who behaved cruelly to all the partisans of his unfortunate rival. Elated with this success he pillaged Byzantium, and attempted to put away Albinus by assassination, but being foiled he had recourse to arms. Albinus was defeated and slain in Gaul, and his family and adherents shared his fate. Severus, on his return to Rome, put to death the wealthiest citizens that he might possess himself of their property. Tired of an inactive life he marched into the East, where he made numerous conquests. The revolt of Britain recalled him from Asia; and having reduced the island he built a wall across the northern part to defend the Roman possessions from the invasions of the Caledonians. While in Britain an attempt was made upon his life by his son Caracalla, but it failed; and Severus calling him into his presence presented to him his sword, saying, "If you are ambitious of reigning murder me in secret, but let not the world be witnesses of your guilt." This remonstrance checked Caracalla, who withdrew in silence. Severus, worn out with a complication of disorders, died at York A.D. 211. There were two others of this name who assumed the imperial title, both of whom were put to death; the first by Maximian in 307, and the last in 461.—Crevier.

SEVERUS (Cassius), an orator, who was banished into Crete by Augustus for his satirical language. He was distinguished for his eloquence, but it was more zealous than prudent. His declamations were ordered to be destroyed by the senate.—Quintilian.

SEVERUS (Sulpitius), an ecclesiastical historian, and surnamed the Christian Sallust, who died A.D. 420. The best of his works is his Historia Sacra, which is very elegant, and extends from the creation to A.D. 400. The best edition is that of Padua, 1741, two vols. 4to.—Dupin.

SEVERUS (Lucius Cornelius), a Latin poet in the reign of Augustus. His poems were printed at Amsterdam in 12mo. 1715.—Vossius de Poet. Lat.

SEVERUS, a heretic of the second century, who adopted several of the tenets of Tatian, and maintained that there are two opposite principles, the one good and the other evil, by which man was originally made, and by which he continues to be governed.—Plaquey Diff. des Hérésies.

SEVIGNÉ (Marie de Rabutin, marchioness de), an ingenious French lady, was the daughter of Celsus Benignus de Rabutin, baron de Chantal, and born in 1626. She espoused, at the age of eighteen, the marquis de Sevigné, who fell in a duel in 1651 leaving her with one son and a daughter, to whose education she paid strict attention. The daughter married in 1669 the count de Grignan, commandant in Provence, and it was on a visit to her that the marchioness caught a fever, of which she died in 1696. Her letters are models of the epistolary style, being elegant, familiar, and animated. They have been published often in 8 vols. and in 10 vols. 12mo. In 1756 appeared a work entitled, Sevigniana, or a collection of thoughts, anecdotes, &c. extracted from these letters. Her son Charles, marquis de Sevigné, was one of the admirers of Ninon de l'Enclos, and had a dispute with madame Dacier respecting the sense of a passage in Horace. He died in 1713.—Morari.

SEVIN (Francis), a member of the academy of the belles lettres, and keeper of the manuscripts in the library of the king of France. He undertook, by order of Louis XV. a voyage to Constantinople with the abbé Fourmont in search of manuscripts, of which they procured about 600. Sevin wrote an account of his travels in Letters, which have been published in one vol. 8vo. He also wrote a Dissertation on Mæri, the first king of Egypt, and several other curious Discourses. He died in 1741.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SEWARD (Thomas), an English divine, was born in 1708. He became rector of Eyam, in Derbyshire, and prebendary of Litchfield, where he died in 1790. Mr. Seward was father of Miss Seward, so well known by her poetical pieces. He published an edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's dramatic works, and was the author of a Treatise on the Conformity between Popery and Paganism. Some of his poems are in Dodsley's collection.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SEWARD (William), an ingenious gentleman, was the son of a brewer in London, and born in 1747. He received his education first at the Charter-house and afterwards at the university of Oxford, which he left without taking a degree. Having a good fortune he devoted his life to literary ease, and was admitted fellow of the royal and antiquarian societies. He published 5 volumes of Anecdotes of distinguished persons, extracted from curious old books; to which he afterwards added a supplement under the title of Biographiana, in 2 vols. Mr. Seward died in 1799.—Europ. Mag.

SEWELL (William), the author of the History of Quakers, in one vol. folio, and of a Dictionary, Dutch and English, 1 vol. 4to. He was born at Amsterdam of English parents, and practised as a surgeon in that city. He died in 1720.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SEWELL (George), an English poet and physician, was born at Windsor, and educated first at Eton and next at Peter-house, Cambridge. He wrote the Tragedy of Sir Walter Raleigh, acted at the theatre in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields; a Vindication of the English Stage; the Life of John Philips; and some Poems. He died at Hampstead in 1726.—Biog. Dram.

SEXTUS-EMPYRICUS, a philosopher of the pyrrhonian sect, and a physician of that of the empyrics, or those who guided their practice wholly upon experience. He is said to have been one of the preceptors of Antoninus the philosopher. We have of his three books called Pyrrhonian Institutions; and a large work against the Mathematicians. The best edition of this author is that of Fabricius, Greek and Latin, folio, Leipzig, 1718.—Vossius de Philosoph.

SEXTUS, a stoic philosopher, was a native of Cheronea, and the nephew of Plutarch. He was of the stoic sect, and preceptor to the emperors Lucius Verus, and Marcus Aurelius.—Ibid.

SEYMOUR (Edward), brother of lady Jane Seymour, wife of Henry VIII. and uncle of Edward VI., was created viscount Beauchamp and duke of Somerset. On the accession of his nephew to the throne Seymour became his guardian, and protector of the kingdom. He had a brother, Thomas Seymour, admiral of England, whom the protector brought to the scaffold, on a pretended charge of treason in 1549, but he was himself accused of abusing his high trust by the earl of Warwick and other courtiers, tried and beheaded in 1552.—Rapin. Hume.

SEYMOUR (Anne, Margaret, and Jane), daughters of the duke of Somerset, were distinguished for their poetical talents. They composed one hundred and four Latin distichs on the death of Margaret de Valois, queen of France, which were translated into French, Greek, and Italian, and printed at Paris in 1551. Anne, the eldest of these ladies, married first the earl of Warwick, and afterwards sir Edward Hunton. The other two died single. Jane was maid of honour to queen Elizabeth.—Bayle. Ballard.

SEYMOUR (Arabella), better known by the name of the lady Arabella, was daughter of Charles Stuart, earl of Lennox, youngest brother of Henry Darnley, husband of Mary, queen of Scots. Her mother was daughter of sir William Cavendish of Chatsworth, in Derbyshire. Her affinity to the crown was the cause of her misfortunes. Several projects were formed for placing her on the English throne, so that she was kept under confinement in the reign of queen Elizabeth. At the beginning of that of James she was secretly married to William Seymour, second son to the earl of Hertford; which being discovered they were both sent to the Tower, but after a confinement of a year they effected their escape. Seymour got on board a vessel, but lady Arabella was taken and conveyed back to the Tower, where she died four years afterwards in 1615.—Ballard. Rapin.

SPONDATI (Francis), a senator of Milan, and counsellor of state to the emperor Charles V. After the death of his wife he entered into orders, and was elevated to the cardinalship. He died in 1550, aged 56. A poem of his on the Rape of Helen was printed at Venice in 1559. His son Nicolas became pope by the name of Gregory XIV. There was another cardinal of this name and family, who wrote several works against the liberties of the Gallican church. He died in 1696.—Moreri.

SFORZA (James), surnamed the great, was born at Cotignola, in Romana, in 1369. His father, according to some accounts, was a labourer, and to others a shoemaker. A company of soldiers happening to pass through his village, young Sforza joined them, and after passing through the inferior military ranks became a general. He was a long time in the service of Joan, queen of Naples, who made him constable of the kingdom. Pope John XXIII. appointed him gonfalonier of the holy church and count de Cotignola, to which was added a large pension. His exploits spread his name far and near. He obliged Alphonso, king of Arragon, to raise the siege of Naples, and he retook several important places which had revolted. But being too eager in pursuing the flying enemy he was drowned in the river Aterno, now Pescara, in 1424.—Ibid.

SFORZA (Francis), natural son of the preceding, was brought up to the profession of arms under his father, and was with him at the time of his unfortunate end. He afterwards commanded with great glory against the king of Arragon, and on the death of Joan he attached himself to the duke of Anjou, whom he had made her heir. The pope, the Venetians, and Florentines, elected him their general against the duke of Milan, whose daughter he married. On the duke's death in 1447 the Milanese chose him for their general against the Venetians, but after some actions he turned his arms against themselves, besieged Milan and compelled the inhabitants to elect him their duke. He afterwards made himself master of Genoa, and died in 1466.—Ibid.

SFORZA (Catherine), an heroine of the fame family, was the natural daughter of Galeazzo Sforza, duke of Milan, who was assassinated in 1476. She married Jerom Riario, lord of Forlì and of Imola, which was her own dowry. She was left a widow at the age of twenty-two, with several children. In 1500 Forlì was besieged by the duke of Valentinois, son of pope Alexander VI., but she defended the fortress with the greatest bravery, though the besiegers threatened to put to death her children, who were in their hands. At length the place was taken, and Catharine sent prisoner to Rome, but she soon afterwards recovered her liberty, and was married to John de Medicis, to whose family she rendered eminent services.—Ibid.

SFORZA (Isabella), an ingenious lady of the same family in the 16th century. Her Letters, which are very ingenious, were printed at Venice in 1549 by Hortensio Lando.—Bayle. Moreri.

SHADWELL (Thomas), a dramatic poet, was born in 1640, and bred at Cambridge. When Dryden was removed from the offices of laureat and historiographer royal, Shadwell was appointed his successor, which exposed him in consequence to the severity of that poet's satire, who ridiculed him under the appellation of Mussethroe. Shadwell, however, was a man of genius, and many of his dramatic pieces possess great merit. He died in London in 1693, and his funeral sermon was preached by Dr. Nicholas Brady. His principal pieces are, Epsom Wells, Timon the Misanthrope, the Virtuoso, the Gentleman of Alliance, and the Lancashire Witches, comedies. Charles Shadwell, supposed to have been the son or nephew of the preceding, wrote some plays, the best of which is entitled, the Fair Quaker of Deal. He died in 1726.—Biog. Dram.

SHAKESPEARE (William), father of the English drama, was born of a good family at Stratford-upon-Avon in 1564. His father, who was a considerable dealer in wool, had so large a family that he could give him but a scanty education. He was for some time at the grammar school at Stratford, where he learnt the rudiments of the Latin language, but was prevented from making any further progress by being taken home to follow his father's business. While he was yet very young he married the daughter of one Hathaway, a substantial farmer in the neighbourhood. In this kind of settlement he continued till by an act of folly and dissipation, he was obliged to leave the country and his family. He had, by a misfortune common to young fellows, fallen into bad company, and amongst them some who were in the practice of deer-stealing. By them he was prevailed upon, more than once, to engage with them in robbing the park of sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, near Stratford. For this he was prosecuted by that gentleman, and out of revenge made a ballad upon sir Thomas, which is said to have been so bitter that the prosecution was redoubled, and he was obliged to shelter himself in London. Here he formed an acquaintance with the players, and was enrolled among them as his name appears in the list of performers prefixed to several old plays, though what sort of characters he performed does not appear. Mr. Rowe observes that he never could meet with any further account of him as an actor than that his highest part was the Ghost in his own Hamlet. We are equally ignorant which was the first play he wrote, though the dates of many of his pieces are easily fixed by particular passages. Queen Elizabeth had several of his plays acted before her, and without doubt gave him many marks of her favour. She was so pleased with the character of Falstaff in the two parts of Henry IV. that she commanded him to shew him in love, on which occasion Shakespeare wrote his rich and admirable comedy of the "Merry Wives of Windsor." The earl of Southampton was his particular friend, and hearing that he had an inclination to make a purchase but wanted the means, he generously sent him one thousand pounds. He was also very intimate with Ben Jonson, who gives him a high character in his Discoveries. After conducting the theatre many years with great reputation Shakespeare retired to his native place, where his wit and good nature introduced him to the acquaintance of the gentlemen in the neighbourhood. Amongst others was one Mr. Combe, an old gentleman noted for his wealth and usury. In a conversation one day Mr. Combe told Shakespeare that he supposed if he outlived him he would write his epitaph, and since he could not tell what might be said of him he desired it might be done immediately, on which our poet produced these lines:

Ten in the hundred lies here ingrav'd,
'Tis a hundred to ten his soul is not fav'd;
If any man ask, who lies in this tomb?
Oh! oh! quoth the devil, 'tis my John-a-Combe.

But the sharpness of the satire so stung the man that he never forgave it.

Shakespeare died in 1616, and was buried in the church of Stratford, where a monument is placed to his memory. On the grave-stone underneath is the following inscription:

Good friend, for Jesus' sake forbear
To dig the dust inclosed here.
Blest be the man that spares these stones,
And curst be he that moves my bones.

He had three daughters: two lived to be married, Judith to Mr. Thomas Quincy, and Susanna to Dr. Hall, a physician.

The best editions of Shakespeare are Johnson and Stevens's united in 15 vols. 8vo., and Reed's in 10 vols.—Life by Rowe.

SHARP (James), a Scotch prelate, who soon after the restoration was advanced to the archbishopric of St. Andrews, and had the management of ecclesiastical affairs in Scotland; but his conduct gave such offence to the bigoted covenanters and presbyterians that he was dragged from his coach and murdered by nine assassins in 1679, after he had sat in that see seventeen years.—Gen. Hist. Diet.

SHARP (Dr. John), an English prelate, was born at Bradford, in Yorkshire, in 1644, and admitted of Christ's college, Cambridge, in 1660. On entering into orders he became chaplain to Sir Heneage Finch, attorney-general, by whose recommendation he obtained the archdeaconry of Berks, and in 1675 was installed prebendary of Norwich. The same year he obtained the rectory of St. Giles's in the Fields, and in 1681 the deanry of Norwich. In 1686 he was silenced for preaching against popery, and upon the bishop of London's refusal to suspend him he was himself suspended. Soon afterwards Dr. Sharp was restored, and in 1689 was advanced to the deanry of Canterbury. On the death of Dr. Lamplugh in 1691 he was made archbishop of York, and in 1702 preached the sermon at the coronation of queen Anne. He died at Bath in 1713. The archbishop's sermons, in 7 vols. 8vo., are very excellent.—Le Neve's Lives of the Bishops.

SHARP (Thomas), younger son of the above, was born in Yorkshire, and admitted of Trinity college, Cambridge, about 1708, aged 15. He obtained a fellowship in 1729, and took his doctor's degree the same year. Archbishop Dawes appointed him his chaplain, and in 1720 he was collated to the rectory of Rothbury, in Northumberland. He was afterwards preferred to a prebend in Durham cathedral, and the archdeaconry of Northumberland. He died in 1758. Dr. Sharp wrote two Dissertations concerning the Etymology of the Hebrew Words Elohim and Berith, 8vo.; Discourses touching the Antiquity of the Hebrew Tongue and Character, 8vo. His son, Granville Sharp, esq. is well known by several excellent performances, particularly by his Remarks on the Definitive Article in the Greek Testament, 12mo.—Hutchinson's History of Durham.

SHARPE (Gregory), a learned divine, but of a different family from the above, was born in Yorkshire in 1713. He received his education first at Westminster school and afterwards at Aberdeen under the learned Blackwell. On entering into orders he became minister of St. Margaret's chapel, Westminster, was afterwards appointed chaplain in ordinary to the king, and master of the Temple. He was also a fellow of the royal and antiquarian societies, and died in 1771. Dr. Sharpe united to great learning a taste for the fine arts, and etched several plates in the edition of Dr. Hyde's Syntagma. His own works are, 1. Review of the Controversy about the Meaning of Demoniacs in the New Testament, 8vo.. 2. Defence of Dr. S. Clarke against Leibnitz, 8vo.; 3. Two Dissertations upon the Origin of Languages, and on the Power of Letters, &c. with a Hebrew Lexicon, 8vo.; 4. Dissertation on the Origin and Structure of the Latin Tongue, 8vo.; 5. Two Arguments in Defence of Christianity; 6. Translation of Holberg's Introduction to Universal History, 8vo.; 7. Sermons, 8vo.—Pref. to his Sermon.

SHARROCK (Robert), an English divine, was born at Adstock, in Buckinghamshire, educated first at Wykeham's school in Hampshire, and admitted fellow of New college, Oxford, where he took his doctor's degree in civil law 1661. He obtained the rectory of Horewood, in Buckinghamshire, and of Bishop's Waltham, in Hampshire, to which was added the archdeaconry of Winchester. He died in 1684. Dr. Sharrock wrote, 1. the History of the Propagating and Improvement of Vegetables, 8vo.; 2. Hypothesis de Officiis secundum humanæ rationis dictata, seu natura jus, unde casus omnes Conscientiæ, &c. 8vo. This book was written against Hobbes. 3. Judicia (seu Legum censuræ) de variis incontinentiæ speciebus, &c. 8vo.; 4. De Finibus virtutis Christianæ, or the Ends of the Christian Religion justified in several Discourses, 4to.—Wood.

SHAW (John), a divine of the church of England, was born in the county of Durham and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Brasenose, and in 1645 obtained the rectory of Whalton, in Northumberland. After the restoration he had the chapelry of St. John, in Newcastle, and was a member of the convocation. He died in 1689. He wrote, No Reformation of the established Religion, 8vo., and some tracts against popery.—Ibid.

SHAW (Samuel), a non-conformist minister, was born at Repton, in Derbyshire, in 1635. He took his degrees in arts at St. John's college, Cambridge, and became master of the grammar school at Tamworth, in Warwickshire, from whence he removed to Moseley, and lastly to Long-Whetton, in Leicestershire, but was ejected for non-conformity in 1662. In 1666 he became master of the school at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, which he raised to considerable reputation. He died in 1696. His works are, the Voice of one Crying in the Wilderness, 8vo.; Immanuel, 8vo.; a Latin Grammar; the true Christian's Test, or Meditations; Words made Visible, or Grammar and Rhetoric, a Comedy; the different Humours of Men, a Comedy. These were acted by his scholars.—Galamy.

SHAW (Thomas), an English divine and celebrated traveller, was born at Kendal, in Westmoreland, about 1692, and educated first at the grammar-school of his native town, and next at Queen's college, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degrees in arts, and on taking orders was appointed chaplain to the factory at Algiers, where he resided some years. In his absence he was elected fellow of his college, and on his return to England in 1733 took his doctor's degree. He published his Travels in Barbary and the Levant, in one volume, folio, at Oxford in 1733, a work of universal esteem, and which has been several times printed. Dr. Shaw was appointed principal of Edmund Hall, Oxford, in 1740, and died in 1751.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SHAW (Peter), an English physician of considerable merit, was a member of the college of physicians of London and of the royal society. He published the Practice of Physic, 2 vols. 8vo.; a Course of Chemistry, 4to.; and an edition of Bacon's works, five volumes, 4to. He died in 1763.

SHAW (Cuthbert), an English poet, was the son of a shoemaker, but he possessed considerable genius, and his poems rise above mediocrity. He wrote for the magazines, and died in great poverty in 1771.—Eur. Mag.

SHAW (Stebbing), a divine and antiquary, was born at Stowe, in Staffordshire, in 1762, and educated first at Repton school and afterwards at Queen's college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a fellowship. In 1787 he made a tour in the Highlands of Scotland, of which he published an account, but anonymously. The following year he made another tour in the West of England, of which he also printed an account in one volume, octavo, but these performances are trifling. In 1789 he commenced, in conjunction with a friend, a periodical publication called, The Topographer, chiefly consisting of extracts made from curious books and manuscripts in the British museum. The work continued two years and was discontinued. He next undertook the History of Staffordshire, of which one volume in folio was published in 1798, and in 1801 the first part of the second volume. In 1799 he succeeded his father in the rectory of Hartthorn, in Derbyshire. He died in 1803.—Gen. Mag.

SHEBBEARE (John), an English physician, and political writer, was born at Bideford, in Devonshire, in 1709, and educated under Mr. Mudge, master of the grammar-school in that town, after which he served his time to an apothecary. He carried on business for some time at Bristol, but about 1740 removed to London. Being attached to the family of the Stuarts, he went to Paris, where he took his doctor's degree, and was admitted of the academy of sciences. Not long after his return to London he published a satirical novel, called, the Marriage Act; and another, called, Lydia, or Filial Piety. In 1759 he was prosecuted and pilloried for writing the Seventh Letter to the People of England; but in the succeeding reign he obtained a pardon. He wrote some pamphlets on the side of government in the American war, and died in 1788. His other works are, Letters on the English Nation, under the name of Angeloni, 2 vols.; History of the Sumatrans, 2 vols.; Chrysal, or the Adventures of a Guinea, 4 vols.; and a Practice of Physic, two vols. octavo.—Eur. Mag. Hist. Edin.

SHEFFIELD (John), duke of Buckingham, was born in 1645. He served in the fleet during the Dutch war, and afterwards made a campaign in France with Turenne. Charles II. with whom he was a favourite, gave him the command of the fleet which was sent against Tangier. The duke wrote Essays on Poetry and Satire; and several poetical pieces, all of which were published in 2 vols. 4to. 1723. He was a friend to the revolution, and died in 1721.—Gen. Biog. Dict. Biog. Dram.

SHELDON (Gilbert), an eminent prelate, was born at Stanton, in Staffordshire, in 1598, admitted of Trinity college, Oxford, in 1613, and elected fellow of All Souls, in 1622. About this time he entered into orders, and obtained a prebend of Gloucester. In 1635 he was elected warden of his college, and appointed clerk of the closet to the king, whom he attended in the life of Wight, and for his loyalty was deprived of the wardenship, and imprisoned. At the restoration he was made dean of the chapel royal, and bishop of London. On the death of archbishop Juxon he was raised to the primacy, in which situation he conducted himself with great zeal for the church, and expended above 66000*l.* in charitable uses. But the greatest of his works was the building of the theatre at Oxford. He died in 1677, and lies in Crofton church under a fine monument.—Le Neve's Lives of Bps.

SHELLY (George), a writing master, was born about 1666, and died in 1736. His performances in penmanship were, "the Penman's Magazine;" published in 1708, and, "Natural Writing," in 1714. The first was engraved by Nutting, and the other by Bickham. Shelly was also the compiler of a small volume of moral sentences for schools. He was writing-master of Christ's Hospital.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SHENSTONE (William), an ingenious poet, was born in 1714, at Hales-Owen, in Shropshire, and educated first at the school of Solihull, in Warwickshire, and next at Pembroke college, Oxford, on leaving which he retired to his paternal estate at Hales-Owen, which he greatly improved and ornamented. He died in 1763. His works, which consist of songs, elegies, pastorals, a poem in Spenser's manner, entitled, the School Mistress, letters, and miscellaneous essays, were printed in 3 vols. 8vo. by Dodsley, and afterwards Mr. Hull published two volumes of the epistolary correspondence of Shenstone.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SHEPHEVE (John), an English poet, was born in Berkshire, and bred at Corpus Christi college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and became Hebrew professor in the university about 1538. He had a surprising memory, and was one of the most learned men of his time. He died in 1542. His works are, Summa & Synopsis Novi Test. distichis ducentis sexaginta comprehensa, 8vo.; Hippolytus Ovidianæ Phædræ respondens, &c. His nephew, William Shepreve, was a zealous catholic, and went to Rome, where he died in 1598. He wrote some religious pieces.—Wood.

SHERARD (William), or Sherwood, an English botanist, was born in Leicestershire, in 1659, and educated at Merchant-taylors' school, from whence he removed to St. John's college, Oxford, where he became fellow, and took his degree of bachelor of law in 1677. After this he went abroad with some young noblemen, and on his travels formed an intimacy with Boerhaave, Tournefort, and other eminent men. About 1702 he was appointed consul at Smyrna, and during his residence in the East he collected specimens of all the plants of Natolia and Greece, and made numerous observations on subjects of natural history and antiquities. In 1718 he returned to England, and was admitted to his degree of doctor of laws at Oxford. He afterwards went again on the continent, and visited the Alps, where, as he was lying down, examining some plants, he narrowly escaped being shot by a peasant, who mistook him for a wolf. On his return he brought over the celebrated Dillenius, who resided with him at his seat at Eltham, where he formed a botanic garden. Dr. Sherard died in 1728, and by his will gave 3000*l.* to provide a salary for a professor of botany at Oxford, on condition that Dillenius should be the first professor. Dr. Sherard published Herman's Paradisus Batavus, 4to.; and a work entitled, Schola Botanica, under the name of Wharton, 12mo. He also communicated several papers in the Philosophical Transactions. His brother, James Sherard, was originally an apothecary, and afterwards a physician. He was also a good botanist, and died in 1741.—Pulteney's Sketches of Botany.

SHERBURNE (Edward), an ingenious writer, was born in London in 1618, and educated under the learned Thomas Farnaby, after which he went abroad, but returned in 1641, and succeeded on his father's death to the office of clerk of the ordnance. He was imprisoned for some time by the parliament, and on recovering his liberty joined the king, whom he served with great bravery, by which he suffered considerably in his estate. After the battle of Edgehill he went with the king to Oxford, where he was created master of arts. At the restoration he recovered his place, was knighted, and made commissary-general of the artillery. He died in 1702. He translated Seneca's tragedies, the Sphere of Marcus Manilius, and other works, into English, and wrote a volume of poems.—Wood's Fasti.

SHERZBAROF (Prince), a learned Russian nobleman, who published several works in his own language, the principal of which is the "History of Russia from the Earliest Times," which is well arranged, and faithfully written.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SHERIDAN (Thomas), a divine and poet, was born in the county of Cavan, in Ireland, in 1684, and educated at Trinity college, Dublin, where he proceeded to his doctor's degree, and entered into orders. He kept a respectable school in Dublin several years, and afterwards was master of that at Cavan, which he disposed of for money, as he also did a living procured for him by dean Swift, with whom he was in habits of close intimacy. He was an improvident man, and died poor in 1738. Several of his letters and fugitive pieces are in Swift's works.—Ibid.

SHERIDAN (Thomas), son of the above, was born at Quilca, in Ireland, in 1721, and educated at Westminster school, and next at Trinity college, Dublin, where he took one degree in arts. In 1743 he appeared on the stage at Smock-alley, in the character of Richard III. and experienced great encouragement. The year following he visited London, and performed at Covent-garden. On his return to Ireland he became manager of the Dublin theatre, but on account of some attempts which he made to reform the abuses that had long prevailed there, riots ensued, for which the leaders were prosecuted. In the end, however, his theatre was ruined, and Sheridan entered on a new career as an itinerant lecturer on elocution, and with such reputation as to receive the degree of master of arts from the universities of Dublin and Cambridge. In 1760 he engaged at Drury-lane, and soon after obtained a pension from the king. In 1767 he exhibited at the Haymarket an entertainment of reading, singing, and music, which was called an Attic Evening. He also performed at the same theatre and at Covent-garden, but quitted the profession of an actor in 1776. The same year he succeeded Garrick as manager of Drury-lane theatre, which situation he resigned in 1779. He now returned to his literary labours, and to reading occasional lectures. He died at Margate in 1788. His principal works are, 1. a Dictionary of the English Language, one main object of which is to establish a plain and permanent standard of pronunciation, 1 vol. 4to. and 2 vols. 8vo.; 2. Lectures on the Art of Reading, 8vo.; 3. British Education, or the Source of the Disorders of Great Britain, 8vo.; 4. a Dissertation on the Causes of the Difficulties which occur in Learning the English Tongue, 4to.; 5. a Course of Lectures on Elocution, &c. 4to.; 6. Life of Swift, prefixed to his works, 8vo.; 7. Elements of English, 12mo. His wife Frances, whose maiden name was Chamberlaine, was a very ingenious woman, and wrote Sydney Biddulph, a novel; a moral romance entitled, Nourjahad; and the Discovery, a comedy. She died at Blois in 1767.—Europ. Mag. vol. xiv.

SHERLOCK (Richard), a pious divine, was born at Oxtou, in Cheshire, and educated first at Magdalen-hall, Oxford, and afterwards at Trinity college, Dublin, where he took his degree of M. A. and entered into orders. On the breaking out of the rebellion he came to England, became chaplain in the king's army, and frequently preached before the court at Oxford, where he was created bachelor of divinity. After the restoration he was presented to the rectory of Winwick in Lancashire, and received his doctor's degree from Dublin. He died in 1689. His principal works are, the Practical Christian, 8vo.; Confessions, Meditations, and Prayers for the Sacrament; on the Four Last Things, 8vo.; Pieces against the Quakers.—Wood.

SHERLOCK (William), a learned divine, was born in 1641, and educated at Eton, from whence he removed to Peter-house, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and entered into orders, after which he obtained a living in London, and the mastership of the Temple. He displayed great zeal and abilities against popery in the reign of James II. but for some time scrupled taking the oaths to king William. He at last complied, and published an apology for his conduct, which was severely animadverted on by the nonjurors. He was preferred to the deanry of St. Paul's, and had a long controversy with the celebrated Dr. South on the doctrine of the trinity. He died in 1707. He published several sermons, and two excellent practical books on death and the last judgment.—Gen. Hist. Di.

SHERLOCK (Thomas), son of the above, was born in London in 1678. He was educated at Catherine-hall, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow, and afterwards became master. He took his degree of doctor in divinity, and succeeded his father in the mastership of the Temple. In the controversy excited by bishop Hoadley on the constitution of the church, Dr. Sherlock bore a conspicuous part, and attacked the bishop in an able pamphlet in vindication of the corporation and test acts. He also answered Collins in six excellent discourses on the use and intent of prophecy, and wrote with equal strength a defence of the miracle of Christ's resurrection, against Woolston, in a work entitled, the Trial of the Witnesses. He was successively dean of Chichester, bishop of Bangor, Salisbury, and of London. On the death of archbishop Potter he was offered the see of Canterbury, which he declined. He died in 1761. His Sermons, in four volumes 8vo. rank among the first in the English language.—Gen. Biog. Di.

SHERRINGHAM (Robert), a learned divine, was a fellow of Gonvil and Caius college, Cambridge, from whence he was ejected in the civil wars for his loyalty. He then went to Holland, and at the restoration was restored to his fellowship. He died in 1677. His works are, De Anglorum gentis origine disceptatio, 8vo.; a translation of a Hebrew book called Jama, into Latin, with an illustration, 4to.; the King's Supremacy Asserted; and some Sermons, 4to.—Wood.

SHERWIN (John Keyse), an eminent engraver, was originally a wood-cutter in Suffex. Being one day at Mr. Mitford's house the attention with which he observed some of the family who were drawing, attracted the notice of that gentleman, who asked him if he could do any thing in that way? Sherwin answered he could not tell, but he should like to try. On this a portcrayon was put into his hand, and he produced such a drawing as astonished all present, and the society of arts, to whom it was presented, voted him the silver medal. He was then placed under Bartolozzi, and became his favourite pupil. His engravings are in a style of the first excellence. The principal is one of Moses in the bulrushes. He died in 1790.—Europ. Mag.

SHIPLEY (Jonathan), an English prelate, was born in 1714, and bred at Christ church, Oxford, where he wrote some verses on the death of queen Caroline, and in 1738 took his degree of M. A. He soon afterwards entered into orders, and obtained a living. In 1748 he was installed prebendary of Winchester, and in 1745 appointed chaplain to the duke of Cumberland, whom he accompanied abroad. In 1749 he became canon of Christ church, and in 1760 dean of Winchester. In 1769 he was advanced to the see of St. Asaph. He died in 1788. The bishop wrote some poems, and published sermons on public occasions.—Europ. Mag.

SHIRLEY (sir Anthony), an English gentleman, was born at Wiston, in Suffex, in 1565, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of All Souls college. After studying some time in the inns of court, he went into the Low Countries, and served under sir Philip Sidney. In 1596 he made a voyage to America, and afterwards was with the earl of Essex in Ireland, where he was knighted. On going abroad he was received at several courts, particularly that of Spain, where he was made admiral of the fleet, and a grandee. James I. ordered him to return, but he refused, and died in Spain about 1640. He wrote, a Voyage to America, in Hackluyt's Collections; Account of Muley Hamet's Rising in the Kingdom of Morocco, &c. 4to.; History of his Travels into Persia, 4to.; Voyage over the Caspian Sea and through Russia, in Purchas's Pilgrims; History of his Ambassages, fol. His brother, Robert Shirley, settled in Persia, where he was in such high esteem with the emperor that he was sent by him ambassador to Poland, and afterwards to England. He also gave him his niece in marriage, and conferred on him great honour and wealth.—Wood.

SHIRLEY (Thomas), a physician, was descended of the above family, born in Westminster, and bred at Magdalen college, Oxford, but took his doctor's degree in France. He became physician to Charles II. and died in 1678. He wrote a philosophical essay, declaring the probable causes whence stones are produced in the greater world, &c. 8vo. —Ibid.

SHIRLEY (James), a dramatic writer, was born in London in 1594, and educated at Merchant Taylors' school, and next at St. John's college, Oxford; but completed his degrees in arts at Cambridge, and entered into orders. He afterwards turned Roman Catholic, and became a schoolmaster in London. He and his wife both died the same day of a fright, occasioned by the fire of London in 1666. He wrote thirty-nine plays, a volume of poems, and some school-books.—Ibid.

SHORE (Jane), mistress of Edward IV. was the wife of a goldsmith in Lombard-street, but the king being enamoured of her charms, drew her from her husband. On the death of Edward she lived with lord Hastings, who was beheaded by order of Richard, duke of Gloucester, and that miscreant caused Jane Shore to be tried for witchcraft. She was accordingly sentenced to do public penance, and was robbed by the usurper of all her property. She died in the reign of Henry VIII. in the extremity of poverty.

SHOVEL (sir Cloudeley), a brave English admiral, was born in 1650, of mean parentage. He went early to sea, and from being a cabin boy, rose to the first honours of his profession. In 1674 he served in the Mediterranean, under sir John Narborough, and did such service by burning the ships in the harbour of Tripoly, that he received a captain's commission. For his gallant conduct against the French on the coast of Ireland, he was knighted by king William, and made an admiral. He had a considerable share in the victory of La Hogue, and in that off Malaga in 1704. The year following he had the command of the fleet in the Mediterranean, and contributed to the taking of Barcelona. In 1707 he proceeded for England, but in the night of October 22, the admiral's ship, called the Association, and several others, struck upon the rocks of Scilly, and were lost. The body of sir Cloudeley was discovered and conveyed to Portsmouth, from whence it was removed to London, and buried in Westminster abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory.—Campbell's Admirals.

SUOWER (John), a nonconformist divine, was born in London in 1660. In 1687 he became pastor of a congregation in Jewin-street, and died at Hoxton in 1718. He wrote Sacramental Sermons, and Reflections on Time and Eternity, two books of great usefulness.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

SHUCKFORD (Samuel), a learned English divine, was rector of Shelton, in Norfolk, canon of Canterbury, and chaplain to the king. He wrote a History of the World, Sacred and Profane, introductory to Prideaux's Connections, and died in 1754.—Mortimer.

SHUTE (Josias), a pious divine, who was archdeacon of Colchester; and rector of St. Mary Woolnoth, London, where he was greatly followed as an eloquent preacher. He suffered much in the civil wars, and died in 1643. He wrote a folio volume of Sermons on the 16th Chapter of Genesis.—Granger.

SHUTER (Edward), an English comedian, was the son of a chairman in London, and employed for some time as a tapster in a public-house, and marker to a billiard table. Having a great turn for the stage, and considerable humour, he was engaged at Covent-garden, where, by his eminence in low comedy, he became a great favourite with the public. He died in 1776.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

SIBBALD (sir Robert), a learned physician, was born in Fifeshire in 1643, and educated at the university of St. Andrew. He projected a royal college of physicians at Edinburgh, and formed the botanical garden. He was the first medical professor instituted in that university, and was knighted by Charles II. He died in 1720. His works are, Scotia Illustrata, folio; Miscellanea quædam eruditæ Antiquitatis, 1710; History of the Sheriffdom of Fife and Kinross; Phalainologia nova, 4to.; Papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Pulteney's Sketches.

SIBRECHTS (John), a painter, was born at Antwerp in 1625, and died in 1703. He lived in London some years, and was employed by the nobility. He excelled in painting landscapes with cattle.—Pilkington.

SIBTHORPE (Robert), a divine, was born in Lincolnshire, and bred at Oxford. On entering into orders he obtained the rectory of Water Stratford, in Buckinghamshire, and afterwards the vicarage of Brackley, in Northamptonshire. He distinguished himself by preaching up the king's prerogative in the beginning of the reign of Charles I. for which he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Peterborough, and the rectory of Burton Latimers, in Northamptonshire, which he lost in the rebellion. His Sermons were censured by the house of commons. He died in 1662.—Wood.

SIBTHORPE (John), a learned botanist and physician, was born in Lincolnshire. His father, Dr. Humphrey Sibthorpe, was professor of botany at Oxford, in which simation he was succeeded by his son, who made two voyages into Greece and the neighbouring countries to collect rare plants. His collections are about to be published in the most magnificent form, under the title of Flora Græca. Dr. Sibthorpe printed a Flora Oxoniensis, and died in 1796.—Gent. Mag.

SICINUS (Dentatus), a Roman tribune, who carried arms with great reputation forty years, gained one hundred and twenty-one battles, and was rewarded with fourteen civic and three mural crowns. He had received forty-five wounds, but none on the back, a proof that he had never turned from an enemy. He had the name of the Roman Achilles, and was murdered by Appius Claudius, B.C. 405.—Livy.

SICOLANTE (Girolamo), an Italian painter of historical subjects and landscapes; born at Sermoneta in 1504, and died in 1550.—Pilkington.

SIDNEY (Henry), an eminent statesman, was born of a noble family in Surry, and became a student of New college, Oxford, in 1543. He afterwards went to court, where he was a great favourite with Edward VI. who conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and sent him ambassador to France. In the succeeding reign he was appointed collector of the revenues in Ireland, and in that of Elizabeth, lord-president of the marches of Wales, and knight of the garter. In 1568 he was constituted lord deputy of Ireland. He died at Worcester in 1586, and was buried at Penshurst in Kent, the manor of which he had obtained some years before. He caused the Irish Statutes to be printed; and some of his letters to his son have been published.—Wood.

SIDNEY (sir Philip), son of the above, was born at Penshurst in 1554. When young he was sent to Christ Church college, Oxford, and at the age of seventeen, went on his travels. In 1576 queen Elizabeth appointed him ambassador to the emperor Rodolphus, and at that court he contracted an intimacy with the famous don John of Austria. On account of his declaring his sentiments freely against the queen's marriage with the duke of Anjou in 1580, he retired from court, and in his retreat wrote his celebrated romance, called Arcadia. In 1582 he received the honour of knighthood, and in 1585 he was appointed governor of Flushing, and general of the horse sent to the assistance of the United Provinces. About this time, his reputation for wisdom and valour stood so high, that he was thought a fit person to be a candidate for the crown of Poland, but the queen would not consent that England should lose so great a jewel. In September 1586 sir Philip displayed uncommon bravery at the battle of Zutphen, but received a mortal wound in the thigh as he was mounting his third horse, having had two slain under him before. While he was in the arms of his attendants, who had procured for him a bottle of wine to allay his thirst, a wounded soldier was carried past him and cast a withful eye on the bottle, on which sir Philip ordered it to be taken to him, saying, "Poor fellow, thy necessity is greater than mine!" This honour of the English nation died of his wound twenty-five days afterwards. His body was brought home and buried in St. Paul's cathedral. His Arcadia has been several times printed in 4to. and folio. He also wrote an Apology for Poetry, 4to.; Sonnets; Ourania, a poem; and several other pieces.—Wood Biog. Brit.

SIDNEY (Algernon), a political writer, was the son of Robert, earl of Leicester, and born about 1617. He distinguished himself at the beginning of the civil wars by his opposition to Charles I. became a colonel in the parliament army, and avowed himself a republican. He was nominated one of the king's judges, but did not sit in the high court of justice on that occasion. When Cromwell assumed the sovereignty under the title of protector, Sidney retired to private life. At the restoration he went abroad, but returned in 1667, on obtaining a pardon, the condition of which was that he should conduct himself as a peaceable subject. In 1683 he was apprehended, on a charge of being concerned in the Rye house plot, tried before judge Jefferies, and sentenced to death, which was executed on Tower Hill the same year. The sentence against him was declared illegal in the first parliament of William and Mary. Sidney wrote Discourses on Government, in which he places the origin and right of power in the people, and lays down very bold and paradoxical maxims deducible from that position. They were printed in 1689, and again by Hollis.—Great Hist. Dict. State Trials.

SIDONIUS APOLLINARIS, a primitive prelate, was born of an illustrious Roman family at Lyons in 430. After discharging several high civil offices, he was chosen bishop of Auvergne, against his own desire, in 472, which situation he discharged so well as to be accounted the oracle of France. He died in 488. His epistles, poems, and other works, were printed by father Sirimond, with notes, in 1652, 4to.—Dupin. Moreri.

SIGEBERT, king of the East Angles, is celebrated by Bede as a man of learning and piety. He founded several churches, monasteries, and schools. After abdicating the throne, he became a monk at Burgh-castle, in Suffolk, where he was assassinated in 642.—Bede Eccl. Hist.

SIGISMUND, emperor of Germany, was the son of Charles IV. and born in 1368. He was elected king of Hungary in 1395, and emperor in 1410. After establishing Several constitutional regulations for restoring the peace of the empire, he set himself about effecting the tranquillity of the church, for which purpose he prevailed with pope John XXIII. to convene the council of Constance in 1414, but he tarnished his character by granting a safe conduct to John Huss to attend that council, and afterwards suffering him to be executed in violation of it. The Hussites, irritated at this want of faith, arose in arms under the famous Zisca, and gained many advantages over the German forces, and were not reduced till sixteen years afterwards. Sigismund died in 1437.—Univ. Hist.

SIGISMUND I. king of Poland, surnamed the Great, was the son of Casimir IV. and elected to the throne in 1507. He employed the first years of his reign in reforming public abuses, and restored the state to its antient glory. He drove the Muscovites out of Lithuania, recovered several places from the Teutonic knights, and expelled the Wallachians who had invaded his estates. He died in 1548, and was succeeded by his son, Sigismund II. surnamed the August, because he was born in that month. He caused the honours of queen to be paid to his mistress, and thereby gave great dissatisfaction to his subjects. The Socinians having made great progress in his dominions, he issued a decree against them. He died in 1572. Sigismund III. was the son of John III. king of Sweden, and ascended the throne of Poland in 1587, to the exclusion of Maximilian of Austria, who had been elected by the nobility. On the death of his father he succeeded to the Swedish crown in 1594, but being a zealous catholic, the Swedes acknowledged his uncle, Charles, duke of Sudermania, who was crowned in 1604. A long war ensued, in which Sigismund was unsuccessful. His reign was also disturbed by the Tartars and the Muscovites. He died in 1632.—Ibid.

SIGNORELLI (Luca), a painter, was a native of Cortona, born in 1439, and died in 1521. He excelled in designing human figures, and displayed great fire and genius in his compositions. Michael Angelo did not disdain to copy after him.—De Pict.

SIGNORIUS (Charles), an Italian writer, was born at Modena, and designed for the medical profession, which he renounced for literature, and became a professor of languages at Padua. He died in 1584, aged 60. His works are, 1. De Republica Hebræorum, a small treatise, but of great merit; 2. De Republica Atheniensium; 3. Historia de Occidentis Imperio; 4. De Regno Italæ; 5. An Ecclesiastical History, printed at Milan in 1734, in 2 vols. 4to.—Tirabeschi.

SILHOUETTE (Stephen de), a French writer, was born at Limoges in 1709. After being master of requests to the duke of Orleans, he became comptroller general and minister of state in 1759, but continued in office only nine months, owing to the failure of his schemes of reform and economy, which were turned into ridicule. He died in 1767. His works are, General Idea of the Chinese Government, 4to.; Political Reflections, translated from the Spanish of Gracian, 4to.; a Translation of Pope's Essay on Man, 12mo; Warburton's Alliance of Church and State, 2 vols. &c.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

SILIUS ITALICUS (Caius), a Latin poet, was a native of Rome, and made consul by Domitian. The tomb of Virgil was on his estate, and he respected it as a temple. Silius wrote a poem upon the second Punic war, which was discovered by Poggio in the monastery of St. Gal. The best edition is that of Drakenborch at Utrecht, 1717, 4to. Silius died A. D. 74, aged 75.—Vossius de Poet. Lat.

SILVA (John Baptist), a physician, was born at Bourdeaux in 1684, of Jewish parents, but he renounced his religion, and after taking his degree at Montpellier, went and settled at Paris, where he gained a great reputation by his cures. He died in 1744. He wrote a Treatise on the Use of Bleeding, 2 vols.; and Dissertations and Consultations of M. Chirac and Silva, 3 vols.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

SILVESTER I. pope, was elected to that dignity in 314. The arian heresy commenced in his pontificate, and he distinguished himself against the donatists. He died in 335. SILVESTER II. was born in Auvergne of an obscure family, and bred up in a monastery, but his superior talents exciting the envy and hatred of his companions, he withdrew from the society, and went to Spain. The duke of Barcelona took him to Italy, where he was noticed by the emperor Otho, who gave him an abbey, which he afterwards quitted, and went to Germany, and became preceptor to Otho III. He was afterwards tutor to the son of Hugh Capet, by whom he was made archbishop of Rheims. By the interest of Otho he gained the papacy in 999, and died in 1003. He was a man of considerable learning, particularly in the mathematics.—Brvver. Platina.

SILVESTER (Israel), an engraver, was born at Nancy in 1621, and died at Paris in 1691. His landscapes are very fine. Louis XIV. employed him in his palace, and Silvester had the honour of instructing the dauphin in drawing.—Moreri.

SILVESTER (Louis), a painter, was a native of Paris, and the pupil of Le Brun and Boullogne. His principal pictures are at Dresden, to which place he had been invited by the king of Poland, who conferred on him the rank of nobility, and appointed him director of the royal academy of painting. After residing there twenty-four years he returned to France, and died in 1760, aged 85.—D'Argenville.

SIMEON STYLITES, the founder of a sect, was a native of Cilicia, and a shepherd till the age of 19, when he entered into a monastery, after which he practised a singular kind of austerity, placing himself upon a stone pillar, whence he acquired the name of Stylites, and his example was followed by many other devotees, who seated themselves upon pillars of different heights on a mountain in Syria, where they pretended to see visions. Simeon died about 461.—Morri.

SIMEON METAPHRASTES, an ecclesiastical historian, was born at Constantinople in the tenth century. He was secretary of state under Constantine Porphyrogenitus, who engaged him to write the Lives of the Saints, which he performed. This work, which is a kind of religious romance, has been translated into Latin.—Dupin. Moreri.

SIMLER (Josias), a protestant divine of Zurich, in Switzerland, where he died in 1576, aged 45. He published an abridgement of Gesner's Bibliotheca, folio; De Helvetiorum Republica, 12mo.; Vallesiae Descriptio; and other works. John Simler, an able portrait-painter, was a native of Zurich, and died at Stein upon the Rhine, in 1748.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

SIMON-MACCHABEUS, prince, and high-priest of the Jews, B. C. 143. He displayed great valour under the government of his brothers Judas and Jonathan, and defeated the enemy in many battles, for which he was placed at the head of the nation by the public voice. He repaired the fortifications of Jerusalem, put the other cities of Judaea in a state of defence, and restored the independence of his country. He was assassinated with his two sons at a feast, by Ptolemy, his son-in-law, B. C. 135.—Joseph.

SIMON, called the brother of our Lord, was the son of Cleophas, and elected bishop of Jerusalem, after the death of St. James, A. D. 62. In the reign of Trajan he was put to death by being crucified, in 107.—Cree. E. scribus.

SIMON (St.), an apostle of Jesus Christ, was called Zelotes. He preached the Gospel in Egypt, Libya, and Mauritania, and suffered martyrdom in Persia.—Cree. E. scribus.

SIMON MAGUS, or the Magician, an heresiarch, who is supposed to have been the first of the Gnostics. He was a native of Samaria, and perceiving the miracles wrought by St. Philip, he was baptized; but on offering money to the apostles, that he might receive the Holy Ghost, or the gift of tongues, and of working miracles, he was rejected or excommunicated by St. Peter. It is from this circumstance that the term Simoniac is applied to such as purchase spiritual things. He afterwards fell into the grossest errors, and maintained that God has left the world to be governed by certain beings called Æons. The story of his acquiring a great reputation at Rome by his pretended miracles, and falling from a great height in the air, in consequence of the prayer of St. Peter, is a mere fable.—Cree. Dupin.

SIMON (of Durham), a monk in the reign of Edward III. A chronicle by him is in the library at Durham, and was published at Oxford by Hearne. He is supposed to have died about 1357.—Nicholson's Hist. Loh.

SIMON (Richard), a learned French divine, was born at Dieppe in 1634. He entered into the congregation of the oratory, which he quitted for some time, but returned in 1662, and left it again in 1678. He died in 1712. Father Simon had vast learning, and a great judgment, but he entertained very free opinions, and had many antagonists. His principal works are, 1. the Ceremonies and Customs of the Jews, 12mo.; 2. Critical History of the Old Testament, 4to.; 3. Critical History of the Text of the New Testament, 4to.; 4. Critical History of the Versions of the New Testament, and of the principal Commentaries thereon, 4to.; 5. on the Inspiration of the Sacred Books, 4to.; 6. New Observations on the Text and Versions of the New Testament, 4to.; 7. Critical Letters, 4 vols. 12mo.; 8. a French Translation of the New Testament, with literal and critical notes, 2 vols. 8vo.; 9. History of the Origin and Progress of Ecclesiastical Revenues, 2 vols. 12mo.; 10. Bibliotheque Critique, 4 vols. This was suppressed by the council.—Niceron.

SIMON (Claude-Francis), a printer of Paris, who died there in 1767. He wrote a little volume on mythology, the first editions of which were very indecent. He was also the author of Memoirs of Du Guay Trouin, 4to; Memoirs of Count de Horaville, a romance, 2 vols. 12mo.; and two comedies.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

SIMON (Thomas), an English engraver of medals, was instructed by Briot, a Frenchman, who was in the service of Charles I. Most of Simon's works were executed during Cromwell's protectorate, whose great seal and that of the commonwealth were exquisitely cut by him. His brother, Abraham Simon, was a celebrated modeller in wax, and assisted him in most of his capital works. He was educated for the church, but declined that profession to pursue the bent of his genius. He was some time in the service of Christina, queen of Sweden, and was afterwards employed by Charles II. He died soon after the revolution.—Fertus. Giangr.

SIMONNEAU (Charles), a French engraver, was born at Orleans about 1639. He was the disciple of Noel Coypel, and died at Paris in 1728. He completed the Medallic History of Louis XIV. He is not to be mistaken for Louis Simonneau, who published a series of prints on the history of printing, engraving, and other arts, in 2 vols folio, 1710.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SIMONET (Edmund), a Jesuit, was born at Langres in 1662. He became professor of philosophy at Rheims and Pont-a-Mousson, where also he taught divinity. He died in 1733. He is the author of Institutiones Theologicæ ad usum Seminariorum, 11 vols. 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SIMONIDES, a philosopher and poet, was born in the island of Ceos, in the Ægean sea, and flourished B.C. 480. His compositions were principally elegiac, and he gained a poetical prize at the age of eighty. He disgraced his great qualities by an excessive avarice. Fragments of his poems are in the Corpus Poetarum Græcorum, Geneva, 2 vols. folio, 1614.—Moreri.

SIMPLICIUS, a peripatetic philosopher of the fifth century, was a native of Phrygia. His Commentaries upon Aristotle and Epicetetus were published at Leyden in 1640, 4to.—Ibid.

SIMPSON (Edward), a learned divine, was born at Tottenham in Middlesex, and educated at Trinity college, Cambridge, where he took his degree of D.D. He became rector of Eastling, in Kent, where he died in 1692. His Universal Chronology, published in Latin, in the year he died, was reprinted at Leyden in 1739, and at Amsterdam in 1752.—Granger.

SIMPSON (Christopher), a writer on music, was patronized by sir Robert Bolles, in whose house he died about 1662. He wrote a Compendium of Practical Music, 8vo. which is a very useful book.—Granger. Hawkins.

SIMPSON (John), a Scotch divine, was born at Dumfries in 1677, and educated at Glasgow, where he took his degrees in arts, and became professor of divinity, but having embraced notions repugnant to the standard confession of faith, he was persecuted with great rigour, and excommunicated. Queen Caroline, however, procured him a pension. He died in 1744.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SIMPSON (Robert), an eminent mathematician, was born at Hamilton in Scotland, in 1693, and bred at Glasgow, where he took his doctor's degree in physic, but renounced that profession, and was chosen professor of mathematics in that university. He died in 1768. Dr. Simpson published a valuable edition of Euclid, and his posthumous works were printed at Glasgow in 1776, 4to.—Hutton. Encycl. Brit.

SIMPSON (Thomas), a mathematician, was born at Market Bosworth in Leicestershire, in 1710. His parents were too poor to give him an education, and he was, when very young, placed at the loom as a weaver of stuffs. By means of a travelling pedlar he gained some knowledge of arithmetic and astrology, and being anxious for farther improvement he visited London in 1732, and worked for some time in Spital-fields, employing his leisure hours in study, and also in teaching others. So great was his progress that in 1737 he published his excellent Treatise on Fluxions, which brought him into considerable notice. In 1740 appeared his book on annuities and chances, which occasioned a dispute between him and Le Moivre. In 1743 he was appointed professor of mathematics at the military school of Woolwich. He was also elected a fellow of the royal society, and a member of the academy of sciences at Paris. He died in 1761, and a pension was granted to his widow from the crown. Besides the above works he wrote the Elements of Algebra and Geometry, and some papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Ibid.

SIRANI (John Andrew), a painter of Bologna, was born in 1610, and died in 1670. He was one of the best disciples of Guido; and his daughter Elizabeth was also a good artist in historical painting. She died in 1664.—Pilkington.

SIRI (Vittorio), an Italian monk, who settled at Paris, where he became historiographer to the king, and abbot of Vallemague. He published an historical journal, or a Mercury, from 1635 to 1649, and continued under another title to 1670. He died in 1685.—Moreri.

SIRIZI (Violante Beatrice), an ingenious lady of Florence, was born in 1710. She was the disciple of John Fratellini, and equalled him in portrait-painting. Her principal performance is a picture of the grand duke of Tuscany, and of all the imperial family at Florence. She died about 1760.—Pilkington.

SIRLET (Flavius), an engraver on precious stones, died at Rome in 1737. His works are little, if at all, inferior to some of the finest remains of antiquity. One of his best performances is the famous groupe of Laocoon upon an amethyst.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SIRMOND (James), a French Jesuit, was born at Rome in 1539. He became secretary to Aquaviva, general of his order at Rome, where he assisted Baronius in compiling his annals. In 1613 he returned to France, and was appointed confessor to Louis XIII. which office he discharged with great reputation. He died in 1651. Father Sirmond published an edition of the councils of France, 3 vols. folio; editions of the works of Marcellinus, Theodoret and Hincmar; and a great number of miscellaneous pieces on theological subjects. His nephew, John Sirmond, was a member of the French academy, and historiographer of France. He died in 1649. His works are, 1. Life of Cardinal d'Amboise, 8vo.; 2. Latin Poems.—Moreri.

SIXRUS IV. pope, was the son of a fisherman on the coast of Genoa, and entered among the cordeliers. His abilities procured him the chair of divinity at Padua, and other universities of Italy. He also became general of his order, and Paul II. honoured him with the cardinalship. He succeeded that pontiff in 1471. He endeavoured to raise a new crusade against the infidels, but without success. Sixtus issued a bull, granting indulgencies to those who celebrated the feast of the immaculate conception of the Virgin. He died in 1484. He wrote some theological works.—Bower. Rycant.

SIXTUS V. pope, was the son of a gardener in Ancona, and born in 1521. When very young he was put to keep swine, from which situation he was taken by a cardinal who was pleased with his quickness, and placed in a convent of the order in a menial capacity. He made so great a progress in learning as to be admitted into orders, after which he became doctor and professor of divinity at Sienna, when he took the name of Montalto. His talents as a preacher procured him the appointment of commissary-general at Bologna, and inquisitor at Venice, but his conduct in the latter city gave so much offence to the senate that he was compelled to quit their territory. After obtaining several marks of distinction he was made cardinal in 1570. In this situation he affected uncommon humility and devotion, and counterfeited the weaknesses of sickness and age with so much art as to dupe the whole conclave. After the death of Gregory XIII. the cardinals were divided about the election, when considering that Montalto was an infirm old man who could not live long, they united in chusing him to the vacant chair. The election was no sooner declared, than, to the astonishment of all present, he jumped into the midst of the chapel, threw away his crutch, and began to sing the Te Deum with a loud voice. He commenced his pontificate by clearing the ecclesiastical state of the numerous robbers which infested it. He also punished with great severity all kinds of vice, and was inflexible in the administration of justice. He limited the number of cardinals to seventy, raised the famous obelisk which Caligula had caused to be brought from Spain (see FONTANA), and reformed many abuses which prevailed in the government. He died in 1590. By his orders a new version of the Bible in Latin was prepared and published in 3 vols. folio.—Life by Leti.

SKELTON (John), an English poet, is supposed to have been born in Cumberland. He had his education at Oxford, and on entering into orders obtained the living of Dis, in Norfolk, but his conduct was very irregular. Having reflected severely on cardinal Wolsey in his writings he was obliged to take refuge with Ilip, abbot of Westminster, where he continued till his death in 1529. He was poet laureate to Henry VIII. and wrote Satires, Sonnets, and an Invektive against Lily the grammarian, who answered him in his own way.—Wood.

SKELTON (Philip), an eminent divine, was born near Lisburn, in Ireland, in 1707, and educated at Trinity college, Dublin, where he took his degrees in arts. He was for many years curate of Monaghan, and in 1750 was presented to the living of Peltigo in the county of Donegal, where his conduct was very exemplary and charitable, particularly in a time of scarcity, when he sold his library to provide bread for the poor. In 1759 the bishop of Clogher gave him the living of Deconish, in the county of Fermanagh, and in 1766 that of Fin-tona, in Tyrone, where he brought over by his preaching, most of the dissenters to the church. He died at Dublin in 1787. Mr. Skelton wrote an excellent work entitled, Deism Revealed, in 2 vols. 8vo.; three volumes of admirable sermons; also fugitive pieces and tracts; the whole collected in 7 vols. 8vo.—Life by Burdy.

SKINNER (Stephen), a learned writer, was born in London, and educated at Christ church college, Oxford, from whence he went abroad in the civil wars, and took his degree of doctor of physic at Heidelberg, in which he was confirmed at Oxford, in 1654. He died at Lincoln in 1667. His works are, Etymologicon linguæ Anglicanæ; Etymologicon Onomasticon, &c. folio.—Wood, A. O.

SLEIDAN (John), a German historian, was born at a village of the same name near Cologne, in 1506. He was for some time in the family of the cardinal Du Bellay, who allowed him a pension. Afterwards he obtained a situation at Strasburgh. He was a zealous protestant, and died of grief, occasioned by the loss of his wife, in 1556. His works are, 1. De statu Religionis et Reipublicæ Germanorum sub Carolo V. 1555. 2. De quatuor summis Imperiis, 8vo. This is a universal history, of which Voltaire made considerable use. 3. Translation of the Memoirs of Philip de Commines.—Bayle.

SLINGELAND (John Peter), a painter, was born at Leyden in 1640. He was a disciple of Gerard Douw, whose manner he imitated. His pictures are admirably finished. He died in 1691.—Houbraken.

SLOANE (Hans), an eminent physician and naturalist, was born at Killileagh, in Ireland, in 1660. He studied in London, where he contracted an intimacy with Boyle and Ray, and afterwards went to Paris and attended the lectures of Tournefort and Du Verney. He returned to London in 1684, and became a favourite with Dr. Sydenham, who took him into his house. The same year he was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and in 1687 admitted of the college of physicians. About this time he went to Jamaica with the duke of Albemarle, who was appointed governor of that island, and though Dr. Sloane resided there only fifteen months he made a collection of not less than eight hundred different plants. On his return in 1689 he settled in London, and in 1694 was chosen physician to Christ's hospital. The preceding year he had been elected secretary to the royal society, when he revived the publication of the Philosophical Transactions. He was also active in promoting the plan of a dispensary for the poor. In 1707 he published the first volume of his History of Jamaica, but the second did not appear till 1725. In 1708 he was elected a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, and on the accession of George I. he was created a baronet. In 1719 he was elected president of the college of physicians, as he was of the royal society, on the death of Newton. Sir Hans died at Chelsea in 1752. His magnificent cabinet of curiosities was purchased by parliament for 20,000 l. and placed in the British museum. Several of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions.—Pulteney, Biog. Brit.

SLODTZ (Réné Michael), surnamed Michael Angelo, a sculptor, was born at Paris in 1705. He studied under his father, who was a native of Antwerp, after which he went to Rome, and on his return was admitted a member of the academy of Paris, where he died in 1764. One of his greatest works is the monument of Languet in the church of St. Sulpice.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SLUYS (James Vander), a painter, was born at Leyden in 1660, and died in 1736. His pictures are finely coloured, but the designs are not exact.—Pilkington.

SMALBROKE (Richard), an English prelate, was fellow of Magdalen college, Oxford, and in 1723 advanced to the bishopric of St. David's, from whence he was translated in 1730 to Lichfield and Coventry. He died in 1749. His lordship distinguished himself by a Vindication of the Miracles of our Saviour against Woolston, 8vo.—Todd's Deans of Canterlury.

SMALCIUS (Valentine), a celebrated socinian, was born in Thuringia, and died at Cracow, in Poland, in 1622. He wrote a Treatise against the Divinity of Christ in Latin, printed in 1603, 4to.—Moreri.

SMALBRIDGE (George), a learned prelate, was born at Lichfield about 1666, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford. He became prebendary of Lichfield, and dean of Christ church, and in 1714 was consecrated bishop of Eristol. He died in 1719. He wrote an Answer to Obadiah Walker on Church Government; a Latin Poem on the Sale of Books of Richard Davis, an Oxford bookseller, and was one of the editors of lord Clarendon's History of the Rebellion. His sermons were published in 1726, folio.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SMART (Christopher), a divine and poet, was born at Shipbourne, in Kent, in 1722, and educated at Pembroke-hall, Cambridge, where he obtained the Seatonian prize for the best poem several times. He took his master's degree in 1747, and in 1753 settled in London, but being imprudent he became poor and disordered in his mind. He died in 1771. His poems, which possess great merit, were published together in 1791, in 2 vols. 12mo.—Id.

SMEATON (John), an eminent mechanic and engineer, was born at Aulthorpe in Yorkshire in 1724. He was intended for the law by his father, who was an attorney, but at his own request he was placed under a mathematical instrument maker. In 1753 he became a fellow of the royal society, and in 1759 he obtained the gold medal for his paper on "The Natural Powers of Wind and Water to turn Mills and other Machine depending on a Circular Motion." Being appointed to rebuild the Edystone light-stone he completed it in a manner beyond expectation, and it may be justly pronounced a work unparalleled in its kind. He published a curious account of this structure and its history in one volume folio. He was also the author of an Account of the Improvements in Ramsgate Harbour, which were conducted by him. Mr. Smeaton died in 1792.—Europ. Mag.

SMELLIE (William), a Scotch surgeon and physician, who distinguished himself as a lecturer and practitioner in Midwifery in London, and was the first who considered the shape and size of the female pelvis, as adapted to the head of the fetus. He died at an advanced age in 1763. He wrote a Complete System of Midwifery, and published a set of Anatomical Tables, with Explanations. There was another of the same name, who was a printer at Edinburgh, and secretary to the society of antiquaries in that city. He wrote a work entitled, the Philosophy of Natural History, quarto, and published a translation of Buffon's great work. He died in 1795.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SMITH (Thomas), an eminent statesman, was born at Walden, in Essex, in 1512. He received his education at Queen's college, Cambridge, where he was elected fellow, and appointed Greek lecturer, in which capacity he introduced a new method of pronouncing that language which became general in the university, though opposed by the chancellor. In 1539 he went abroad, and took his doctor's degree of law at Padua. In 1542 he was made regius professor of that faculty at Cambridge. By the interest of the duke of Somerset he was knighted, and made secretary of state by Edward VI., but in the succeeding reign he lost his preferments. Queen Elizabeth employed him in several embassies to France, made him secretary of state, and chancellor of the garter. He died in 1577. Sir Thomas wrote a Treatise on the Right Pronunciation of Greek, printed at Paris by Stephens in 1568; and some other works.—Life by Sirype. Digitized by Google

SMITH (Miles), a learned bishop, was born at Hereford, and educated first at Corpus Christi college, and afterwards at Brasenose college, Oxford. He became canon-residentary of Hereford, and in 1618 bishop of Gloucester. He was well acquainted with the Oriental languages, and was one of the principal persons engaged in the translation of the Bible, to which he wrote the preface. His Sermons were printed in 1 vol. folio, 1630. He died in 1624.—Wood.

SMITH (John), a divine of the church of England, was born at Achurch, in Northamptonshire, in 1618. He was educated at Emmanuel college, Cambridge, and was afterwards chosen fellow of Queen's college in that university. He died in 1652. His Select Discourses were published in 1660, in one volume 4to.—Fun. Ser. by Patriick.

SMITH (John), a learned physician, was born in Buckinghamshire, and educated at Brasenose college, Oxford, where he took his degrees, and afterwards became fellow of the college of physicians in London. He died in 1679. Dr. Smith wrote a curious and ingenious book, entitled, the Portrait of Old Age, or a Paraphrase on Ecclesiastes XII. London, 8vo. 1660.—Wood.

SMITH (Thomas), a learned divine, was born in London in 1638, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of Magdalen college. In 1668 he went chaplain to the English embassy at Constantinople. In 1688 he was deprived of his fellowship by the popish president, Dr. Giffard, and lost it again in 1692, for refusing to take the oaths to William and Mary. He died in 1710. Dr. Smith wrote Diatriba de Chaldaicis paraphrasis, 8vo.; Syntagma de druidum Moribus ac Institutis, 8vo.; four Epistles on the Manners, &c. of the Turks, in Latin and English; an Account of the Greek Church, 8vo.; Life of Camden; Miscellanies; Papers in the Philosophical Transactions, and Sermons.—Wood.

SMITH (John), a learned divine, was born at Lowther, in Westmoreland, in 1659, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, where he took his degree of doctor in divinity. In 1695 he was installed prebendary of Durham, and in 1707 he obtained the rectory of Bishop Wearmouth. At the time of his death, in 1725, he was printing a correct edition of the works of the venerable Bede, which was published by his son in 1722, folio.—General Dictionary.

SMITH (Edmund), an English poet, was the son of Mr. Neale, an eminent merchant in London, and born in 1668. He took the name of Smith out of gratitude to his maternal uncle and guardian. Smith wrote Phædra and Hippolitus, a tragedy, and some other works. He died poor in 1710.—Biog. Dram.

SMITH (John), an excellent mezzotinto engraver, at the beginning of the 18th century. He engraved many portraits after Kneller, but his principal performances were night pieces after Schalken.—Strutt's Dict. of Engravers.

SMITH (George), a landscape painter, was born at Chichester in 1714. He obtained some prizes of the academy of arts, and his pictures are highly valued. He died in 1776. His two brothers, William and John, were also good painters, the first in portrait, and the latter in landscape. They both died in 1764.—P. Millington.

SMITH (Adam), an eminent writer, was born at Kirkcaldy, in Scotland, in 1723. He received his education first at Kirkcaldy school, and afterwards at the university of Glasgow, where he became professor of logic and moral philosophy, and took his degree of doctor of laws. In 1759 he acquired reputation by the publication of his Theory of Moral Sentiments, 8vo.; which, however, was greatly heightened and extended by his Enquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, printed in 1766, 4to., and several times since in 3 vols. 8vo. Not long after the publication of this work he was appointed a commissioner of the customs in Scotland. Dr. Smith was the intimate friend of Hume, and published an Apology for his Life, which was severely but justly animadverted on by Dr. Horne for its atheistical sentiments. He died in 1790. A volume of his posthumous essays has been printed.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SMITH (William), a learned divine, was born at Worcester in 1711, and educated at New college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and on taking orders was presented to the rectory of Trinity church, Chester. In 1748 he was appointed master of Brentwood school, Essex, where he continued only a year. In 1758 he was made dean of Chester, and in 1766 obtained the rectory of Handley in that county. He died in 1787. Dr. Smith published excellent translations of Longinus and Thucydides, and a volume of Sermons on the Beatitudes.—Europ. Mag. vol. xiv.

SMITS (Lodowick), a Dutch painter, was born at Dort in 1635, and died in 1675. His fruit-pieces were painted with astonishing exactness, and sold at a high price; but the colours did not stand.—Embraken.

SMITZ (Gaspard), an eminent Dutch painter, who died at Dublin in 1689. He painted portraits, but he excelled in representing Magdalene, which he executed in an admirable style.—Pillington.

SMOLLET (Tobias), an eminent writer, was born on the banks of the Leven, in Scotland, in 1720, of a good family. He was bred a surgeon, and served in that capacity on board of a ship at the unsuccessful bombardment of Carthage. He afterwards took his de gree of doctor of physic, but not meeting with encouragement in that line, he became a writer by profession. His first performance was the novel of Roderick Ransom, published in 1749, and which soon ran through several editions. The year following appeared the Regicide, a tragedy of little merit. This was followed by the novel of Peregrine Pickle, in which were inserted lady Vane's Apology, under the title of Memoirs of a Lady of Quality. In 1754 he published the Adventures of Ferdinand Count Fathom. He next instituted the Critical Review, which was chiefly conducted by him till 1763. For an article in this journal he was prosecuted by Admiral Knowles, on which he was confined in the King's-bench some time, and wrote there the Adventures of Sir Lancelot Greaves, a feeble imitation of Don Quixote. In 1757 he published the History of England, in 4 vols. 4to., afterwards printed in numbers in octavo. This work, though inaccurate and partial, gained him great profit and reputation. In 1762 he began a periodical paper, called The Briton, in defence of Lord Bute's administration. The year following he went abroad, and in 1766 he published an Account of his Travels, in 2 vols. 12mo. In 1771 appeared his novel of Humphry Clinker, which possesses merit, though not equal to his former performances in that kind. Dr. Smollet wrote some poems, compiled a Collection of Voyages and Travels, and translated Gil Blas and Don Quixote into English. He died in Italy in 1771.—Life by Dr. Moore.

SNELL (Rodolph), or Snellius, a Dutch philosopher, was born at Oudewater in 1546. He was professor of Hebrew and mathematics at Leyden, where he died in 1613. He wrote some esteemed works on philosophy and mathematics. His son, Willebrord Snell, succeeded him in the mathematical chair, and died in 1626. He discovered the true law of the refraction of the rays of light. The principal of his works is entitled, Cyclometricum, or the Measurement of a Circle, 4to.—Moreri.

SNORRO (Sturlesonius), a native of Iceland, who became minister of state to one king of Sweden and three kings of Norway. In a sedition he retired to his native country, whither he was followed and put to death in 1241. He wrote 1. "Chronicum Regum Norvigorum;" 2. "Edda Islandica," or a History of Islandic Philosophy.—Ibid.

SNYDERS (Francis), a painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1587, and died there in 1657. He excelled in hunting scenes, the animals and landscapes of which are very fine. The human figures were frequently painted by Rubens. He engraved a book of animals.—Houbraken.

SOBIESKI. See JOHN III. of POLAND.

SOCINUS (Laelius), was born at Sienna in 1525, and designed by his father for the profession of the law, but having embraced the principles of the reformation, he deemed it expedient to quit Italy in 1547. After passing through several countries he settled at Zurich, where he was suspected of arianism, and received a remonstrance from Calvin on the subject. Socinus profited by the hint, but more by the fate of Servetus, and retired to Poland, from whence he went to Venice, and afterwards returned to Zurich, where he died in 1562. He was the author of the sect of Socinians, having gathered many followers who embraced his opinions, which were, that Christ was only a man, that the holy spirit is nothing more than an attribute, and that the doctrines of original sin, atonement, and divine grace, have no foundation in Scripture.—Bayle.

SOCINUS (Faustus), nephew of the above, was born at Sienna in 1539. He inherited his uncle's property, papers, and principles; but did not openly avow the latter for several years. In the mean time he was entertained at the court of the duke of Tuscany, but in 1574 he went to Germany, from whence he removed to Poland, where the unitarians were established in great numbers. He died there in 1604. Socinus published several books, which are in the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum, 9 vols. folio.—Ibid.

SOCRATES, a celebrated philosopher of Athens, was the son of a sculptor, and followed the same profession for some years: Crito observing his genius, and admiring his discourses, called him from this employment to the study of philosophy. He also joined his countrymen in arms, and distinguished himself in several actions, in which he saved the lives of Xenophon and Alcibiades, with whom he contracted a close friendship. On his return to Athens he displayed in his manners a remarkable contrast to his contemporaries, by the plainness of his dress and the frugality of his living. In his philosophical lectures he endeavoured to effect a general reformation by recommending virtue. He was followed by a number of illustrious disciples, whom he instructed sometimes in the groves of Academus, and at others in the Lyceum, or on the banks of the Illysus. The independence of his mind, and the powerful eloquence of his discourses, excited against him many enemies, particularly Melitus and Anitus, at whose instigation Aristophanes ridiculed him in a comedy called the Clouds. Socrates was next accused before the council of five hundred of corrupting the Athenian youth, of introducing innovations in religion, and of ridiculing the gods. These absurd charges were supported by the perjury of witnesses, and the judges being mostly envious of his reputation condemned him to death. The solemn celebration of the Delian festival hindered the execution for a month, which time he employed in discoursing with his friends on the immortality of the soul and other sublime subjects. He was urged to make his escape, which he easily might have done, as the goaler's permission had been obtained, but he nobly refused, saying, "Where am I to go to avoid death?" When the term of the festival was ended, he drank off the poison with perfect composure, after making a libation to the gods, and a few moments after expired. Thus perished, 400 years B. C. and in the 70th year of his age, Socrates, whom the oracle had pronounced the wisest man in Greece. The Athenians repented of their ingratitude, and his enemies were universally hated and died miserably. The life and sayings of Socrates have been faithfully transmitted to us by his two most eminent disciples, Xenophon and Plato. By his wife Xantippe, rendered proverbial by the violence of her temper, he had several children.—Stanley.

SOCRATES, called the Scholaſtic, was a native of Constantinople. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History from the period where Eusebius ends to the year 440. Being a layman, and not exactly acquainted with the subjects he treated, his work is frequently inaccurate. It was published with Eusebius, &c. at Cambridge in 1720, 3 vols. folio. He flourished in the 5th century.

SOLANDER (Daniel Charles), an eminent naturalist, and the pupil of Linnæus, was born in the province of Norland in Sweden in 1736. He took his doctor's degree in physic at Upsal, and in 1760 visited England. At the request of sir Joseph Banks he accompanied him in the voyage round the world with captain Cook. In 1773 Dr. Solander was appointed one of the librarians of the British Museum. He died in 1782. He wrote a Description of the Collection of Petrifications found in Hampshire, and given to the British Museum by Mr. Brander; also Observations on Natural History in Cook's Voyage.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SOLE (Antonio), a landscape painter, born at Bologna in 1597, and died there in 1677. His pictures are very fine and valuable. Jeseph del Sole, his son, born in 1654, was eminent both in historical subjects and landscapes. He died in 1719.—P. It.

SOLIGNAC (Peter Joseph, chevalier de), was born at Montpellier in 1687. He was secretary to Stanislaus, king of Poland, and wrote a history of that country, 5 vols. 12mo. He died in 1773. His other works are, an Eloge upon Stanislaus; the Amours of Horace; and a Piece on Education.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SOLIMAN I. emperor of the Turks, succeeded his father Bajazet in 1402. After relieving the Ottoman empire by his courage, he fell into a debauched course of life, and was dethroned and assassinated by his brother Musa in 1410.—Un. Hist.

SOLIMAN II. surnamed the Magnificent, succeeded his father Selim I. in 1520. Having concluded a truce with Imael, sophy of Persia, and quelled a rebellion in Syria, he turned his arms against Europe. In 1521 he took Belgrade, and in the following year Rhodes fell into his hands, after an obstinate defence. In 1529 he made himself master of Buda, and then laid siege to Vienna, from whence he was obliged to retreat with the loss of 80,000 men. In 1534 he marched into the East, and took Tauris from the Persians, but was soon afterwards defeated by the Schah. His forces were also repulsed before Malta; but he took the isle of Chios in 1566. The same year this enterprising monarch died at the siege of Sigeth in Hungary.—Univ. Hist.

SOLIMENE (Francis), a painter, was born near Naples in 1657. His reputation was so great that many princes of Europe invited him to their courts, which he declined, and died at Naples in 1747. The emperor Charles VI. conferred on him the honour of knighthood. His pictures are painted in a fine stile, and the figures are very expressive. He was also a good poet.—Tiraboschi.

SOLINUS (Caius Julius), a grammarian, was born at Rome, and lived about the middle of the third century. His "Polyhistor," a compilation of Historical and Geographical Remarks, was published by Salmastius at Paris in 1629; and printed again at Utrecht, with commentaries, in 2 vols. folio, 1689. Solinus has been called Pliny's Ape, from his servile imitation of that writer.—Moreri.

SOLIS (Antonio de), a Spanish writer, was born at Placenza, in Old Castile, in 1610. He was secretary to Philip IV. and historiographer of the Indies. He afterwards entered into orders, and died in 1686. He wrote many comedies and poems, but his great work is the History of the Conquest of Mexico, folio. It has been translated into English by Townshend.—Nic. Ant. vi. de Scrip. Hist.

SOLOMON, king of Israel, was the son of David and Bathsheba. His reign was glorious, and the fame of his wisdom spread into distant regions, so that the most illustrious persons visited Jerusalem to see him, and the surrounding states courted his alliance. He built a magnificent palace for himself and a famous temple to the Lord, which he dedicated with great solemnity. In his latter years he tarnished his glory by falling into idolatrous and licentious practices by marrying the daughter of the king of Egypt. He died B. C. 975, aged 58. We have in the sacred canon three of his books, the Proverbs, a miscellaneous body of ethical sentences; the Ecclesiastes, a treatise on human vanity; and the Canticles.

cles, supposed to have been composed on his marriage. In the Apocrypha there is a book called the Wisdom of Solomon, though it is of more modern date.—Gray's Key, O. T.

SOLOMON BEN VIRGA a Spanish rabbi and physician in the 16th century. He wrote a History of the Jews, from the destruction of the Temple to his own time, a Latin version of which was printed at Amsterdam, in 1651, 4to.—Moreri.

SOLOMON (Ben Job Jalla), an African prince, who being sent by his father, in 1731, to the sea-coast to sell slaves, was taken prisoner, and sold to an English captain, who carried him to America, and disposed of him to a planter, from whom he was purchased by general Oglethorpe, and brought to England. While here he was employed by sir Hans Sloane in translating Arabic manuscripts in his library. He was afterwards sent back to his own country with many valuable presents.—Gent. Mag.

SOLOON, one of the seven wise men of Greece, was born at Salamis. He was descended from Codrus, and the relation of Pisistratus. After studying philosophy at Athens, he travelled for improvement. On his return home he found his countrymen divided into factions, and the state reduced to great distress. All eyes were turned upon Solon, and he was unanimously elected archon and sovereign legislator. He discharged his high office with great wisdom and integrity, introducing a reform in every department, ameliorating the condition of the poor, and amending the rigorous code of Draco. Solon having made the Athenians take an oath to observe his laws, laid down the sovereignty, and retired to Egypt. He died in Cyprus, B. C. 558, aged 80. None of his writings have been preserved.—Plutarch in vit. Sol.

SOMERS (John, lord), chancellor of England, was born at Worcester in 1652, and educated at Trinity college, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple. He distinguished himself at the bar, and in 1681 was concerned in writing a piece entitled, "A Just and Modest Vindication of the Proceedings of the two last Parliaments." He was one of the council for the seven bishops, and in the convention parliament he represented the city of Worcester, and was one of the managers for the house of commons at a conference with the lords, upon the word "Abdicated." Soon after he was appointed solicitor-general, and in 1692 attorney-general, and lord keeper. In 1697 he was made chancellor with the title of lord Somers, but in 1700 the seals were taken from him, and he was impeached of high crimes and misdemeanours, but acquitted by the lords. He died in 1710. Lord Somers was a great constitutional lawyer, a virtuous patriot, and a patron of learning.—Gen. Dict.

SOMERVILLE (William), a poet, was born in Warwickshire, in 1692, and educated at Winchester-school, from whence he was sent to New college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He afterwards settled upon his paternal estate, where he became a useful justice of the peace. He died in 1743. Mr Somerville wrote the Chace, a poem, which is a very lively and ingenious performance. It has been often printed with a few other pieces by the same author.—Johnson's Lives of the Poets.

SOMNER (William), a learned antiquary was born at Canterbury in 1606. He was the author of "The Antiquities of Canterbury," and a "Saxon Dictionary." He died in 1669.—Gen. Dict.

SOPHOCLES, a tragic poet of Athens, was educated under Æschylus, after which he distinguished himself as a statesman and a general. He shared the command with Pericles, and bore an honourable part in several battles. The Athenians having taken the isle of Scyros, appointed an annual contest for the best tragedy to commemorate that event. It was on this occasion that Sophocles first displayed his poetical talents. His performance gained the prize, though he had his old master among his competitors. This success encouraged him to continue in the same course, and he gained the prize twenty times. Euripides was his powerful rival, and they divided the public applause. Seven only of the plays of Sophocles are extant. He died, aged 91, B. C. 406, of joy at having gained a prize at the olympic games. The best editions of Sophocles are that of Capperonier at Paris, 2 vols. 4to. 1780, and that of Brunck, 4 vols. 8vo. 1786. This author has been translated into English by Potter.—Biog. Clussica.

SOPHONISBA, the daughter of Asdrubal, general of the Carthaginian forces, and the wife of Syphax, king of Numidia. When her husband was defeated by Massinissa, she fell into the hands of the victor, who married her. This union, however, was soon interrupted by Scipio Africanus, who obliged Massinissa to quit his new spouse, on which she poisoned herself, B. C. 209.—Livy. Sallust.

SORANUS, a physician of Ephesus, who practised at Rome under Trajan and Adrian. Some pieces of his are extant, and were published in Greek, at Paris, in 1554, and at Basil in 1528. There was another of the same name, who wrote on the diseases of women.—Moreri.

SORBAIT (Paul), a native of Hainault, was physician to the imperial court, and professor of medicine at Vienna. He died in 1691. He wrote, "Commentaries on the Aphorisms of Hippocrates," 4to.; "Medicina Universalis, theoretica et practica," folio, &c.—Moreri.

SORBIERE (Samuel), a French writer, was born in the diocese of Ulez, in 1615. He quitted the study of divinity for that of physic, and in 1653 renounced the protestant religion, on which he obtained a considerable pension from the king. He died at Rome in 1670. Sorbieri was in the habit of correspondence with Hobbes, whose letters he used to send to Gaffendi as his own, and having transcribed the answers sent them to Hobbes, who from thence conceived a high opinion of his abilities. His Journey to England is full of gross falsehoods, and his other works of trifling value.—Moreri.

SORBONNE (Robert de), founder of the college of that name at Paris, was born in 1201. He was confessor and chaplain to St. Louis, who had a great esteem for him, and gave him the canonry of Cambrai. He founded the college of the Sorbonne in 1253, and died in 1274.—Ibid.

SORGH (Hendrick), a painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1621. He was the disciple of Teniers, and his favourite subjects were fairs and markets. He died in 1682.—Houbraken.

SORRI (Peter), an Italian painter, was born at Sienna in 1556. He excelled in landscape, portrait, and historical painting. He died in 1622.—Pilkington.

SOSIGENES, an astronomer of Egypt, who was invited to Rome by Julius Cæsar, for the reformation of the calendar. He fixed the year at 365 days, called the Julian year, which commenced B. C. 45. His works are lost.—Pliny.

SOSTRATES, a celebrated architect of Cnidos, who constructed the tower of Pharos, in the bay of Alexandria, on which he made this inscription, "Sostrates, of Cnidos, son of Dexiphanes, to the gods who protect navigation." He flourished B. C. 273.—Strabo. Pliny.

SOTADES, a Grecian poet, was a native of Maronea in Thrace. He invented a kind of irregular iambics, which were called by his name. Having written a satire against Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, he was thrown into the sea in a chest of lead.—Suidas. Strabo.

SOTO (Dominic), a Spanish divine, was born at Segovia in 1494. He studied at Alcalá and at Paris, and on his return to Spain entered among the dominicans. He became professor of divinity at Salamanca, and on account of his great reputation was appointed confessor to Charles V. who sent him to the council of Trent. He refused the bishopric of Segovia, and died in 1560. His works are, Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans; de Justitia et Jure; de Pauperum Causa; de Cavendo juramentorum abusu, &c. There was another dominican of this name, who came to England with Philip II. husband of Mary, for the purpose of restoring the roman catholic religion in the two universities. He also distinguished himself at the council of Trent, and died in 1563. He wrote some theological works.—Nic. Anton. Script. Hist.

SOUSIER (John de Parthenai, lord of), one of the principal leaders of the protestants in France, was born of an illustrious house in Poitou. He was brought up at the court of the duke of Ferrara, and on his return to France he attached himself to the prince of Condé, who sent him to Lyons to defend that place. He discharged his trust with great success, and obliged the duke de Nemours to raise the siege. He died in 1566.—Moreri.

SOUBISE (Benjamin de Rohan, duke of), grandson of the preceding, was the son of Rénatus de Rohan, the second of that name, and of Catherine de Parthenai. He supported his brother, the duke of Rohan, in his defence of Rochelle, and in 1621 he maintained St. John d'Angeli against Louis XIII. and when he surrendered the place, obtained a free pardon: in 1622 he took Oleron, and made himself master of Lower Poitou, but was soon after defeated, on which he retired to England, where he died in 1640.—Ibid.

SOUCHAI (John Baptist), a French writer, was born at Saint-Amand, near Vendôme, in 1687. He became canon of the cathedral of Rodez, counsellor to the king, and professor of eloquence in the royal college. He died in 1746. The abbé Souchai published a Translation of Sir Thomas Browne's Vulgar Errors, 2 vols.; an edition of Ansonius, 4to.; and many dissertations in the memoirs of the academy of belles lettres.—Nouv. Diâ. Hist.

SOUCIET (Stephen), a jesuit, was born at Bourges in 1671. He was librarian in the college of Louis the Great, and died in 1744. His works are, Astronomical Observations made in China, 3 vols. 4to.; Dissertations on Difficult Passages of Scripture, 4to.; Dissertations against the Chronology of sir Isaac Newton, &c. His brother, Stephen Augustin, was professor of divinity in the same college, and died the same year. He wrote a poem on comets, and another on agriculture.—Nouv. Diâ. Hist.

SOUFFLOT (James Germain), a French architect, was born in 1713. He improved himself in Italy, and on his return to France became superintendent of the royal buildings. His greatest work is the church of St. Genevieve, at Paris. He died in 1780.—Ibid.

SOUTH (Robert), an eminent divine, was born at Hackney, in Middlesex, in 1633, and educated at Westminster-school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford. In 1660 he was chosen public orator of the university, and the year following appointed chaplain to lord Clarendon. In 1670 he obtained a canonry of Christ church, and a prebend of Westminster. In 1676 he accompanied the English ambassador to Poland, of which country he wrote an account. After his return he was presented to the rectory of Ilip, in Oxfordshire. Though he concurred in the revolution, he refused a bishopric, and died in 1716. His sermons have been published in 11 vols. 8vo. They are remarkable for their wit. Dr. South had a sharp controversy with Dr. Sherlock on the doctrine of the Trinity.—Wood.

SOUTHERN (Thomas), a dramatic writer, was born, according to some, in Ireland, but Wood says at Stratford upon Avon. He became a servitor in Pembroke college, Oxford, where he took one degree in arts, and then settled in London. He wrote, the Pertian Prince; Isabella, or the Fatal Marriage; and Oroonoko, tragedies; the Disappointment; the Rambling Lady; and the Wives' Excuse, comedies. He died in 1746, aged 88.—Biog. Dram. Wood.

SOZOMEN (Hermias), an ecclesiastical historian of the fifth century, was born in Palestine, from whence he passed to Constantinople, where he practised as an advocate. He died about 450. His Ecclesiastical History from 324 to 439 was printed at Cambridge with Eusebius, Socrates, &c. in 9 vols. folio, 1720.—Moreri.

SPAGNOLETTO (Joseph Ribera), a painter, was born in 1589, at Xativa, in Spain. After studying the works of the greatest masters he settled at Naples, where he was employed by the viceroy and other great persons. His subjects were mostly tragical scenes, which he painted with uncommon force and expression. He died in 1656.—Cumberland's Anecd. of Spanish Painters.

SPAIN. This country was possessed chiefly by the Carthaginians, till they were expelled B. C. 206 by the Romans, who made themselves masters of the whole B. C. 16. A. D. 409 the Vandals, Alans, and Suevi, set led in Spain, but in 428 the Vandals went to Africa. In 585 the Suevi were driven out by the Goths, here called Visigoths, who in 580 expelled the Romans. In 711 the Saracens invaded the country, and kept possession till 718, when Don Pelago recovered part of it from them. He reigned in Biscay and the Asturias. In 984 Bermudo II. of this race was acknowledged king of Leon, but in 1037 this kingdom was united to that of Castile. In 1080 the Moorish kingdom of Toledo was conquered, and that city became the capital of the kingdom of Castile. That kingdom was united to Arragon by the marriage of Ferdinand of Arragon to Isabella of Castile, in 1479. See FERDINAND V.—Mariana. Univ. Hist.

SPALLANZANI (Lazarus), an eminent naturalist, was born in 1729 at Scandiano, in Italy. He became professor of philosophy at Pavia, where he made numerous experiments in physiology. In 1785 he went into Turkey, and made many curious observations on geology and extinct volcanoes. He next passed into Germany, and received particular marks of attention from the emperor Joseph II. He died at Pavia in 1799. His works are, Letters on the Origin of Fountains; Experiments on the Reproductions of Animals; Essay upon Animalcula in Fluids; Microscopical Experiments; Memoirs on the Circulation of the Blood; Travels in the Two Sicilies and the Apennines, 6 vols.; Observations on the Transpiration of Plants; Correspondence with eminent Men.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SPANHEIM (Frederick), a learned divine, was born at Amberg, in the Upper Palatinate, in 1600. He studied at Heidelberg, and obtained the professorship of philosophy at Geneva, which he left in 1642, and was elected professor of divinity at Leyden, where he died in 1649. His works are, the Life of the Count Rhona, 4to.; Dubia Evangelica, two tomes, 4to.; Exercitationes de Gratia Universalis, 3 volumes, 8vo.; the Swiss Mercury, &c.—Moreri.

SPANHEIM (Ezekiel), a learned writer and statesman, was the eldest son of the preceding, and born in 1629 at Geneva, where he was appointed professor of eloquence at the age of twenty. He soon after became tutor to the son of Charles Louis, elector palatine, who employed him in several important missions. From his service he passed into that of the elector of Brandenburg, who made him a baron and minister of state. After the peace of Ryswick he was sent to France and from thence to England, where he died in 1710. His principal works are, De Præstantia et usu Numismatum antiquorum, 2 vols. folio; Letters and Dissertations on Medals; an edition of the works of Julian, with notes, folio.—Moreri.

SPANHEIM (Frederick), brother of the above, was born at Geneva in 1632. He was educated at Leyden, where he took his degree of doctor in divinity, after which he became professor in that faculty at Heidelberg, and next at Leyden. He died in 1701. His principal work is an Ecclesiastical History, 3 vols. folio.—Ibid.

SPARROW (Anthony), a learned prelate, was born at Depden, in Suffolk, and educated at Queen's college, Cambridge, from whence he was ejected in 1643 for refusing to take the covenant. After the restoration he was made master of that college, archdeacon of Sudbury, and in 1667 consecrated bishop of Exeter, from whence he was translated to Norwich, where he died in 1685. Bishop Sparrow wrote, Rationale upon the Book of Common Prayer, 1657, 8vo. This book was greatly improved, and published with additions in 1722. He also compiled a collection of Articles, Injunctions, Canons, &c. 4to.—Wood.

SPARTA. In 1069 B. C. Eurotas, the son of Lelex, and Lacedæmon, (who married Sparta, the daughter of Eurotas) reigned in Laconia, and built Sparta. In 708 Lycurgus new-modelled this state, after which it became famous, particularly by the conquest of Athens. It became a Roman province A. D. 71. The Venetians conquered the country in 1686, but it was retaken by the Turks in 1715. [See LYCURGUS.]—Un. Hist.

SPARTACUS, a Thracian shepherd, famous for his victories over the Romans. He was one of the gladiators of Lentulus, but escaping with thirty others he placed himself at the head of a numerous army, with which he defeated the Romans in several battles. At last Crassus was sent against him, and after a bloody contest Spartacus was slain 1. C. 71.—Livy, Florus.

SPARTIANUS (Alius), a Latin historian, who wrote the Lives of the Emperors from Julius Cæsar to Dioclesian, of which only a few are extant among the Scriptores Historiæ Augustæ.—Vossius de Hist. Lat.

SPEED (John), an English historian and antiquary, was born at Harrington, in Cheshire, about 1555. He was by profession a taylor, but having a great inclination to study he was enabled to pursue it by the bounty of sir Fulk Greville. He was the author of the Theatre of Great Britain, fol. 1596; the History of Great Britain, folio; and Tables of Scripture Genealogies, formerly bound up with the Bible. This industrious compiler died in 1629.—Gen. D. 8.

SPELMAN (sir Henry), a learned antiquary, was born in Norfolk about 1561. He was employed by king James in some important public business in Ireland, and was one of the commissioners for reforming the abuses with regard to fees in the different courts and offices for which he received the honour of knighthood. Sir Henry was one of the old society of antiquaries, and distinguished himself by several learned works, as, 1. a Book against Sacrilege, or alienating the Church Lands, under the title of De Non Temerandis Ecclesiæ; 2. Glossarium Archaeologicum, folio; 3. an edition of the English Councils, 2 vols. folio; 4. the Life of Alfred, folio; 5. Villare Anglicanum, folio; 6. Reliquiæ Spelmaniæ, fol. His son, sir John Spelman, was also a learned man. He was master of the Charterhouse, and died in 1643. Clement Spelman, another son of sir Henry, wrote a Discourse on the Time of observing Easter; Tracts on Astrology; Rules for Judging the Weather, &c. He died in 1679.—Biog. Brit.

SPENCE (Joseph), an ingenious divine, was born in Northamptonshire, and educated at Winchester school, from whence he was elected to New college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship in 1727. The year following he was presented to the rectory of Birchanger, in Essex, which he afterwards resigned for that of Harwood-Magna, in Buckinghamshire. In 1742 he was made professor of modern history, and in 1754 prebendary of Durham. He was drowned in a pond at Byfleet, in Surry, in 1768, aged 65. Mr. Spence wrote, 1. an Essay on Pope's Odyssey, 12mo.; 2. a work entitled Polymetis, folio.

SPENCER (John), a learned divine, was born in Kent in 1630, and educated at Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow and master. In 1677 he was made dean of Ely. He died in 1693. His principal works are, 1. De Legibus Hebræorum Ritualibus & earum Rationibus, folio; 2. a Discourse concerning Prodigies and Vulgar Prophecies, 8vo. He is not to be confounded with William Spencer of Trinity college, in the same university, who printed in 1658 an edition of Origen's books against Celsus, with notes.—Gen. Diæ.

SPENKER (Philip James), a Lutheran divine, was born in Alsace, in 1635. He became counsellor in ecclesiastical affairs to the elector of Brandenburg, but is rendered remarkable by being the founder of a sect called Pietists, who held that the word of God cannot be understood without the illumination of the Holy Ghost. He died at Berlin in 1705.—Moreri.

SPENSER (Edmund), an eminent poet, was born in London, and educated at Pembroke hall, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, but not obtaining a fellowship he quitted the university. His first performance was the "Shepherd's Calendar," which he dedicated to sir Philip Sidney, who became his patron, and introduced him at court. It is said that Elizabeth, being pleased with some of his verses, ordered the treasurer Burleigh to give him one hundred pounds, on which the old statesman, who had little esteem for poets, exclaimed, "what, so much for a song?" to which the queen answered, "then give him what is reason." Spenser however obtained nothing, in consequence of which he presented her majesty the following address:

I was promised, on a time,

To have reason for my rhyme,

But from that time to this season

I have had nor rhyme nor reason.

This he pleaded the queen that she severely reprimanded the treasurer, and ordered that the poet should be instantly paid. In 1579 he was sent abroad on some mission by the earl of Leicester, and afterwards he accompanied lord Grey, viceroy of Ireland, as his secretary, and obtained a grant of lands in that kingdom, where he built a house, and finished his celebrated poem entitled, "The Faery Queen." In the rebellion begun by the earl of Desmond our poet lost his estate, and was plundered. In 1590 he was appointed poet laureat, with a salary of 50*l.* a year. He died in London in 1598, and was buried in Westminster-abbey. The best edition of his works is that of Todd, with notes, 1805, six volumes, 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

SPEKING (Otto), a physician and botanist, was born at Hamburg in 1602. He was appointed physician to the king of Denmark, but being concerned with the count Ulfeld he was sent to prison, where he died in 1681. He published a Catalogue of Plants in Denmark, 1642, 12mo. There was another physician of this name, who died at Wittemberg in 1658. He wrote, 1. Institutiones Physicæ; 2. Anthropologicæ Physicæ.—Novæ Diæ. Hist.

SPEZONI (Speroni), an Italian writer, was born at Padua in 1500, and died in 1588. His works are, 1. Dialogues in Italian, 8vo.; 2. Canace, a tragedy; 3. Letters, &c.—Tiraboschi.

SPIELMAN (James Reinhold), was born at Strasburg in 1722. He was a physician and professor of chemistry at his native place, where, by his means, a botanic garden was established. He died in 1782. His works are, 1. Elementa Chimiz, 8vo.; 2. Prodromus Floræ Argentinensis, 8vo.; 3. Institutiones Materiæ Medicæ; 4. Syllabus Medicamentorum; 5. Pharmacopœia generalis, 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

SPIERINGS (Henry), a landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1633. His pictures are well designed, and the trees are remarkably beautiful.—Houbraken.

SPIERS (Albert Van), an historical painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1666. After studying in Italy he returned to his native city, where he painted several beautiful pictures. He died in 1718.—Pilkington.

SPIELIUS (Adrian), professor of anatomy and surgery at Padua, was born at Brussels in 1578, and died in 1625. His works were printed at Amsterdam in 3 vols. folio, 1645.

SPIELBERG (John), an historical and portrait painter, was born at Duffeldorf in 1619. He was principal painter to the count Palatine, and painted several fine altar pieces in his native country. He died in 1691. His daughter Adriana painted portraits in crayons. She was the wife of Vander Neer.—Houbraken.

SPINCKES (Nathaniel), a pious divine, was born at Castor, in Northamptonshire, in 1654, and educated at Jesus' college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. He lost his church preferments at the revolution for refusing the oaths. In 1719 he was consecrated one of the bishops among the non-jurors. He died in 1727. Mr. Spinckes published a collection of Devotions, 12mo.; the Sick Man visited, and several other pious books.—Gen. Dict.

SPINELLO (Aretino), a painter, was born at Arezzo, in Tuscany, in 1328. He painted portrait and history in an admirable style, and his pieces are finely finished. He died in 1420. His son was also an eminent artist. He died in 1422.—De Pile. Felibien.

SPINOLA (Ambrose), a celebrated general, was born in Spain of a family originally from Genoa. He bore arms early in life, and in 1604 took Ostend, after which he was named commander in chief of the Spanish forces in the Low Countries, where he opposed Maurice, prince of Nassau, with great skill and bravery. He afterwards signified himself in Italy, where he took Casal. He died in 1630.—Moreri.

SPINOSA (Benedict), was the son of a Portuguese Jew, and was born at Amsterdam in 1632. He studied under a physician, and afterwards applied to theology, but having avowed some free opinions respecting the mosaic law he was excommunicated, on which he was baptized and professed the christian religion. A love of study induced him to retire from Amsterdam into the country, where he employed himself in making microscopes and telescopes. He died in 1677. Spinosa invented a system which assumed his name, the basis of which was, that matter is eternal, and that the universe is God. This he published in a piece entitled, Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, 4to.; and the same is refined upon in a mathematical form in his posthumous works, printed in quarto.—Moreri.

SPIRA (Francis), a lawyer of eminence in the Venetian state at the beginning of the sixteenth century. He had imbibed the principles of the reformation, of which being accused before the pope's nuncio, he was obliged to make a public recantation to save his life. Shortly after he fell into a deep melancholy, and notwithstanding all the advice of medical men he died of the mere agonies of his mind in 1548.—Cotlier's Dict.

SPON (Charles), a learned Frenchman, was born at Lyons in 1639. He had a good turn for Latin poetry; and Bayle says, that he had an extemporary piece in lambics, composed by him at fourteen, which would have done honour to an adult, if it had been written in the hours of leisure. After studying medicine three or four years he went to Montpellier, where he took his doctor's degree in 1662. He afterwards settled at Lyons, where he practised with great success. He died in 1684. He published the Prognostics of Hippocrates in hexameter verse.—Bayle.

SPON (James), son of the preceding, was born at Lyons in 1647. After receiving a liberal education he was admitted doctor of physic at Montpellier in 1667, and a member of the college of physicians at Lyons in 1669. In 1675 and 1676 he made a voyage to Dalmatia, Greece, and the Levant; of which he printed an account. He died in 1686. He was the author of many valuable and curious works. 1. Recherches des Antiquités de Lyons, 1674, 8vo.; 2. Ignorantum atque obcurorum Deorum arx, 1677, 8vo.; 3. Voyage de la Grèce & du Levant, 1677, 3 vols. 12mo.; 4. Histoire de la Ville & de l'Etat de Geneve, 1680, two volumes, 12mo. &c. &c.—Ibid.

SPONDANUS (John), or de Sponde, was born in 1557. At the age of twenty he began a commentary on Homer's Iliad and Odyssey, which was printed at Basil in 1538, folio, with a dedication to the king of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV. of France. The same year he caused "Aristotle's Logic" to be printed at Basil in Greek and Latin, with marginal notes. He died in 1595.—Ibid.

SPONDANUS (Henry), younger brother of the above, was born in 1568, and educated in the reformed college at Ortez, where he was early distinguished by his fa-elity in acquiring the Latin and Greek languages. He studied the civil and canon law, and his learning and eloquence attracting the notice of Henry IV., then prince of Bearn, he was made by him master of the requests at Navarre. In 1595 he abjured the protestant religion, and on taking orders was preferred to a bishopric in 1643. Spondanus published an abridgment of Baronius's Annals, entitled, "Annales Sacra Mundi Creatione ad ejusdem Redemptionem," folio.—Ibid.

SPOTSWOOD (John), a learned Scotch prelate, was born in 1565. In 1603, upon the accession of James to the throne of England, he was appointed to attend the king, and in the same year was advanced to the archbishopric of Glasgow, and made one of the privy council in Scotland. In 1615 he was translated to the see of St. Andrew's. He was as much the favourite of Charles I., who in 1635 made him chancellor of Scotland; but the troubles obliging him to leave that country he retired to London, where he died in 1639. His History of the Church of Scotland was published in 1655, folio.—Collier.

SPOTSWOOD (sir Robert), second son of the preceding, was eminent for his abilities and knowledge in the laws. He was preferred by king James, and afterwards by king Charles; but was put to death by the covenanters for adhering to the marquis of Montrose.—Ibid.

SPRAGG (Edward), a brave English admiral, was a captain in the first engagement with the Dutch in 1665, when, for his gallant conduct, he was knighted by the king on board the Royal Charles. He attracted the particular notice of the duke of Albemarle in the four days battle in 1666, and the year following he burnt a number of Dutch fire-ships when they came up the Thames, which threw their whole fleet into confusion. In 1671 he burnt in the Mediterranean seven Algerine men of war. He was sunk in his boat in an engagement with Van Tromp in 1673, as he was going from his sinking ship to another.—Campbell.

SPRANGHER (Bartholomew), a famous painter of Antwerp, was born in 1546. After studying under various masters he went to Italy, where he was patronised by cardinal Farnese, who recommended him to pope Pius V. On his return to Germany he became chief painter to the emperor Maximilian II. whose successor, Rodolphus, gave him a patent of nobility, and a pension. He died in 1623.—De Piles.

SPRAT (Thomas), a learned bishop, was born at Tallaton, in Devonshire, in 1636. He was admitted a commoner of Wadham college, Oxford, in 1651, and on taking his degrees in arts obtained a fellowship. After the restoration he entered into orders, and was one of the first members of the royal society, of which he wrote the history. He became chaplain to the king, prebendary of Westminster, minister of St. Margaret's, canon of Windsor, and lastly dean of Westminster and bishop of Rochester. He was also dean of the chapel royal, and was one of the commissioners for ecclesiastical affairs in the reign of James II. However, he complied at the revolution, and died in 1713. He wrote, the Plague of Athens, a poem; a poem on the Death of Cromwell; Observations on Sorbiere's Voyage to England, 8vo.; the Life of Mr. Abraham Cowley; History of the Rye-house Plot; Relation of the wicked Conspiracy of Stephen Blackhead and Robert Young, folio; several Sermons, octavo.—Wood.

SPURSTOW (William), a non-conformist divine, was master of Catharine hall, Cambridge, from whence he was ejected in the rebellion for refusing the engagement. He afterwards had the living of Hackney, of which he was deprived for non-conformity. Dr. Spurstow was one of the assembly of divines, and a commissioner at the Savoy conference. The two first letters of his name are the last of the word Samaritanians, the title of a book against episcopacy. [See NEWCOMEN.] He died in 1666. His works are, a Treatise on the Promises, 8vo.; the Spiritual Chemist, 8vo.; the Wiles of Satan; and some Sermons.—Calamy.

SQUARCIONE (Francis), an Italian painter, was born in 1394, and died in 1474. He travelled into Greece to make designs after the remains of antiquity, and on his return to Italy he gained so great a reputation as to be called the father of painters.—De Piles.

SQUIRE (Samuel), a learned bishop, was born at Warminster, in Wiltshire, in 1714, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1760 he was promoted to the deanry of Bristol, and the year following was made bishop of St. David's. He died in 1766. His works are, 1. a Defence of the Antient Greek Chronology, and an Enquiry into the Origin of the Greek Language, 8vo.; 2. an Enquiry into the Nature of the English Constitution, octavo; 3. Indifference to Religion inexcusable, 12mo.—Gen. Hist. Diet.

STAAL (Madame de), a French lady, was the daughter of a painter named De Launai, who being obliged to quit the kingdom left his child in great distress, in which state she found a friend in the abbess of a convent, who brought her up. She afterwards became servant to the duchess of Maine, and being noticed by Fontenelle for her ingenuity, she acquired the friendship of many persons of distinction. She married an officer named de Staal, who became a captain in the Swiss guards. She died in 1750. Her Memoirs were published after her death, in 4 vols. 12mo. In the last are two comedies.—Nov. Hist.

STABEN (Henry), a painter, was born in Flanders in 1578, and died in 1658. He was the disciple of Tintoret, and acquired great excellence in painting historical subjects and views in perspective.—De Piles.

STACKHOUSE (Thomas), a divine of the church of England, who was many years curate of Finchley, in Middlesex, and vicar of Beenham in Berkshire. He wrote a Review of the Controversy concerning Miracles, 8vo.; on the Miseries of the inferior Clergy, 8vo.; a System or Body of Practical Divinity, 1 vol. folio; and a History of the Bible, 2 vols. folio. This last is a work of considerable merit, and has gone through many editions. Mr. Stackhouse died in 1758.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

STADIUS (John), a mathematician, was born near Antwerp in 1527. He became professor of history at Louvain, and afterwards of mathematics and history at Paris, where he died in 1579. His works are, 1. Ephemerides; 2. Tabula æquabilis & apparentis motus cœlestium corporum; 3. a Latin Commentary on Florus.—Moreri.

STAFFORD (Anthony), an English writer, was born of a noble family in Northamptonshire, and educated at Oriel college, Oxford, and in 1623 was created master of arts. He wrote, Niebe Dissolved into a Nilus, or his Age Drowned in her own Tears, 12mo.; Meditations and Resolutions, 12mo.; Life and Death of Diogenes; the Pride of Honour; the Female Glory, or the Life of the Virgin Mary, 8vo. This book gave great offence to the puritans. Honour and Virtue triumphing over the Grave exemplified in the Life and Death of Henry Lord Stafford, 4to. He died about 1641.—Wood.

STAHL (George Ernest), an able chemist, was born at Anspach in 1660. When the university of Hall was founded in 1694 he was appointed medical professor, in which office he gained great reputation. In 1716 he was invited to Berlin, and made counsellor of the court and physician to the king. He died there in 1734. It was his opinion that a physician does not practise well who does not minutely observe the effects of the soul upon the body. But Stahl was more eminent in chemistry than in medicine, because he was less fanciful. He made many important discoveries, and his works are very valuable. The principal are, 1. Experimenta et Observationes Chemicæ et Physicæ, 8vo.; 2. Theoria Medica vera, 4to.; 3. Opusculum Chymico-Physico Medicum, 4to.; 4. Treatise on Sulphur, in German, 12mo.; 5. Fundamenta Chymicæ Dogmaticæ et Experimentalis, 3 vols. 4to.; 6. Negotium Olioform, 4to.; 7. Commentarium in Metallurgicum Beccheri.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

STAHREMBERG (Conrad Balthasar, count de), governor of Vienna during the time it was besieged by the Turks in 1683. He acquired great glory by the gallant defence which he made of that place. He died at Rome in 1687.—Moreri.

STAHREMBERG (Guido-Balde, count de), another Austrian general, was born in 1637, and died in 1737. He displayed great skill and bravery at the battle of Zenta, and in 1710 gained that of Saragossa.—Ibid.

STALERT (Adrian), a landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1580, and died in 1660. His pictures are faithful representations of nature, and the figures pleasingly disposed.—Houbraken.

STAMPART (Francis), a portrait painter, was born at Antwerp in 1675, and died in 1750. He settled at Vienna, where he was patronized by the emperor, who made him his cabinet painter.—Pilkington.

STANHOPE (George), an eminent divine, was born at Hertford, in Derbyshire, in 1660, and educated at Eton, from whence he was elected to King's college, Cambridge, where he proceeded through all his degrees. In 1688 he was presented to the rectory of Tewling, in Hertfordshire, and the year following to the vicarage of Lewisham, in Kent. He was soon after appointed chaplain to William and Mary, and in 1701 preached the Boyle's lecture. In 1703 he was presented to the rectory of Deptford, in Kent, and in the same year promoted to the deanry of Canterbury. His life and labours were most exemplary, and he united in an eminent degree the scholar, the christian, and the gentleman. He died in 1728. His works are, 1. a Paraphrase and Comment upon the Epistles and Gospels, 4 vols. 8vo.; 2. Sermons at Boyle's Lecture, 8vo.; 3. Miscellaneous Sermons, 2 vols.; 4. Translations of Thomas à Kempis, Rochefoucault's Maxims, St. Augustine's Meditations, Bishop Andrews's Devotions, Charron on Wisdom, Parsons's Christian Directory, Epictetus's Morals, &c.—Todd's Deans of Canterbury.

STANHOPE (James, earl of), a celebrated English nobleman, was descended from an ancient family of that name in Nottinghamshire, and was born in 1673. He entered early into the army, and distinguished himself with so much bravery at the siege of Namur in 1695 that king William gave him a company and the rank of colonel. In 1705 he served as brigadier-general under the earl of Peterborough at the siege of Barcelona. He afterwards contributed to the victories of Almanza and Saragossa, but being intrusted with the defence of Eriuega he was obliged to surrender it after a gallant resistance to the duke de Vendome. George I. appointed him secretary of state, and in 1714 sent him ambassador to Vienna. In 1717 he was appointed first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, and afterwards created a peer. He died in 1721.—English Peerage.

STANHOPE (Philip Dormer), earl of Chesterfield, was born in 1694. He received his education at Trinity hall, Cambridge, after which he went abroad, and on his return to England became a member of the house of commons. On the death of his father in 1726 he succeeded to the title, and became a particular favourite of George II., who made him high steward of the household and knight of the garter. In 1745 he was appointed lord lieutenant of Ireland, from whence he returned in 1748. He died in 1773. His lordship was a man of brilliant accomplishments, tainted with great vanity and infidelity. He wrote some papers in the World, and several poetical pieces, but he is principally known as the author of the celebrated Letters to his Son, published with his other works, in 2 vols. 4to. and 3 vols. 8vo.—Life prefixed to his works.

STANISLAUS I. (Leozinski), king of Poland, was the son of the grand treasurer of that kingdom, and born in 1677. In 1704 he was deputed by the assembly at Warsaw to Charles XII. of Sweden, who had just conquered Poland. That monarch caused him to be crowned king at Warsaw in 1705, but when Charles was defeated in 1709 Stanislaus was obliged to leave his kingdom. On the death of Augustus in 1733 he returned in hopes of being acknowledged, but the power of the emperor of Germany and the empress of Russia prevailed against him, and he was obliged again to fly. He died in consequence of his night-gown taking fire in 1766. He was the author of different pieces printed in 4 vols. 8vo. under the title of "The Works of a Beneficent Philosopher."—Novv. Diß. Hist.

STANISLAUS-AUGUSTUS-PONIATOWSKY, king of Poland, was the son of a gentleman in Lithuania, and born in 1732. After receiving a liberal education he went on his travels and resided a considerable time in England, where he became intimate with sir Charles Hanbury Williams, whom he accompanied in his embassy to Petersburg. At this court the elegance of his person and accomplishments recommended him to the favour of the grand duchess, afterwards Catharine II., which gave such offence to the empress Elizabeth that she complained to Augustus III. king of Poland, by whom he was recalled. On the death of that monarch in 1763 Catharine interposed her influence so effectually in behalf of her favourite that he was elected king of Poland, to the great dislike of the nobility of that kingdom. He began his reign with moderation, but having given his sanction to the measure of allowing the dissidents or protestants a share in the legislature, he incurred the hatred of the catholics, who conspired against him, and he was carried off from Warsaw in 1771 by forty persons in disguise. On the road the party lost their way, and the king being left alone with a single soldier, the man was prevailed upon to conduct him back safe to his palace. In 1787 he had an interview with Catharine, and accompanied her in a tour on the borders of Persia. But in 1791 her armies and those of Prussia entered Poland, and made themselves masters of Wilna and Warsaw. Stanislaus was forced to resign his crown, and Poland was divided between Russia, Austria, and Prussia: The unfortunate monarch retired first to Grodno, from whence he was called to Petersburg, where he died in 1798.—Tooke's Hist. Catharine.

STANLEY (Thomas), a learned writer, was the son of sir Thomas Stanley, knight, author of two volumes of poems, and was born in Hertfordshire in 1644. He received his education at Pembroke hall, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and then went on his travels. After his return he entered of the Middle Temple, but did not follow the law. He died in 1678. His works are, 1. the History of Philosophy and Lives of Philosophers, folio. This has been translated into Latin and French. 2. An edition of Ælian's Various History, 8vo.; 3. an edition of Æschylus, with a Latin Version, fol.—Gen. Diß.

STANLEY (John), an eminent musician, was born in London in 1713. He became blind at the age of two years, and at seven he began to learn music, in which he made such a proficiency that he was placed under Dr. Green, and at the early age of eleven obtained the place of organist of Allhallows, Bread-street. In 1723 he was chosen organist of St. Andrew, Holborn, and in 1734 was elected by the benchers of the Temple their organist. In 1779 he was appointed master of the king's band of musicians. He died in 1786. His compositions are in the first style of taste and judgment.—Europe. Mag.

STANNINA (Gerard), an historical painter, was born at Florence in 1354. He was the disciple of Venetiano, and employed by the king of Spain. He died in 1403.—Pitt.

STANYHURST (Richard), a Roman catholic divine, was born at Dublin in 1543, and educated at University college, Oxford, after which he went abroad, and entered into orders, and became chaplain to the archduke Albert, governor of the Low Countries. He died at Brussels in 1618. He wrote, 1. De Rebus in Hibernia gestis; 2. Vita St. Patricii; 3. Harmonia seu Catena dialectica in Porphyrium; 4. Translation of the four first books of the Æneis into English. He was uncle to archbishop Usher.—Wood.

STAPLEDON (Walter), an English prelate, was a native of Devonshire, and bred at Oxford, after which his merits recommended him to the court, and he was made bishop of Exeter and treasurer of England. He founded Exeter college, Oxford, and was beleagued by the insurgents of London at the Cross, in Cheapside, in 1326.—Prince.

STAPLETON (Thomas), an English divine of the Roman church, was born at Hensfield, in Sussex, and educated at New college, Oxford. In the reign of Mary he obtained a canonry in Chichester cathedral, but in that of Elizabeth he went abroad and settled at Louvain, where he was appointed professor in divinity, and dean of Hilverbeck. He died in 1598. His works were published at Paris in 4 vols. folio, in 1620.—Wood.

STAPYLTON (sir Robert), a poet, was born at Carleton, in Yorkshire, of a catholic family, but after his return from Douay he turned protestant, and became gentleman usher to the prince of Wales, afterwards Charles II. He received the honour of knighthood from Charles I., and was with him at the battle of Edgehill. After the restoration his services were rewarded. He died in 1669. He published a translation of Juvenal, and some Plays.—Ibid.

STATIRA, daughter of Darius Codomanus, was taken by Alexander the Great after the battle of Issus, and became the wife of that conqueror, on whose decease she was put to death by Roxana, B. C. 323.—Plutarch.

STATIUS (Publius Papinius), a Latin poet, was a native of Naples, and lived at Rome in the reign of Domitian, whose favour he obtained by flattery. He died about A. D. 100. There remain of Statius two heroic poems, Thebais in 12 books, and the Achilles. The best editions of them are that of Barthius, 3 vols. 4to. 1664; that of Leyden, 8vo. 1671, and the Delphin, 1685, 2 vols. 4to.—Biog. Classica.

STAVELEY (Thomas), a learned lawyer and antiquary, was born at Cuffington, in Leicestershire, and educated at Peter-house, Cambridge, after which he entered of the Inner Temple, and was called to the bar. He was the author of the Romish Horse-leech, or a Discovery of the enormous Exactions of the Court of Rome, 8vo.; and of the History of Churches, 8vo. This last is a curious book, and was reprinted by Davies. The author died in 1683.—Gent. Mag.

STAUNTON (sir George Leonard), was born in Galway, in Ireland. He studied medicine at Montpellier, where he took his doctor's degree; after which he settled in London, and translated some of the Medical Essays of Dr. Stock of Vienna. About 1762 he went to Grenada, where he acquired a good fortune. He also became secretary to lord Macartney, governor of the island, and having studied the law he discharged the office of attorney-general. On the capture of Grenada by the French he returned to England, and when lord Macartney was appointed governor of Madras he accompanied him as secretary, in which capacity he displayed great abilities in the treaty with Tippoo Sulthan. On his return to England he received a pension from the India company, besides which he was created a baronet, and received the honorary degree of doctor of laws from the university of Oxford. When lord Macartney went out ambassador to China he was again accompanied by sir George as secretary of legation. Of this voyage he published an elaborate and highly-interesting account in 2 vols. 4to. and 3 vols. 8vo. Sir George died in London Jan. 12, 1801.—Monthly Mag. Pub. Characters, vol. i.

STEBBING (Henry), a learned English divine. He distinguished himself in the Bangorian controversy against Hoadley, and afterwards attacked Warburton's Divine Legation. He had also a dispute with Dr. James Foster on the subject of heresy. Dr. Stebbing became chancellor of the diocese of Salisbury, and died in 1768. His other works are Sermons on Practical Christianity, 2 vols.; Sermons at Boyle's Lecture, 8vo.; Collection of Tracts, 8vo.—Maritime.

STEDMAN (John Gabriel), was born in Scotland in 1745. He was the author of an interesting "Narrative of an Expedition against the revolted Negroes of Surinam," in 2 vols. 4to., being an account of military transactions in which he was himself concerned. He died at Tiverton, in Devonshire, in 1797.—Gent. Mag.

STEELE (sir Richard), a celebrated writer, was a native of Dublin, where his father, who was a barrister, acted in the capacity of secretary to the duke of Ormond. Our author received his education at the Charter-house in London, after which he obtained an ensigncy in the guards, and while in that service wrote a little book called "the Christian Hero," which he dedicated to lord Cutts, who appointed him his secretary, and procured him a captain's commission in the fusiliers. In 1702 he commenced dramatic writer, in his comedy of the "Funeral, or Grief à la Mode," which had great success. This play was soon followed by the Tender Husband, and the Lying Lovers; but his best performance in this line was the Confiscated Lovers, acted in 1722. In 1709 he began The Tatler, a periodical paper, under the name of Isaac Bickerstaff, and in which he had the able assistance of Addison, as he also had in the Spectator and Guardian: the first commenced in 1711 and the last in 1713. His reputation as a writer procured him the place of commissioner of the stamp office, which he resigned on being chosen member for Stockbridge, but was expelled the house soon after for writing a paper called the Englishman and the Crisis. On the accession of George I. he received the honour of knighthood, and was appointed surveyor of the stables at Hampton-court and governor of the royal company of comedians. He was also returned to parliament for Boroughbridge, in Yorkshire and made one of the commissioners of the forfeited estates in Scotland. He died at Llangunnor, in Carmarthenshire, in 1729. Sir Richard was a gay thoughtless character, and frequently embarrassed in difficulties from which he was extricated by Addison and other friends.

STEEN (John), a painter, was born at Leyden in 1636. He was the disciple of Brouwer and Van Goyen, and painted burlesque subjects with admirable humour. He died in 1689.—Houbraken.

STEENWICK (Henry), a Flemish painter, was born in 1550, and was the pupil of John de Vries. He excelled in painting architectural subjects, or the insides of churches and gothic buildings. He died in 1603. His son was a good painter of portraits, and died at London in 1640.—De Piles.

STEEVENS (George), an ingenious gentleman, was born in London, and educated at Kington school, and afterwards at King's college, Cambridge. In 1766 he published twenty of the Plays of Shakespeare, with notes, 4 vols. 8vo. This work produced an intimacy between Mr. Steevens and Dr. Johnson, the result of which was a union of their labours as commentators on Shakespeare. Their united edition appeared in 1773, in 10 vols. 8vo. Twenty years afterwards Mr. Steevens published a still more elegant and accurate edition of the great English dramatist, in 15 vols. 8vo. He also revised the proofs of Boydell's magnificent text of Shakespeare. Mr. Steevens had a noble library, and a fine collection of pictures and prints. He died at Hampstead in 1800.—Gent. Mag.

STEFANESCHI (John Baptist), an historical painter, was born at Florence in 1582. He painted sacred subjects in miniature for the grand duke of Tuscany, and died in 1659.—Pilgrimage.

STELLA (James), a painter, was born at Lyons in 1596, and died at Paris in 1647. He was employed first by Cosmo de Medici, grand duke of Florence, and afterwards by Louis XIII., king of France, who honoured him with the order of St. Michael, and a pension. His pictures are mostly pastoral subjects, and the sports of children. His brother Francis was a good artist, but did not equal James. He died in 1661.—ib.

STELLINI (James), an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Forlì in 1699, and died a professor at Padua in 1770. His works, which are wholly on ethics, were printed in Latin at Padua in 1778, 4 vols. 4to.

STENO (Nicholas), an anatomist, was born at Copenhagen in 1638. He studied under Bartholin, and afterwards travelled into Germany, France, Holland, and Italy. Ferdinand II., grand duke of Tuscany, appointed him his principal physician, and in 1669 he renounced the protestant religion. He also became tutor to the young prince Cosmo, and embracing the ecclesiastical state was made a bishop by the pope, who sent him with the title of vicar-apostolic to Germany. He died at Schwerin in 1686. An account of his Anatomical Observations and Discoveries was printed at Leyden in 1680, 12mo. His other works are, Elementorum Myologiae Specimen; Discourse on the Anatomy of the brain, in Latin, 12mo.—Haller Bill. Anat.

STEPHEN (St.), the first martyr of Christianity, was one of the seventy deacons, and had been the disciple of Gamaliel. He was stoned to death by the Jews, A.D. 33, on a pretended charge of blasphemy.—Acts of the Apost.

STEPHEN of Byzantium, a grammarian and lexicographer of the 6th century, who wrote a Geographical Dictionary, of which there remains a bad abridgment, made by Hermolaus in the reign of Justinian. This was printed at Leyden in Greek and Latin, in 1694, folio.

STEPHEN, king of England, was born in 1105, and crowned in 1135. He was the third son of Stephen, earl of Blois, by Adela, daughter of William the conqueror. Maud, daughter of Henry I. and wife of Henry IV. emperor of Germany, was the legitimate heir to the throne, but Stephen taking advantage of her absence, obtained possession of it. In 1139 Maud landed in England, and in 1141 took Stephen prisoner at the battle of Lincoln; but he was exchanged the same year for Robert, earl of Gloucester, illegitimate brother to the empress. Maud, after many unsuccessful engagements, quitted the kingdom in 1147, and two years afterwards her son Henry, by Jeffrey Plantagenet, earl of Anjou, claimed the crown, but in 1155 a peace was concluded between the rivals, by which it was settled that Stephen should enjoy the crown for his life, and that Henry should be his successor. Stephen died the year following, aged 50.—Rapin.

STEPHEN (St.), king of Hungary, succeeded his father Geisa in 947, and died at Buda in 1038. He reformed the manners of his subjects, enacted excellent laws, and introduced Christianity among them. His queen Gisela aided him in all his good works.—Moreri.

STEPHEN I. pope, ascended the pontifical chair after Lucius in 253. He had a difference with St. Cyprian and Firmilian about rebaptizing repenting heretics, which practice the pope condemned. He died a martyr in the reign of Valerian in 257.—Platina.

STEPHEN II. was a native of Rome, and elected pope in 752. Astolphus, king of the Lombards, having menaced the city of Rome, Stephen implored the aid of Constantine Copronymus, emperor of the east, but he being then engaged in war, recommended his cause to Pepin, king of France, who marched into Italy, and deprived Astolphus of the exarchate of Ravenna and several cities, which he gave to the pope, and thus laid the foundation of the temporal sovereignty of the church of Rome. Stephen died in 757. There were some other popes of this name, but not worth recording.—ibid.

STEPHENS (Henry), the father of the celebrated family of printers, was born at Paris, and died at Lyons in 1520. He printed several books, the most remarkable of which was a Psalter, in five columns, published in 1509. His widow married Simon de Colinæus, the celebrated printer, who carried on the business till his death in 1547.

STEPHENS (Robert), son of the above, was born at Paris in 1503. He received a learned education, and conducted the concern with Colinæus. In 1539 he was appointed printer to the king, on whose death he retired to Geneva, where he died in 1559. He had given offence to the Sorbonne by printing a Latin Bible with the notes of Calvin, and therefore did not conclude himself safe in France. He was so exact in printing the works which issued from his press, as to expose the sheets in public for examination, offering rewards for the detection of errors. His Hebrew Bible, 8 vols. in 16mo. 1544; and his Greek Testament, 1546, 2 vols. 16mo, are very scarce and valuable. The last is commonly called O Mirificam, from the first words of the preface. Stephens compiled a great work, entitled, Thesaurus Lingua Latina, 4 vols. folio, and he wrote an Apology in Latin for his Bible which had been censured by the Sorbonne. His brother Charles studied medicine, and took his doctor's degree in that faculty. He accompanied Lazarus de Baif on his embassy into Germany; but he continued the family profession, and became printer to the king. He died in 1564. He printed. 1. De Re Rustica, 2 vols. 4to.; 2. De Vasculis, 8vo.; 3. An Historical, Geographical, and Poetical Dictionary, &c.

STEPHENS (Henry), the most learned of this ingenious family, was the son of Robert, and born at Paris in 1528. He was accounted the best Grecian of his time, and published beautiful and correct editions of the best Greek writers. He also compiled a Thesaurus of the Greek language, 4 vols. folio, the printing of which proved his ruin by his assistant Scapula's publishing an abridgment of it. Stephens, having written a satire against the monks, was obliged to fly from Paris. He died in a hospital at Lyons in 1598. Besides the above works he was the author of a Version of Anacreon, in Latin verse; Corrections of Cicero; De Origine mendorum; Juris civilis fontes et rivi; Apology for Herodotus, 3 vols. 8vo. &c. His son, Paul Stephens, carried on the printing business at Geneva, where he died in 1627, leaving a son, Anthony, who was the last printer of his name. He turned Roman catholic, and went to Paris, where he became printer to the king; but managing his affairs ill, he was reduced to poverty, and died in a hospital in 1674, aged 80.—Hist. of the family of Stephens, by Maittaire

STEPHENS (John), an English gentleman of talents. He received his education at Douay, and being zealously attached to the house of Stuart, followed king James, and had a captain's commission when that prince invaded Ireland. He afterwards settled in London, and published some works, the principal of which are, a Continuation of Dugdale's Monasticon; and a Dictionary, English and Spanish, folio. He died in 1726.—Gen. Dict.

STEPHENS (Robert), a learned antiquary, was born at Eastington, in Gloucestershire. He was educated at Lincoln college, Oxford, in 1681, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple, and was called to the bar. He died in 1732. He published lord Bacon's Letters, with curious notes.—Anecd. of Bouquet.

STEPNEY (George), an English poet and statesman, was born in Westminster in 1663. He received his education at Westminster school, and Trinity college, Cambridge, where he contracted a friendship with Charles Montague, afterwards earl of Halifax, by which means he was employed on several embassies, and lastly appointed a commissioner of trade. He died in 1707. He translated part of Juvenal, and wrote some poetical pieces of moderate merit.—Johnson's Poets.

STERNE (Laurence), was born at Clonmell, in Ireland, in 1713. He received his education at Halifax, in Yorkshire, from whence he was sent to Jesus college, Cambridge, and having taken his degrees entered into orders. His uncle, Dr. Jacques Sterne, prebendary of Durham, procured him the living of Sutton, and about 1741 a prebend in York cathedral. He afterwards obtained the rectory of Stillington in the same county. He died of a decline at London in 1768, and was buried in the church-yard belonging to St. George, Hanover-square. He is known as the author of a strange kind of romance called Tristram Shandy; a Sentimental Journey in France; Sermons, under the name of Yorick, and Letters. There are some pathetic tales in his works, and a considerable portion of eccentricity and obscenity. Dr. Ferriar has produced a great number of plagiarisms by this author, from Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, bishop Hall's works, and other old books.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

STERNHOLD (Thomas), an English poet, was born in Hampshire, and educated first at Winchester school, and next at Oxford. He became groom of the robes to Henry VIII. who at his death bequeathed him one hundred marks. He continued in the same office under Edward VI. and was in some esteem at court for his poetical abilities. He turned into English metre fifty-one of David's Psalms, the remainder were done by Hopkins, Norton, and others. Though never received by authority, they continued to be universally sung in churches, till superseded by the version of Tate and Brady. Sternhold died in 1549.—Wood.

STESICHORUS, was a native of Himera, in Sicily. His name was originally Tyfias, which he changed to Stesichorus, on account of his being the first who taught the chorus to dance to the lyre. He was a man of the first rank among his fellow-citizens; and was distinguished as a statesman. He died at Catana, in Sicily, aged 80.

STEVENS (George Alexander), a dramatic writer and performer, was born in London, and bred to a mechanical business, which he quitted for the stage, but his acting was very indifferent. At length he composed a strange medley of humour and ribaldry, which he called a Lecture on Heads, and which produced him a sum sufficient for the remainder of his life. After travelling over the three kingdoms and America, he disposed of his lecture to Lee Lewes, and died a lunatic in 1784. He wrote some farces, songs, a novel called Tom Fool, 2 vols. 12mo.; and the Dramatic History of Master Edward. This last was intended to ridicule his old friend Shuter.—Europ. Mag. vol. vi.

STEVENS (Alexander), an English architect, who erected a great number of bridges. That over the Liffey, in Dublin, the locks on the grand canal in Ireland, and the aqueduct over the Lune at Lancaster, are monuments of his skill. He died at an advanced age in 1796.—Gent. Mag.

STEVENS (Palamedes), an eminent painter, was born at London in 1607, but his father was a Fleming. He studied painting at Delft, and acquired great excellence in the representation of battles and encampments. He died in 1638. His brother Anthony was a good painter of conversations and portraits. He died in 1680.—Vartius.

STEVIN (Simon), or Stevinus, a mathematician of Bruges, who died in 1633. He was master of mathematics to prince Maurice of Nassau, and inspector of dykes, in Holland. He was the inventor of the sailing chariots made use of in that country. He wrote several mathematical books in Dutch, which were translated into Latin by Snellius, in 2 vols. folio.—Moreri.

STEWART (Matthew), an eminent mathematician, was born at Rothsay, in the isle of Bute, in 1717. After receiving an education under his father, who was minister of that parish, he was sent to Glasgow, where he became a student of divinity. He afterwards studied mathematics at Edinburgh under Maclaurin, whom he succeeded in his professorship; on which occasion he published his General Theorems. In 1761 appeared his Tracts, Physical and Mathematical, in which he proposed to deduce a theory of the moon, and to determine the sun's distance from the earth. He was also the author of a Treatise on the Sun's Distance, and one entitled "Propositiones more veterum demonstratae." He died in 1785.—Encyclop. Brit.

STIVELIUS (Michael), a protestant divine and mathematician, was born at Effingen, in Germany. He published, in his native language, a Treatise on Algebra, and another on the Calendar. He died at Jena in 1567, aged 58.—Moreri.

STILLINGFLEET (Edward), a learned prelate, was born at Cranbourn, in Dorsetshire, in 1635. He was educated at St John's college, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow in 1653. In 1657 he was presented to the rectory of Sutton, by his friend sir Roger Burgoyne, to whom he dedicated, in 1662, his great work, entitled, "Origines Sacrae, or a Rational Account of the Grounds of Natural and Revealed Religion," 4to. It was afterwards published in folio, and has since appeared from the Oxford press, in 2 vols. 8vo. He was soon after chosen preacher of the Rolls chapel, and in 1665 was presented to the rectory of St. Andrew's, Holborn. In 1670 he was made canon-residentary of St. Paul's, and on the promotion of Dr. Sancroft succeeded him in the deanry of that cathedral. He wrote and preached with great ability against popery in the reign of James II. and in 1689 was made bishop of Worcester. He died in 1699. He was a man of profound learning, a close and energetic writer, and an excellent divine. All his works have been collected in 6 vols. folio.—Wood. Gen. Dict.

STILLINGFLEET (Benjamin), a naturalist and poet, was grandson of the preceding, and educated at Norwich school, from whence he removed to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. He afterwards travelled into Italy, and on his return to England obtained the place of barrack-master at Kensington. He died in 1771, aged 69. Mr. Stillingfleet wrote, 1. The Calendar of Flora, 1761; 2. Miscellaneous Travels, 8vo.; 3. The Principles and Powers of Harmony, 4to.; 4. Poems in Dodley's Collection, &c.—Gen. Mag. Dict.

STOBÆUS (John), a Greek author of the fifth century. He made a collection of extracts from ancient poets and philosophers; which was published at Paris in 1623, 4to. and translated into Latin by Conrad Gesner, in folio, Geneva, 1608.—Moreri.

STOCK (Christian), a learned German, was born at Camburg in 1672. He became a professor at Jena, where he died in 1733. His works are, 1. Disputationes de penis Hebraeorum capitalibus; 2. Calvinus Lingua Sanctæ veteris Testamentis; 3. Clavis Linguæ Sanctæ Novi Testamenti.—Moreri.

STOCKADE (Nicholas de Hele), a painter, was born at Nimeguen in 1614. He studied under Ryccaert, and painted historical subjects and portraits in a good taste.—Houbraken.

STOPLER (John), a mathematician, was born in Swabia in 1452. He was professor at Tubingen, where he was greatly respected for some years, but lost his reputation by foretelling a great deluge to happen in 1524, which raised a terror over all Europe. He wrote several books on mathematics and astrology, and died in 1531.—Moreri.

STONE (Nicholas), an eminent statuary in the reign of James and Charles I. He executed a number of monuments, the most considerable of which is one of the Bedford family, for which he received 120*l*. He was employed as master mason in building the Banqueting-house, Whitehall. The great gate and front of St. Mary's, Oxford, were also built by him. He died in 1647, aged 61. His sons, Nicholas and Henry, were excellent statuaries. The latter was also a good painter, and copied some fine pictures after Vandyck. He died in 1653.—Granger. Vertue.

STONE (John), an English painter in the reigns of Charles I. and II. He studied under Crofs, and spent many years abroad, where he improved himself in several languages. He died in London in 1653. He was famous as a copier, having great skill in imitation.—Vertue.

STONE (Edmund), an eminent mathematician, was a native of Scotland. His father was gardener to the duke of Argyle, and his education was of course confined within very narrow limits. His own application made up the deficiency, and at the age of eighteen, with no other assistance than a little received from his grace's butler, he made himself master of arithmetic, algebra, and geometry. He afterwards applied to the French and Latin languages, in which he made such a progress as astonished the duke, who drew him from his obscurity and placed him in a respectable situation. He died about 1750. He published a Mathematical Dictionary; a Treatise on Fluxions; and some other works.

STONEHOUSE (sir James), a pious physician and divine, was born at Tubney, near Abingdon, in Berkshire, in 1716. He received his education first at Winchester school, and next at St. John's college, Oxford. Having studied medicine under Dr. Nicholls, he went abroad, and on his return settled at Coventry, from whence he removed to Northampton, where he founded the county infirmary. After practising twenty years, he entered into orders, and obtained the lectureship of All Saints, Bristol, to which were afterwards added the livings of Great and Little Cheverel, in Wiltshire. He had been for several years of his life an infidel, and had written a pamphlet against revealed religion, which reached three editions; but by reading Dr. Doddridge's Rise and Progress of Religion, he was converted. He was a most exemplary divine, and an eloquent preacher. He succeeded to the title of baronet in 1791, and died at Bristol in 1795. He wrote Friendly Advice to a Patient, and several religious pamphlets.—Stonehouse's Letters, published by Stedman, 1800, 12mo.

STORACE (Stephen), a favourite musician and composer for the English theatre. His music in "The Haunted Tower," "Siege of Belgrade," "No Song no Supper," as well as several pieces composed for the Italian opera, have been well received by the public. He was born in 1763, and died in 1796.—Gent. Mag.

STORCK (Abraham), a Dutch painter, who died in 1708. He painted marine pieces, and views of shipping in harbours, with great numbers of figures, in an excellent style. He had a brother who was a good landscape painter, and drew several views on the Rhine.—Houbraken.

STOW (John), an eminent antiquary, was born in 1525. He is supposed to have been brought up a taylor, which was his father's business. About 1560 he began to gather materials for his Chronicle, in which he was encouraged and assisted by archbishop Parker. The first edition of this book appeared in 1573, 8vo. In 1598 he published his Survey of London, 4to.; and in 1600 his Flores Historiarum, or Annals of England, which is an enlargement of his Chronicle. He was reduced to great poverty, and had two briefs from James I. to collect charity for support in his old age. He died in 1604.—Life prefixed to Stow's edition of his Survey.

STRABO, a philosopher and historian of antiquity, was born at Amasia, a city of Cappadocia, and flourished in the reigns of Augustus and Tiberius. He was educated under Xenarchus, the peripatetic, but afterwards he embraced the stoical opinions. Of all his works only his Geography is extant, the first edition of which is that of 1574, folio; and the best that of Xylander, Paris, 1620, and of Amsterdam, 1707, 2 vols. folio.—Vossius.

STRADA (Famianus), a famous jesuit, who was a native of Rome, and died there in 1649, aged 78. He was professor of the belles-lettres a long time in his society, and wrote the History of the Wars in the Low Countries, folio; the Latin of which is remarkable for its purity. Strada was also the author of Præfines Academica.—Moreri.

STRADA (John or Stradanus), a Flemish painter, was born at Bruges in 1536, and died at Florence in 1604. He painted historical subjects taken from the scriptures, also hunting scenes.—Dr. Pilei.

STRAETEN (N. Vander), a Dutch painter, was born in 1680. He travelled through a great part of Europe and was considered one of the best landscape painters of his time. He led, however, a dissipated life, and fell a victim to his intemperance.—Houbraken.
3 M

STRAFFORD (earl of). See WENTWORTH.
STRANAN (William), an eminent printer, was born at Edinburgh in 1715. After serving his apprenticeship in his native city, he came to London where, solely by his application and integrity, he raised himself to affluence. In 1770 he purchased a share of the patent office of king's printer, and in 1775 was elected member of parliament for Malmesbury, in Wiltshire; but in the succeeding parliament he was returned for Wotton Bassett. At his death in 1785 he bequeathed 1000*l.* to the company of stationers; the interest to be divided, in annuities of 5*l.* each, amongst infirm old printers.—Cent. Mag.

STRAIGHT (John), rector of Findon, in Sussex, to which he was presented by Magdalen college, Oxford, of which society he was fellow. He was author of some poems in Doddsley's Collection; and 2 vols. of his Sermons were published after his death, which happened about 1740.—Cent. Biog. Dict.

STRANGE (sir Robert), an eminent engraver, was born in one of the Orkney islands, in 1721. He served his time under Mr. Cooper at Edinburgh, and in 1751 visited London, where he applied to historical engraving, in which he arrived at great excellence. In 1760 he went to Italy, where, on account of his abilities, he was chosen a member of the academies of Rome, Florence, and Bologna, and professor of the royal academy at Parma; and at Paris he was made a member of the royal academy of painting. In 1787 he received the honour of knighthood. He died in 1792.—Ibid.

STRAUCHUS (Giles), a German divine and mathematician, was born at Wittenberg in 1632. He studied at Leipzig, and afterwards became professor and doctor in divinity at his native place. He next accepted an invitation from Dantzic to be rector of the college and professor of theology; but owing to the disputes between the catholics and protestants he went for Hamburg, but was arrested on the road by order of the elector of Brandenburg, for something said in his preaching. He at last recovered his liberty, and died in 1682. His principal works are, 1. Breviarium Chronologicum; this has been translated into English by Sault; Breviarium Historicum; Geographia Mathematica; Doctrina Astrorum Mathematica, &c.—Moreux.

STREATER (Robert), an English painter, was born in 1624. At the restoration he was made serjeant painter to the king. He died of the stone in 1680.—Granger.

STREEK (Jurian Van), a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1632, and died in 1678. He excelled in painting portraits and still life. His son Henry was a good historical painter. He died in 1713, aged 54.—Houbraken.

STRIGELIUS (Victorinus), a protestant divine, was born at Kaufbier, in Suabia, in 1524. He was one of the first disciples of Luther, and taught divinity and logic at Leipzig, but having opposed some of the lutheran tenets, he was deposed and imprisoned. On recovering his liberty, he went to Heidelberg, where he obtained a professorship, and died in 1569. He wrote Notes on the Old and New Testament, and some other works.

STROBELBERGER (John Stephen), a physician, was born at Gratz in Styria, and took his doctor's degree in medicine at Montpellier in 1615. He afterwards became physician at the baths of Carlsbad, where he died in 1630. He wrote, 1. Calix Politica-Medica Descriptio, 12mo; 2. Historia Montpelienensis, 12mo.—Moreux.

STRONG (Joseph), a singular genius, was a native of Carlisle, and though blind from his infancy, obtained a great skill in mechanics. When young, he constructed an organ for himself, and was a good performer on that instrument. He made all his own wearing apparel, and a number of curious mechanical figures and machines. He died at Carlisle in 1798.—Monthly Mag.

STROZZI (Titus and Hercules), two Latin poets of Ferrara, were father and son. Their poems, which were printed in 1 vol. 8vo. at Venice in 1513, consist of elegies and other pieces. Titus died about 1502, at the age of 80. Hercules was killed by a rival in 1506.—Moreux.

STROZZI (Cyriaco), a peripatetic philosopher, was born at Florence in 1504. He was successively professor of Greek and philosophy at Florence, Bologna, and Pisa. He died in 1565. He added two books in Greek and Latin to Aristotle's Treatise de Republica. His sister, Laurantia Strozi, became a nun, and died in 1591. She understood the Greek and Latin languages, and wrote hymns in Latin on the feasts of the church.—Ibid.

STROZZI (Julius), an Italian poet, who died about 1636. He wrote a poem on the origin of Venice, under the title of Veneta Edificata, 1624, folio. There was another of this name, who died in 1654. He wrote Idyls and Sonnets.—Tiraboschi.

STRUENSEE (Count), a physician, who by his abilities and address gained the favour of the king of Denmark, and was ennobled and made minister of state. The young queen, Caroline Matilda, placed particular confidence in Struensee; whose ruin being determined on by the queen-mother, a party was formed, and he was arrested with his friend Brandt, and beheaded at Copenhagen in 1772. The queen was confinied in a prison till demanded by the English court, on which she was delivered up and removed to Zell, in Hanover, where she died in 1776.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

STRUDEL (Peter), an historical painter, was born in the Tyrol in 1680. He resided at Vienna, where he adorned the churches and palaces with a number of fine pictures. He died in 1717.—Pillington.

STROTT (Joseph), an English antiquary, who died in 1787. He compiled a Dictionary of Engravers, 4to.; and an Historical Treatise on the Manners and Customs of the Antient Inhabitants of England, 2 vols. 4to.—Gent. Mag.

STRAUVIUS (George Adam), a learned German, was born at Magdeburg in 1619. He became professor of jurisprudence at Jena, and counsellor to the duke of Saxony. He died in 1692. The principal of his works is his Syntagma Juris Civilis.—Moreri.

STRAUVIUS (Burcard Gotthelf), son of the preceding, was born at Weimar in 1671. He settled at Jena, where he followed the profession of his father, and died in 1738. His works are, 1. Antiquitatum Romanorum Syntagma, 4to.; 2. Bibliotheca Historica Selecta, 8vo.; 3. Syntagma Juris Publici, 4to.; 4. Syntagma Historiæ Germanicæ, 2 vols. fol.; 5. A History of Germany, in that language; 6. Historia Misnensis, 8vo.—Ibid.

STRUYS (John), a Dutch traveller, who went to Muscovy, Tartary, Persia, and the Indies, of which an account has been published in 4to. He died about 1680.—Ibid.

STRYPE (John), an English divine and historian, was born in London, and educated at Catherine hall, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M. A. In 1669 he was presented to the rectory of Theydon-bois, in Essex, which he resigned the same year for the rectory of Low Layton. He was also lecturer of Hackney, where he died in 1737. He published the Lives of archbishops Cranmer, Parker, Grindal, and Whitgift, folio; bishop Aylmer, sir Thomas Smith, and sir John Cheke, 8vo.; also Ecclesiastical Memorials, 3 vols.; and Annals of the Reformation, 4 vols. folio. He was also the editor of Lightfoot's works.—Gen. Dict.

STUART (Arabella), see Scymour.

STUART (James), a celebrated architect, commonly called Athenian Stuart, was born in London in 1713. His mother was left a widow in poor circumstances, with four children, of whom James was the eldest, who when very young maintained the rest of the family by painting fans. Having lost his mother, and placed his brother and sisters in good situations, he went to Italy, and forming an intimacy with Mr. Revett, the architect, they went together to Athens, where they made a number of drawings of the remains of antient architecture. In 1762 the first volume appeared of "The Antiquities of Athens," to which 2 volumes more were added after the death of Stuart. This ingenious man, on his return to England, was appointed surveyor to Greenwich hospital. He died in 1788, aged 76.—Europ. Mag.

STUART (Gilbert), an historical writer, was born at Edinburgh in 1742. He received his education at that university, where his father was professor. At the age of little more than twenty he wrote a Dissertation concerning the Antiquity of the British Constitution; for which he was complimented with the degree of doctor of laws. His next work was "A View of Society in Europe, 8vo." Being disappointed of the professorship of law at Edinburgh, he removed to London, where he became a writer in the Monthly Review. In 1774 he returned to Edinburgh, and began a Magazine and Review, which failed, and he again went to London, where he engaged in the Political Herald and the English Review. He died in 1786. His other works are, 1. Observations concerning the Public Law and Constitutional History of Scotland; 2. The History of the Reformation in Scotland; 3. The History of Scotland from the Reformation to the Death of Queen Mary, whom he defends with spirit and ability against Dr. Robertson and others.—Europ. Mag. Gent. Mag.

STUBBE (Henry), an English physician, was born in Lincolnshire in 1631. He received his education at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford. In 1657 he was appointed under-keeper of the Bodleian library, but was deprived at the restoration for non-conformity, on which he settled at Stratford in Warwickshire. He was a zealous defender of the Aristotelian philosophy, and a bitter enemy of the royal society, which brought him into a fierce dispute with Mr. Glanville. He was drowned near Bath in 1676, and buried in the abbey church there by his old antagonist, who preached his funeral sermon. His writings are numerous, but insignificant and abusive.—Wood.

STUBBS (George), an ingenious English writer, though but little known, was rector of Gunville, in Dorsetshire. He wrote several papers in the Freethinker, 1718; a "New Adventure of Telemachus," 8vo.; and several other pieces in prose and verse.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

STUCKIUS (John William), a learned antiquary, was a native of Zurich, and died in 1607. He wrote an elaborate work on the Festivals of the Antients and their Sacrifices, folio; also a Commentary on Arrian; and a treatise, entitled Carolus Magnus redivivus, 4to.—Melch. Adam. Vit. Thiel.

STUDLY (John), a poet in the reign of queen Elizabeth. He received his education first at Westminster school, and afterwards at Trinity college, Cambridge. He was killed in 1597 at the Siege of Breda, where he had a command under prince Maurice. He translated several of the tragedies of Seneca.—Theat. Poet.

STUKELY (William), a learned antiquary, was born at Holbeach, in Lincolnshire, in 1687. He received his education at Benet college, Cambridge, where he studied physics and botany. After taking his doctor's degree he settled at Boston in Lincolnshire, from whence he removed to London, and was chosen member of the royal society, as he also was of the society of antiquaries on its revival. In 1730 he entered into orders, and was presented to the living of All Saints, Stamford, and in 1747 to the rectory of St. George, Queen-square, London. He died in 1765. His principal works are, 1. Itinerarium Curiosum; or, An Account of the Antiquities and Curiosities in Great Britain, folio; 2. An Account of Stonehenge and Abury, folio; 3. Palæographia Sacra; or, Discourses on the Monuments of Antiquity that relate to Sacred History, 4to.; 4. Palæographia Britannica, 4to.; 5. History of Carausius, 2 vols. 4to.; Dissertation on the Spleen, folio. He was called, on account of his knowledge of British antiquities, the Arch Druid.

STUNICA (James Lopez), a Spanish divine of the university of Alcalá, who wrote against Erasmus and against the notes of James le Fevre on St. Paul's Epistles. He published also an account of a journey from Alcalá to Rome, entitled "Itinerarium, dum Compluto Romanum proficiceretur." He died at Naples in 1590.—Nic. Antonio de Hiss. Script.

STURMIUS (James), a German statesman, was born at Strasburg in 1489. He went ambassador to foreign countries, and was deputy to the diets of the empire. He contributed to the reformation of religion at Strasburg, to the erecting of a college, and assisted Sleidan in his History of the Reformation. He died at Strasburg in 1553.—Melch. Adam. in vit. Germ.

STURMIUS (John), was born near Cologne in 1507. He studied at Liege, and afterwards set up a printing-press with Roscius, and printed several Greek authors. In 1529 he visited Paris, where he read lectures upon Greek and Latin authors, and also on logic. But being a protestant he was obliged to remove to Strasburg, where he became the first principal of the university. He died in 1589. His principal works are, 1. Linguae Latinae resoluendæ Ratio, 8vo.; 2. Excellent Notes on Aristotle's Rhetoric, and other authors.—Ibid.

STURMIUS (John Christopher), a mathematician, was born at Hippelstein in 1635. He became professor of philosophy and mathematics at Altorf, where he died in 1703. He published, 1. a Translation of Archimedes into German; 2. A Course of Mathematics, which has been translated into English, in 3 vols. 8vo.; 3. Collegium Experimentale curiosum, 4to.; 4. Physica

Electrica five hypothetica, 2 vols. 4to. 5. Physicæ conciliatricis conamina, 12mo.; 6. Prælectiones contra Astrologiæ divinitraxis vanitatem, 2 vols. 4to.; 7. Mathesis juvenilis, 2 vols. 8vo.—Moreri.

STURMIUS (Leonard Christopher), an architect, was born at Altorf in 1669, and died in 1719. He published a Complete Course of Architecture, 16 vols. Augsburg.—Ibid.

STUVEL (Ernest), a painter of fruits and flowers, was born at Hamburg in 1567, and died in 1712.—Pilkington.

SUAREZ (Francis), a Spanish jesuit, was born at Grenada in 1548. He was professor of divinity at Alcalá, Salamanca, and Rome, and lastly at Coimbra in Portugal. He died at Lisbon in 1617. His Treatise on Laws has been highly esteemed. All his works have been printed in 23 vols. folio. They have a great deal of learning, and much trifling sophistry.—Nic. Ant. Hiss. Scrip.

SUBLEYRAS (Peter), a French painter, was born in Languedoc in 1699, and died in 1759. He excelled in history and portrait.—D'Argenville.

SUTERMANS (Justus), a portrait and historical painter of Antwerp, who died in 1681, aged 84. There is a celebrated picture by him in the palace at Florence, representing the homage of the Florentines to Ferdinand II.—Pilkington.

SUCKLING (sir John), an English poet, was born at Witham, in Essex, in 1613. After receiving a liberal education he went abroad, and made a campaign under Gustavus Adolphus. On his return to England he raised a troop of horse for the king's service, but they behaved so ill in the engagement with the Scots on the English borders as to hasten his end. He died in 1641. His works consist of poems and letters, An Account of Religion by Reason; A Discourse upon Occasion, presented to the earl of Dorset; and four plays.—Biog. Dram. Granger.

SUE (John), an eminent French surgeon, was born at Cotte St. Pol. He studied under Devaux at Paris; and learnt Latin at the age of forty-five, that he might be able to examine students in that language. He died in 1782. He wrote some Memoirs on medical subjects.—Nouv. Diss. Hiss.

SUE (John Joseph), brother of the preceding, was born in 1710, and died in 1792. He was the disciple of the celebrated anatomist Verdier, whom he succeeded in his professorship. He wrote an Abridgment of Anatomy, 2 vols. 12mo.; Treatise on Bandages, 12mo.; Elements of Surgery, 8vo.; Anthropokmia, or a Treatise on the Art of Injecting, Dissecting, and Embalming, 8vo.; Osteology, 2 vols. folio. This is a translation of Monro's elegant work.—Ibid.

SUETONIUS (Caius Suetonius Tranquillus), an historian, was born at Rome. He was bred to the bar, and was the intimate friend of Pliny the younger, by whose means he was made tribune. Suetonius was afterwards secretary to the emperor Adrian. Of his works, his Lives of the first twelve Emperors, and part of his treatise concerning illustrious Grammarians, only have been preserved. The best editions are that of Oudendorp, 2 vols. 8vo. L. Bat. 1751; and that of Ernesti, 8vo. Lips. 1775.—Biog. Clusica.

SUEUR (Nicholas le), a friar of the order of Minims, and afterwards president of the parliament of Paris, was assassinated by robbers in 1594, aged 55. He translated Pindar with great fidelity and elegance into Latin, published at Paris in 1582, 8vo. and at Oxford in 1677, folio.—Moreri.

SUEUR (Thomas le), a friar of the order of Minims, was born in Champagne in 1703. He taught theology, philosophy, and mathematics, with great reputation at Rome, where he died in 1770. He formed a close friendship with the father Jacquier, and these learned men published in conjunction a Commentary on Newton's Principia; a work on the Integral Calculus, 2 vols. 4to; and Institutiones Philosophicæ, 5 vols. 12mo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

SUEUR (Eustache le), a French painter, was born at Paris in 1617, and studied under Simon Vouet. His works are in a fine style, formed upon antiquity, and after the best masters. He died in 1655.—D'Argenville.

SUGER (the abbé), minister of state, and abbot of St. Dennis, in the 11th century. He was minister of foreign affairs as well as of war under Louis le Gros, and Louis VII. appointed him regent of the kingdom in his absence. He was a man of great integrity and piety, and died at St. Dennis in 1152, aged 70.—Moreri.

SUCKER (John Gaspar), a learned divine, was born at Zurich in 1620. He became professor of Greek and Hebrew at his native place, where he died in 1688. He compiled a great work, entitled "Lexicon, sive Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus Patrum Græcorum," 2 vols. folio. His son, John Henry Sucker, became professor at Heidelberg, where he died in 1705. He wrote several learned works, particularly a Chronology of Switzerland in Latin.—Ibid.

SUIDAS, a Greek writer, who is supposed to have flourished in the reign of Alexis Comænenus. We have by him a Greek Lexicon, historical and geographical, which contains much valuable information. The best edition is that of Kuster, at Cambridge, 1705, 3 vols. folio.

SULLY (Maximilian de Bethune, duke of), was born at Rosni in 1559, of a noble family. At an early age he became the companion of Henry of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV. of France, whom he accompanied to Paris, and fortunately escaped in the horrid massacre of St. Bartholomew by the kindness of the principal of the college of Burgundy, who kept him concealed three days. He displayed great valour on many occasions, particularly at the siege of Marmande, and the battles of Coutras, Arques, and Ivry. He also manifested equal abilities as a statesman. In 1586 he concluded a treaty with the Swiss; and by his persuasions Henry was induced to change his religion, for the purpose of gaining the throne of France, though no arguments could prevail upon Sully to turn Roman catholic. Being sent ambassador to the court of queen Elizabeth, he displayed uncommon talents amidst the deepest politicians in Europe. On her death he returned to France, where he obtained the highest offices in the state. After the murder of the king, Sully retired from court. He died at his castle of Villebon in 1641. See his Memoirs written by himself; the best edition of which is that of Paris, 1745, 3 vols. 4to.

SULPICIA, a Roman lady who lived in the reign of Domitian, and was called the Roman Sappho. She wrote a satirical poem against Domitian, printed in the Corpus Poetarum of Maittaire.

SULPICIUS SEVERUS, an ecclesiastical historian, of the fifth century, was born of a noble family in Aquitaine, and distinguished for his eloquence and piety. He wrote the Life of St. Martin of Tours; and an abridgement of Ecclesiastical History, printed by Le Clerc in 1709, 8vo.—Moreri.

SULZER* (John George), a philosophical writer, was born at Winterthurn, in the canton of Zurich, in 1720. He became professor of mathematics at Berlin, and member of the royal academy in that city, where he died in 1779. His works are, Moral Contemplations on the Works of Nature; Treatise on Education; Universal Theory of the Fine Arts, 2 vols. 4to. &c.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

SUMOKOROF (Alexander), the father of the Russian stage, was born at Moscow in 1727. His tragedy of "Koref" laid the foundation of the Russian theatre, and being performed with applause before the empress, animated him to proceed in the dramatic career, which he did with great success, and was appointed to the rank of brigadier, and director of the theatre. He also received a pension, was nominated counsellor of state, and knighted. He wrote several poems and some historical works. He died in 1777.—Ibid.

SURENHUSIUS (William), a German author of the eighteenth century, who was professor of Hebrew at Amsterdam, and distinguished himself by a fine edition of the Mishna, with the Commentaries of Maimonides and Bartenora, printed in 3 vols. folio, 1705.—Ibid.

SUTCLIFFE (Mathey), a learned English

divine, and the founder of Chelsea college, was dean of Exeter, and died about 1610. He wrote a curious treatise on the Conformity of Popery and Mahometism, 4to. 1604: this work was anonymous. Under his name we have, 1. De vera Christi Ecclesia, 1600, 4to.; 2. De Purgatorio, 8vo.; 3. De Missa Papistica, 4to.—Collier's Hist. Dia.

SUTTON (Thomas), the founder of the Charter-house, was born in Lincolnshire in 1532. He was educated at Eton college, and studied the law in Lincoln's-inn, but never followed that profession. Having made some valuable purchases in the bishopric of Durham, he discovered coal-mines there which produced him immense property. He also gained a large fortune by commerce and marriage. On the death of his wife, in 1602, he led a retired life; and having no issue he purchased the Charter-house, which he erected into a hospital and seminary of learning. He died at Hackney in 1611.—Life of Sutton, 8vo.

SUTTON (Samuel), a mechanic, was born at Alfreton, in Derbyshire. He served under the duke of Marlborough in queen Anne's wars, and afterwards kept a coffee-house in Aldersgate-street. About 1704 he invented a method for extracting foul air from the wells of ships, by pipes communicating with the fire-places of the coppers. His plan, however, was superseded by Dr. Hales's invention of ventilators. Sutton died in 1752.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

SUWARROFF (Alexander), a celebrated Russian general, was born of an ancient family in 1730, and entered into the army at the age of twelve. After passing through the inferior stations he became a colonel in 1762. He displayed uncommon bravery when serving under Romanzoff against the Turks, and having slain several janissaries with his own hands, he put their heads into a sack, which he laid at the feet of his general. In 1783 he compelled the Tartars of Kuban and Budziack to submit and swear allegiance to the empress, for which he was named general in chief. In 1787 he defeated the Turkish fleet near Oczakow, which was taken by storm. In 1789 he attacked the Turks with a very inferior force, and defeated them near the river Rimnik, for which he was created a count of the Roman empire, and obtained the surname of Rimnik. By this victory he saved the prince of Saxe Cobourg and the imperial army. In the following year he stormed Simailow, wherein perished above thirty thousand Turks who refused quarter. On this occasion Suwarroff in his letter to prince Potemkin wrote only these words: "The Russian colours wave on the ramparts of Ismailow." Indeed he was always laconic in his dispatches, observing that the pen was not a fit instrument for a soldier. In December 1791 peace was concluded, and Suwarroff was covered with honours. His talents were again called into action in the war of Poland, when he took Prague, where thirty thousand Poles fell dead in the field of battle. This was followed by the fall of Warsaw and the partition of Poland. For this service he was made field-marshal, and obtained the grant of a large estate. When the emperor Paul entered into the war against France in 1799, Suwarroff had the command of the army, with which he marched into Italy, where he was opposed by Moreau. Overpowered by numbers, the Russian hero effected perhaps the most brilliant retreat ever known over the heights of Switzerland, and entering Germany, marched to Russia by order of his sovereign. For his services in this campaign he was created a prince by the title of Italiky. But he was treated by Paul with great ingratitude, which is supposed to have deeply affected his spirits. He died at Petersburg in 1800.—New. Dict. Hist.

SUZE (Henrietta countess de la), an ingenious French lady, was born at Paris in 1618. She was the daughter of the count de Coligni, son of the admiral of that name; and married first to a noble Scotchman of the name of Hamilton, and afterwards to the count de la Suze, who used her very cruelly. She however obtained a divorce, but lost the greatest part of her fortune. She died in 1673. Her poems were printed with those of Pelisson and madame de Scudery, in 4 vols. 12mo.—Ibid.

SWAMMERDAM (John), a celebrated naturalist, was born at Amsterdam in 1637, and educated at Leyden, where he took his doctor's degree in medicine in 1667. He applied with great assiduity to the study of the human body, and of insects. He invented a method of injecting the vessels with a liquified matter which afterwards became solid; also a thermometer to ascertain the degree of heat in animals. At the end of life he embraced the mysterious dogmas of the famous madame Bourignon. He died in 1680. His works are, 1. Treatise on Respiration, 4to.; 2. de Fabrica Uteri Muliebris, 4to.; 3. General History of Insects, 2 vols. folio. They have been translated into English.—Moreri.

SWANEVELD (Herman), a Flemish painter, was born in 1620. He was the disciple of Gerard Douw, and afterwards of Claude Lorraine, at Rome, where he led so retired a life as to be called the hermit of Italy. He died in 1680. His landscapes are very beautiful and scarce.—De Pils.

SWEDEN. Of this country we have no certain account till 714, when it was converted to christianity. In 1387, Margaret, queen of Denmark and Norway, was chosen queen of Sweden in the room of king Albert, who was considered as unfit to reign. In 1411, Eric, duke of Pomerania, succeeded to the three kingdoms, and Sweden remained subject to Denmark till 1523, when Gustavus Vasa restored the independence of his country. The monarchy became absolute in 1772. See GUSTAVUS.—Univ. Hist.

SWEDENBORG (Emmanuel), was born at Stockholm in 1689. His father was a bishop of the Lutheran persuasion, and president of the Swedish churches. The subject of the present article went on his travels in 1710, and at his return to Sweden was appointed assessor of the metallic college, which office he held till 1747 and then resigned it. He was ennobled in 1719. His scientific pursuits were highly honourable to him, and he published several excellent works, the principal of which was the Regnum Minerale, printed at Leipzig in 1784, 3 vols. folio. He also wrote a Treatise on the Position and Course of the Planets, and another on the Tides. At length he abstracted himself from those studies, imagining that "he belonged to the Society of Angels, in which things spiritual and heavenly are the only subjects of discourse and entertainment." Filled with this notion, he sent into the world a number of mystical books on the New Jerusalem; on Heaven and Hell; Spiritual Influx; the White Horse in the Revelations, &c. The baron died in London in 1772. His opinions obtained little notice in his lifetime, but since his death they have produced a sect; and several conventicles have been erected in London and elsewhere, called New Jerusalem Temples, in which the memory of Swedenborg is respected as that of a prophet.—Europ. Mag.

SWIFT (Jonathan), a celebrated divine, was born at Dublin, of English parents, in 1687. His father died a few months before the birth of this child, leaving his widow in narrow circumstances. At the age of six years Jonathan was sent to Kilkenny school, from whence, in 1682, he was removed to the university of Dublin, the expense of his education being defrayed by his uncle. While at college he paid more attention to books of history and poetry than logic and the classics, so that he was denied his degree on his first application, and obtained it with great difficulty on the second. On the death of his uncle, in 1688, he came to England, where he was hospitably entertained by sir William Temple, who had married a relation of his mother's. During his residence with sir William, who employed him in revising his works, he formed the resolution of embracing the ecclesiastical life; and having taken his master's degree he was ordained, and obtained the prebend of Kilroot, in the diocese of Connor, worth about one hundred pounds a year. Being disappointed of preferment in England, he accompanied the earl of Berkeley, one of the lords justices of Ireland, as his chaplain and private secretary; but he was again disappointed, and dismissed with the livings of Laracor and Rathbeggin, and the rectory of Augher, instead of the deanry of Derry, which had been promised him. He then settled at Laracor, where he rebuilt the parsonage house, repaired the church, and discharged his parochial duties in an exemplary manner. About this time he was visited by Mrs. Johnson, the celebrated Stella, whom he afterwards secretly married, but would never own it, in consequence of which she broke her heart. This amiable woman was the daughter of sir William Temple's steward, and had an independent property left her by that gentleman. At the accession of queen Anne Swift embarked in politics in hopes of preferment in England, which he again missed, and in 1713 was promoted to the deanry of St. Patrick's, Dublin. The death of queen Anne closed all his prospects, and completely embittered his temper. He was for some time very unpopular in Dublin, but came at last to be revered as an oracle. One Wood projected a coinage of 180,000*l.* of Irish halfpence, for which he obtained a patent. Swift immediately addressed a series of letters to the people, under the signature of a Drapier, urging them not to receive this base coin; and so successful was he that the patent was withdrawn. After the death of Stella, in 1727, he led a very retired life, and wasted his time in literary trifles which were unworthy of public notice. In 1736 he entirely lost his memory, and almost to his death he was secluded from the visits of strangers, as his passions still continued to be extremely violent. He died in 1745, and was buried in the cathedral of St. Patrick. His ill-treatment of Stella having been mentioned, it is necessary to notice his conduct to the lady celebrated in his works under the appellation of Vanessa. She was the daughter of Mr. Vanhomrigh, a Dutch merchant at Dublin, and conceived a strong inclination for the dean, which he seems to have encouraged; but when at last she declared her mind, he told her he was married, which had such an effect upon her that she died a few weeks afterwards. He left the greatest part of his property for the purpose of building a hospital for lunatics at Dublin. The poetical pieces of Swift are mostly of the humorous kind, and some of them very coarse and licentious. His prose style is remarkably clear and forcible. The principal of his works are, a satirical romance, called Gulliver's Travels; the allegory of the Tale of a Tub, in which he ridicules popery and puritanism; and Political Tracts against the Whigs. All his works have been collected into 22 vols. 8vo.—Life by Sheridan.

SWIFT (Deane), a near relation of the above, published in 1755 An Essay upon the Life, Writings, and Character, of Dr.

Jonathan Swift;" and two volumes of his "Letters." He died at Worcester in 1783.

—Gen. Biog. Diet.

SWINBURNE (Henry), a law writer, was born at York, and educated at Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree in civil law, after which he became proctor to the archbishop and judge of the prerogative court at York, where he died in 1620. He wrote, Brief Treatise on Testaments and Last Wills, 4to.; Treatise of Spousals, or Matrimonial Contracts, 4to.—Wood.

SWINDEN (Tobias), a divine of the church of England, who was vicar of Cuxton in Kent, and died about 1720. He wrote a curious book, entitled "An Enquiry into the Nature and Place of Hell," 8vo. 1714. In this work he endeavours to prove that the sun is the real Tartarus; a second edition, with an appendix, was published in 1727, at which time the author was dead. The book was translated into French by Bion.

SWINNOCK (George), a non-conformist minister, was born at Maidstone in Kent, and educated first at Cambridge, and afterwards at Oxford, where he took his master's degree in arts. In 1662 he was deprived of the living of Great Kymbels, in Buckinghamshire, for non-conformity. He died at Maidstone in 1673. He wrote a useful book, called the Christian Man's Calling, 3 vols. 4to.; Heaven and Hell Epitomized, 4to.; the Door of Salvation Opened, 8vo.; and some other works.—Calamy.

SWINTON (John), a learned divine and antiquary, was born in 1703. He received his education at Wadham college, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of B.D. He was for some time chaplain to the English factory at Leghorn, and on his return to England settled at Oxford, where he was appointed keeper of the university records. He died in 1767. Mr. Swinton had a concern in writing the Universal History; and was the author of some sermons and tracts on antiquarian subjects.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

SWITZERLAND. The ancient inhabitants of this country were the Helvetii, who were subdued by Cæsar, B.C. 57. A.D. 395 it was conquered by the Alemani, a German nation who were expelled by Clovis, king of France, in 496. In 888 it became part of the kingdom of Burgundy, and was given by Rodolphus, the last king of that country, to Conrad II. emperor of Germany, in 1032, from which time it was a part of the empire; but in 1307 the inhabitants revolted and set up the republic of the thirteen cantons, who in 1315 made their league perpetual. In 1649 their liberty was confirmed by treaty. See TELL.—Planta's Hist. of Switzerland.

SVHRECHT (John), a landscape painter, was a native of Antwerp. He drew several fine views on the banks of the Rhine, and some in Derbyshire. He was invited to England by the duke of Buckingham, and died here in 1703, aged 73.—Walpole's Granger.

SYDENHAM (Thomas), an eminent physician, was born at Woodford, in Dorsetshire, in 1624. In 1642 he entered of Magdalen hall, Oxford, but left that place when it became a garrison for Charles I. He afterwards returned to the university, and after taking his doctor's degree settled in Westminster, and became the most noted physician of his time. He died in 1689. Dr. Sydenham guided his practice by experience, and rejected theory. He was the first who introduced the cool regimen in the small-pox; and his writings on consumptions, fevers, and nervous diseases, though brief are universally esteemed. The best edition is that of Swan, in one volume 8vo.—Big. Brit.

SYDENHAM (Floyer), a learned critic, was born in 1710, and educated at Wadham college, Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1734, after which he settled in London. He translated some of the works of Plato into English; and was distinguished as much by his modesty and the gentleness of his manners, as his erudition. He died under arrest for a trifling debt due to a victualler in 1788, and this circumstance gave rise to that excellent institution the literary fund for the benefit of authors in distress.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

SYLBURGUS (Frederic), a learned German, was born at Marpurg in 1546, and died in 1596. He had a concern in compiling the Greek Thesaurus of Stephens, and wrote some poems in that language. His Greek Grammar and Etymologicon Magnum, folio, 1594, are highly esteemed.—Melch. Adam.

SYLLA (Lucius Cornelius), a famous Roman, was born of a reduced but noble family. In his younger years he was maintained by the courtesan Nicopolis, who left him her fortune. He entered the army under Marius, and accompanied him to Numidia as quæstor. His military talents excited the jealousy of that general, on which he went and served under Catullus. Being chosen prætor he was appointed to place Ariobarzanes on the throne of Cappadocia, which he effected. He afterwards terminated the war with the Maræ, for which he was rewarded with the consular dignity. He now aspired to the title of perpetual dictator, but met with a powerful opponent in Marius. However, after putting an end to the war with Mithridates, and conquering Greece, he entered Rome in triumph, and murdered all whom he considered as inimical to his ambitious views. The streets of Rome were filled with dead bodies, and those to whom he had promised pardon were inhumanly massacred. After reigning in terror, and altering the laws according to his own humour, Sylla voluntarily resigned the dictatorship, and retired to his estate at Puteoli, where he spent the remainder of his days in debauchery with some of the most vicious of the common people. He died miserably B. C. 78, and in the 60th year of his age.—Plutarch.

SYLVESTER (Joshua), an English poet, was born in 1563. He became a merchant adventurer, and was in great esteem with queen Elizabeth and king James. Prince Henry, son of the last monarch, appointed him his poet pensioner. He was acquainted with several languages, and died in Holland in 1618. He translated into English verse Du Bartas's Divine Weeks and Works, 4to.; and some pieces from Fracastorius.—Wood.

SYLVESTER (Matthew), a non-conformist divine, was educated at Cambridge, and ejected in 1652 from the living of Gunnerby in Lincolnshire. He afterwards officiated to a congregation of dissenters in London, where he died in 1708. He published the History of the Life and Times of Mr. Baxter, folio, and several sermons.—Calamy.

SYLVIVS (Francis), professor of eloquence, and principal of the college of Tournay at Paris, was born near Amiens. His family name was Du Bois, which he latinised according to the custom of the age. He corrected the barbarous method of reading Latin, and recommended Cicero as a model for style. He published many learned commentaries, and a work on oratory. He died in 1530.—Bayle.

SYLVIVS (James), a celebrated physician, was a brother of the above, and born at Amiens in 1478. He became professor of medicine in the royal college at Paris, and was a man of great learning, but miserably avaricious. He died in 1555. His works were printed at Cologne in 1630 with the title of Opera Medica.—Boyle.

SYLVIVS (Lambert), or Vanden Bosch, a Dutch writer, who died about 1688. He wrote in the German language, 1. Theatre of Illustrious Men, 2 vols. 4to.; 2. History of our Times; 3. Lives of Naval Heroes, 4to.; 4. Tragedies.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

SYLVIVS (Francis de la Boe), a physician, was born at Hanau in 1614. He became professor at Leyden, where he was a zealous advocate for Harvey's discovery of the circulation of the blood, and died in 1672. His works were printed by Elzevir in 4to. and at Venice in 1708 in folio.—Halleri Bibl. Anal.

SYMMACHUS (Quintus Aurelius Avianus), prefect of Rome, and consul in 391. He displayed great zeal for the re-establishment of paganism, but was opposed by St. Ambrose, and banished by Theodosius. His epistles were printed in 1653, 12mo.—Moreri.

SYNESIUS, a primitive bishop, was a native of Africa, and the disciple of the celebrated Hypatia at Alexandria, where he became a convert to Christianity. In 410 he was chosen bishop of Ptolemais, in which station he conducted himself in an apostolical manner, but the period of his death is unknown. His epistles and homilies were printed at Paris in Greek and Latin in 1633, folio. Before he became a bishop he advanced some notions against the generally received doctrine of the resurrection and last judgment, but he afterwards retracted his errors. There was a platonic philosopher of the same name, who wrote a Treatise on Natural Philosophy, and one on Dreams; the first printed at Paris in 1612, 4to. and the last in the edition of Iamblicus, Venice, 1497, folio.

SYNCELLUS (George), a monk of Constantinople, who flourished about A. D. 792. There remains of his Chronography, published in Greek and Latin in 1652, folio. It is valuable as furnishing a knowledge of the dynasties of Egypt.—Moreri.

SYNGE (Edward), a pious prelate, was the son of Dr. Syngé, bishop of Cork, and born there in 1639. He received his education partly at Christ church, Oxford, and afterwards at Dublin. In 1714 he was made bishop of Raphoe, from whence in 1716 he was translated to the archbishopric of Tuam, where he died in 1741. He wrote several pious tracts on practical religion, which have been printed by the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge, in 4 vols. 12mo.—Gen. Biv. Dict.

SYPHAX, king of part of Numidia, who took the side of the Romans against the Carthaginians at the beginning of the second punic war. But having espoused the daughter of Asdrubal, he joined Carthage. He was defeated by Massinissa and Lalius, and conducted in triumph to Rome, where he died in prison, B. C. 201.—Livy.

SYRIA. In 901 B. C. the inhabitants of this country began to be powerful under Benhadad, but in 740 it was reduced by the king of Assyria. Alexander the Great conquered Syria, B. C. 322, and after his death Seleucus erected it into an independent kingdom. The Romans laid it under tribute B. C. 65. It was subdued by the Saracens A. D. 640, and by the Turks in 1517, in whose possession it remains.—Univ. Hist.

TABOR (John Otho), a German lawyer, was born at Bautzen, in Lusatia, in 1604. He became counsellor to the landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt, and died at Frankfort in 1674. His works upon law were printed in 1688, in 2 vols. folio.—Life by Puffendorf.

TACCA (Peter James), a celebrated sculptor, was born at Carara, and died at Florence in 1640. He was a pupil of John Bologna. One of his greatest works is the statue of Ferdinand III. grand duke of Tuscany, with four slaves chained at the foot. This fine piece of art is at Leghorn.

TACHARD (Guy), a French jesuit, who went as a missionary with Chaumont and Choisi, ambassadors to Siam. In 1688 he returned to Europe after an absence of two years, but went again to India some time afterwards, and died in Bengal about 1694. His two Voyages to Siam were printed at Paris in 1689, in 2 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

TACITUS (Caius Cornelius), a Roman historian, of whose family or early life nothing is known. His first employ is said to have been procurator to Vespasian in Gallia Belgica. In the reign of Domitian he served the office of prætor, and that of consul under Nerva, A. D. 97. He displayed great elocution at the bar in pleading the cause of the oppressed Africans, who had been cruelly used by Marius Priscus, but it is in the character of an historian that he has acquired immortality. Of his lives of the emperors only a part remains. His annals were the most important of his works, but of these we have to lament the loss of a valuable portion. The treatise on the manners of the Germans, and the life of his father-in-law Agricola, are perfect, and cannot be too highly admired, but his history of the reign of Tiberius may be considered as his master-piece. His Latin is remarkable for its purity and elegance, and his greatest strength lay in drawing biographical characters. His friendship with Pliny is proverbial. The best editions of Tacitus are that of Amsterdam, 2 vols. 8vo. 1685, and that of Paris, 4 vols. 4to. 1771. Translations of this author have been published in English by Gordon in 12mo.; and Murphy in 4 vols. 4to.—Bigg. Classica.

TACITUS (Marcus Claudius), emperor of Rome, was elected by the senate after the death of Aurelian in 275. He displayed great wisdom in the administration of justice, and the government of the state. He also instituted some excellent regulations for the reformation of the public morals; and restored the senate to their ancient dignity and authority. Tacitus was likewise distinguished as a warrior: he repelled the barbarians who had invaded the Roman territories; and he was preparing for a war against Persia, when he died at Cincia of a violent disorder, though according to some he was assassinated, A. D. 276, aged 70.—Crevier.

TACQUER (Andrew), a jesuit and mathematician, was born at Antwerp, and died in 1660. He wrote a Treatise on Astronomy, an Explanation of Euclid, &c. His works were printed at Antwerp in 1 vol. folio, 1707.—Moreri.

TAFETI (Andrew), a painter, was born at Florence in 1213, and died in 1294. He introduced into Italy the art of designing in meisai, which he acquired from some Greek painters. He executed in this way several pieces at Florence.—Felibi. g.

TALBERT (Francis Xavier), a French writer, was born at Besançon in 1725. He was bred to the law, which he renounced for the ecclesiastical state, and obtained a canonry at his native place. He died at Lemberg in Galicia in 1803. His works are, 1. Discourse on the Inequality among Men; this was crowned by the academy of Dijon in 1755. 2. Panegyric on St. Louis; 3. the Elogies of Bonnet, Montaigne, cardinal d'Amboise, chancellor de l'Hopital, Philip, regent of France, and Boileau. He also wrote some poems.—Nouv. D. & H. g.

TALBOT (John), earl of Shrewsbury, was born of a noble family in Herefordshire. He displayed great valour in the reduction of Ireland, where he was commander-in-chief for Henry V. Afterwards he went to France, and served under the duke of Bedford. At the battle of Patay he was made prisoner, but recovered his liberty not long after. He was for some time again in Ireland; and on his return to France gained several victories, and took some strong places, so that his name became a terror to the French. He was slain at the siege of Castillon in 1453.—Rapin.

TALBOT (Charles), earl, afterwards duke of Shrewsbury, was descended from the above, and born in 1660. He was one of the first promoters of the revolution, for which he was created a duke and made lord chamberlain, viceroy of Ireland and high treasurer. He died at London without issue in 1717.—Eng. Persage.

TALBOT (William), an English prelate, was born at Litchfield, and admitted a commoner of Crick college Oxford, in 1674. By the interest of his relation the earl of Shrewsbury he was preferred to the deanry of Worcester in 1691 and in 1699 to the bishopric of Oxford. In 1715 he was translated to Salisbury, and in 1721 to Durham. He died in 1730. His sermons have been published in one volume octavo.—Hartisson's Hist. Durham.

TALBOT (Charles lord), chancellor of Great Britain, was the son of the last mentioned. He was an excellent lawyer, and a man of high virtue and public integrity. He died in 1737, aged 51.—Birch's Illust. Characters.

TALHAIARN, a celebrated Welch bard, who flourished in the sixth century. He composed a prayer, which became the general formula of the bardic circles. He became a hermit, and was regarded as a saint.—Owen's Cambr. Biog.

TALIACOTIUS (Gaspar), or Tagliacocci, professor in medicine and surgery at Bologna, his native place, where he died in 1553, at the age of 64. He became famous by his book "De Curtorum chirurgia per insitionem;" in which he pretends to teach the art of repairing the loss of the nose, ears, and lips, in cases of mutilation, disease, or deformity. He is said also to have practised what he has here taught, and his statue in the lecture room at Bologna represents him with a nose in its hand. Butler in his Hudibras has a whimsical allusion to this physician:

'So learned Taliacotius from,' &c.—Moreri.

TALIESIN, the most celebrated of the Welsh bards who flourished in the sixth century. Many of his compositions are printed in the Archæology of Wales.—Owen's Cambr. Biog.

TALLARD (Camille d'Hofstun count de), marshal of France, was born in 1652, in Dauphiny. He served under Louis XIV. in Holland, in 1672, and displayed such talents and bravery that Turenne gave him a distinguished command at the battles of Mulhausen and Turkheim. In 1693 he was made lieutenant-general, and in 1697 was sent ambassador to England, to treat about the succession of Charles II. to the crown of Spain. The war being renewed, he assumed the command on the Rhine in 1702, and the year following was made marshal of France. At this time he laid siege to Landau, and having gained a great victory over the prince of Hesse, who endeavoured to raise the siege, the place was soon taken. On that occasion he wrote to Louis, saying that "he had taken more colours and standards than his majesty had lost soldiers." In 1704 he was defeated at Höchstet by the duke of Marlborough, taken prisoner, and conveyed to England, where he remained seven years. On his return to France in 1712 he was created a duke, and in 1726 was nominated secretary of state. He died in 1728.

TALLIS (Thomas), an English musician, in the 16th century. He was gentleman of the chapel to Edward VI. and queen Mary, and his salary is said to have been sevenpence-halfpenny a day. In the reign of Elizabeth he was appointed organist in conjunction with Bird, with whom he published a collection of hymns for church service. He died in 1585.—Hawkins. Burney.

TAMERLANE, called by his relations Tigaur-bec, or Timur-the-lame, was, according to some historians, the son of a shepherd, and to others, of royal descent. He was born in 1335, at Ketch, in the territory of the ancient Sogdiana, and early in life testified uncommon courage and an enterprising disposition. Having gained a number of followers of a similar disposition, he made himself master of Balk, the capital of Khorasan, after which he made an easy conquest of the province of Candahar. He next subdued the whole of ancient Persia, and then took Bagdad. Flushed with his success he marched into India, where he took Delhi the capital, and thus gained possession of immense treasures. But while he was engaged in this expedition Bagdad revolted, on which he hastened back, delivered the city up to pillage, and put to death above 80,000 persons. He also invaded Syria, and took Damascus. In this splendid career the Greek emperor and some inferior princes implored his assistance against Bajazet, emperor of the Turks. Tamerlane sent him to withdraw from before Constantinople, and to replace the princes whom he had deposed. Bajazet returned a fierce answer, on which Tamerlane marched against him, and after a battle of three days the Turkish emperor was defeated and taken prisoner. Different and very irreconcilable accounts are given of the conqueror's treatment of his captive: some assert that he was confined in an iron cage, and exposed to scorn and contempt, while others relate that Tamerlane behaved to him and his family with the greatest liberality. The last seems to be the most likely. Tamerlane fixed the seat of his vast empire at Samarcand, where he received the homage of numerous sovereigns, and among the rest the ambassadors of the emperor Manuel Paleologus, and Henry III. king of Castile. He died in 1405, while engaged in preparing for an expedition against China.—Univ. Hist.

TANAQUIL, or Cælia Cecilia, wife of Tarquin, fifth king of Rome. She was a native of Tarquinia; and so well skilled in augury that she persuaded her husband to go to Rome, where he was elected king. After he was murdered she raised her son Servius Tullius to the throne. She was a woman of such liberality that the Romans preserved her girdle with great veneration.—Livy.

TANNER (Thomas), a learned prelate, was born at Market Lavington, in Wiltshire, in 1674. He received his education at Queen's College, Oxford. In 1695 he was elected fellow of All-souls, and consecrated bishop of St. Asaph in 1732. He died in 1735, and was buried in the cathedral of Christ-church, Oxford. He wrote, "Notitia Monastica, or an Account of all the Religious Houses in England and Wales," folio; "Bibliotheca Britannico-Hibernica." He also contributed to the last edition of Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses.

TANSILLO (Lewis), an Italian poet, was born at Nola, about 1510. He spent a great part of his life in the family of the marquis de Villafranca, viceroy of Naples, and is said to have died judge of Gayeta, in 1570. He wrote in his youth a poem entitled l'Indeviture (or the Vintager), printed at Naples in 1534. On account of its indecency all his works were laid under an interdict, but having afterwards presented another to the pope on the Tears of St. Peter, his holiness took off the prohibition from all his poems except the culpable one.—Tiraboschi.

TARIN (Peter), a French physician, was born at Courtenai, and died in 1761. His works are, 1. Adversaria Anatomica, 4to.; 2. Anatomical Dictionary, 4to.; 3. Osteographia, 4to.; 4. The Art of Dissecting, 2 vols. 12mo.; 5. Treatise on Ligaments; 6. Observations on Medicine and Surgery, 3 vols. 12mo.; 7. Description of the Muscles, 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

TARLETON (Richard), a celebrated actor and jester, was born at Conover, in Salop. He performed at the Bull, in Bishopsgate-street, the Judge's character in a play called Henry V. which was prior to that of Shakspeare. Stowe says, he was constituted one of the queen's players in 1583. He died about 1589. He was the author of a dramatic performance called "the Seven Deadly Sins." Many of his jests have been printed in different books.—Diop. Dram.

TARPA (Spurius Mælius), a Roman critic in the time of Augustus. He was appointed with four others in the temple of Apollo, to examine the merit of poetical pieces and plays. Cicero and Horace mention him with honour.—Bayle.

TARPEIA, the daughter of Tarpeius, governor of the capitol under Romulus. She betrayed that place to the Sabinian general Tatius, on condition of receiving what his soldiers wore on their left arms, meaning their bracelets of gold. When Tatius entered the place he threw his bracelet and shield on Tarpeia, in which he was imitated by all his followers, so that she perished under the weight. She was buried on the mount which was afterwards called by her name, and from whence persons convicted of treason were precipitated.—Livy.

TARQUIN the elder, 5th king of Rome, was the son of Greek parents, and born in the town of Tarquinii, in Etruria. His name was Lucumon, which he changed on going to Rome by the advice of his wife Tanaquil. He so endeared himself to the Romans by the liberality of his manners, that Ancus Martius nominated him guardian of his children. The people on the death of that monarch placed the crown on the head of Tarquin, who reigned with great moderation and popularity. He defeated the Latins and Sabines, and conquered Etruria. He encreased the number of the senate, repaired the capitol, which he ornamented with several elegant buildings, and formed aqueducts and subterraneous sewers. He also introduced regulations for the magistrates, and ordered that the axes carried before them should be surrounded by bundles of sticks. He was assassinated by the sons of his predecessor, B. C. 578, and in the 80th year of his age.—Livy.

TARQUIN the second, called the Superb, was grandson of the preceding. He married Tullia, daughter of Servius Tullius, and at her instigation murdered his father-in-law, and seized on the kingdom. His reign was tyrannical and extravagant, so that his subjects were about to revolt, when, to divert their attention, he engaged in a foreign war. But while he was at the siege of Ardea, the infamous conduct of his son proved the ruin of his family. [See LUCRETIA and BAUTUS.] The Romans rose and shut the gates against Tarquin, who retired to Etruria, where he died in the 90th year of his age. He purchased the famous Sibylline books, and finished the capitol.—Ibid.

TARTINI (Joseph), a celebrated musician, was born in 1692, at Pisano, in Istria. He became so excellent a performer on the violin, that he was appointed master of the band in the church of St. Anthony at Padua. He died in 1770. His works are Sonatas, and a Treatise on Music, 1754.—Bacon.

TARUFFI (Emilio), an Italian painter, was born at Bologna in 1632, and died in 1694. His landscapes are beautiful, and the scenes and figures are very animated.—Pilkington.

TARRANTIUS (Lucius), an ancient astrologer, who was the intimate friend of Cicero. He made two famous horoscopes, one of Romulus, the other of Rome. He has been called the Prince of Astrologers.—Idem.

TARTAGLIA (Nicolas), a mathematician, was born at Brescia, and died about 1558. He published an Italian version of Euclid, with a Commentary, printed at Venice in 1543, folio. He was also the author of a Treatise on Numbers and Measures, in Italian, fol. 1556.—Ibid.

TASKER (William), an English divine and poet, was born in Devonshire. He took a bachelor's degree at Exeter college, Oxford, entered into orders, and had the living of Idlesleigh in his native county. He died in 1800. His principal works are, Odes of Pindar and Horace, translated into English verse, 3 vols. 8vo.; Ode to the Warlike Genius of Britain; Letters on Phytognomy.—Genl. Mag.

TASSO (Torquato), an Italian poet, was born at Sorrento, in the kingdom of Naples, in 1544. His father was secretary to the prince of Salerno, who, being charged to represent to Charles V. the injustice of the viceroy of Naples, was obliged to fly to Rome, and was accompanied by Bernard Tasso and his son, who, though he was but nine years old, wrote verses on their misfortune, in which he compared himself to young Afcanius escaping with Aeneas. Young Tasso was sent to Padua to study the law, and while there he wrote his poem of Rinaldo, at the age of seventeen. In 1565 he was taken into the service of the duke of Ferrara, with whose sister the princess Eleonora he fell in love, and this fatal passion proved the source of that melancholy humour which preyed upon him twenty years. Quitting Ferrara he went to his sister at Sorrento, and was joyfully received by her; but his flame becoming stronger by absence, he returned to the court of Ferrara, where, in the presence of the duke, he had the imprudence to embrace the princess with transport. Alphonso with great coolness ordered him to be taken to an hospital, as a man deprived of his reason. At the desire of the duke de Gonzaga he obtained his liberty in 1586, on which he retired to Naples, where for some time he enjoyed repose. Pope Clement VIII. who was a great admirer of his talents, called him to Rome, where he was received with honourable marks of distinction, and great preparations were made for solemnly crowning him in the capitol as the prince of poets, when he fell sick, and died on the evening before the intended ceremony, April 15, 1595. The work which has immortalized his memory is the epic poem of Jerusalem Delivered, translated into English by Hoole. All the works of Tasso were printed at Florence in 6 vols. fol. 1724. — Life by Manzoni in Italian.

TASSO (Bernardo), the father of the above, wrote a poem called Amadis, printed at Venice in 1560, 4to. His Letters were printed at Padua in 1783, in 3 vols. 8vo. He died at Rome in 1575. — Tinaboni.

TASSONI (Alexander), an Italian poet, was born at Modena in 1565, and died in 1635. His "Secchia Rapita," or, Rapt of the Bucket, a mock-heroic poem, was written on the occasion of the war between Modena and Bologna. Besides this he wrote, Observations on Petrarch; an Ecclesiastical History, &c. — Life by Muratori.

TATE (Nahum), a poet, was a native of Dublin, and intimate with Dryden. He was appointed laureat in 1692, with a salary of 100*l.* a year, and a butt of canary. He died in 1715. Tate wrote several poems, the best of which is that on the death of queen Anne. In conjunction with Brady he translated the Psalms into metre.

TATIAN, a disciple of Justin Martyr, was a native of Syria, and educated among the Greeks in the pagan religion, which he renounced for christianity. He still however retained the Platonic ideas. He fell into dangerous errors, particularly that of Marcion, respecting two supreme principles. He rejected some of St. Paul's Epistles, and formed a sect called the Enkratites, or continents. Tatian was the author of a Harmony of the Four Gospels, but nothing remains of his except an Apology for the Christian Religion, printed at Oxford in 1700, 8vo. — Dupin.

TATISCHER (Vassili), the compiler of an unfinished History of Russia, who died in 1750. His work is an unconnected series of chronicles. — Gen. Biog. DiB.

TATIUS, king of the Sabines, who made war against the Romans, and by treachery obtained possession of the capitol. [See TARPEIA.] The mediation of the Sabine women effected a reconciliation, and Tattius brought his subjects to reside at Rome, where he shared the government with Romulus, who caused him to be murdered at Lanuvium, B. C. 742. — Livy.

TATIUS (Achilles), a native of Alexandria, who embraced the christian religion, and wrote a Commentary on the Phænomena of Aratus, which is extant; also a Greek romance, called the Amours of Leucippus and Clitophon, printed in 1540, 12mo. — Vossius.

TAVARONE (Lazarus), an historical and portrait painter, was born at Genoa in 1556, and died in 1631. He was the disciple of Luca Cangiagio, and succeeded him as painter to the king of Spain. — Pilkington.

TAUBMAN (Frederic), a German critic, was born in Franconia, about 1565. He was professor of poetry and the belles lettres at Wittemberg, and died in 1613. He wrote Latin Poems, and Commentaries on Plautus and Virgil. — Moreri.

TAVERNIER (John Baptist), a traveller, was born at Paris in 1605. He went through Turkey, Persia, and the East Indies, six times, and died at Moscow in 1689. He gained a great fortune by trading in jewels, with which he purchased an estate, and was ennobled by Louis XIV. His Collection of Travels in 6 vols. 12mo. is greatly esteemed, has have been translated into English. — Moreri.

TAYLOR (Jeremiah), a learned prelate, was the son of a barber at Cambridge, where he received his education in Caius college, after which he entered into orders, and became so eminent a preacher that archbishop Laud procured him a fellowship of All Souls college, Oxford. He was also appointed chaplain to that prelate, and rector of Uppingham, in the county of Rutland. In 1642 he received the degree of doctor in divinity by royal mandate. On the decline of the royal cause, in which he was a sufferer, he retired into Caermarthen-shire, where he taught school for a livelihood. He afterwards went with lord Conway to Ireland, where he wrote his Cases of Conscience, a work of sterling value. In 1661 he was made bishop of Down and Connor, privy counsellor, and vice chancellor of Trinity college, Dublin. He died in 1667. Bishop Taylor wrote, the Great Exemplar, or the Life and Death of Jesus Christ, folio; an excellent practical book called Holy Living and Dying, 8vo.; and several sermons and controversial and pious treatises.—Fun. Serms. by Rusk. Wood.

TAYLOR (John), commonly called the water-poet, was born in Gloucester, and after going through his Accidence at the school there was bound apprentice to a waterman in London; but notwithstanding the laboriousness of his employment he wrote several books, which were collected into one volume folio. On the breaking out of the rebellion he went to Oxford, where he kept a victualling house, which was much resorted to by the students, and Taylor did some service to the royal cause by his satires and songs. When Oxford surrendered he retired to Westminster, where he set up the sign of the Mourning Crown; which, however, he was obliged to remove, on which he hung up his own picture, with the following verses:

There's many a head stands for a sign;
Then, gentle reader, why not mine?

On the other side,

Though I deserve not, I desire,
The laurel wreath, the poet's hire.
He died in 1654, aged 74.—Wood.

TAYLOR (John), a learned dissenting minister, was born near Lancaster. He was pastor of a congregation at Norwich many years, and removed from thence to Warrington, where he superintended the academy. He died in 1761. His greatest work was an Hebrew and English Concordance, in 2 vols. folio. He also wrote a book on Original Sin, and other theological treatises.—Gen. B. D.

TAYLOR (John), a learned critic, was born in 1703 at Shrewsbury, where his father was a barber. He received his education at the grammar-school of his native town, after which he was sent to St. John's college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He took his doctor's degree in the civil law, became librarian and registrar of the university, and a member of doctor's commons. But afterwards he entered into orders, and was preferred to a canon-residentiaryship of St. Paul's, and the archdeaconry of Buckingham. He died in 1766. Dr. Taylor published excellent editions of Lysias and Demosthenes, and wrote a work entitled, Elements of the Civil Law.—Anecd. of Bouyer.

TAYLOR (Brook), a mathematician, was born at Edmonthton, in Middlesex, in 1685. In 1701 he entered of St. John's college, Cambridge, and in 1708 wrote his "Treatise on the Centre of Oscillation." In 1709 he took the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In 1714 he was chosen secretary to the royal society, and in the same year took his degree of doctor of laws. He published several elaborate works on mathematical subjects, the principal of which is his Treatise on Linear Perspective. He died in 1731.

TEILO, a British saint. He founded a college at Landaff, which was afterwards erected into a bishopric. There are several churches dedicated to him in Wales. He lived in the fifth century.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

TEISSIER (Anthony), a French protestant writer, was born at Montpellier in 1632. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he went to Prussia, and was appointed historiographer, and obtained a pension. He died at Berlin in 1715. His works are, 1. Panegyrics on great Men, 4 vols. 12mo.; 2. Catalogus Auctorum qui Librorum Catalogos, Indices, Bibliothecas, Virorum Libratorum Elogia, Vitam, aut Orationes Fenebres, scriptis consignarunt, 8vo.; 3. Lives of Illustrious Princes, &c.—Moreri.

TELL (William), one of the principal confederates who restored the independence of Switzerland in 1307. Geisler, the Austrian governor for the emperor Albert, put his cap on a pike which was fixed in a public place at Altorf, and all who passed were required to pay their obeisance to it. This was refused by Tell, who was sentenced to shoot an arrow at an apple placed on the head of his own son. He fortunately succeeded in cleaving the apple without injuring the child. Geisler, observing another arrow in his girdle, asked what it was for, to which Tell boldly replied, "to have slain thee if I had killed my son." The governor on this ordered him to be bound, and put into a boat in order to convey him to a dungeon in his own castle. But a storm coming on the boatmen declared they should be lost if Tell, who was accounted the best navigator on the lake, was not entrusted with the helm. On this Geisler ordered him to be released, and Tell steering for a point of land, since called the rock of Tell, jumped ashore and gained the mountains. Shortly after he shot the governor, and the confederates having taken arms effected the deliverance of their country. This story, however, is considered as partly romantic by some writers.—Giannius Descript. Helvet. Moreri.

TELLIER (Michael le), a French lawyer and statesman, was born at Paris in 1603. After passing through different offices cardinal Mazarine proposed him to Louis XIII. for the place of secretary of state, which he filled with considerable reputation till 1666, when he resigned it to his son. In 1677 he was made chancellor, and disgraced himself by proposing the revocation of the edict of Nantes, on signing which he profanely exclaimed, Nunc dimittis fœdus tuum, Domine! He died in 1685.—Moreri.

TELLIER (Francis-Michael le), marquis de Louvois, son of the preceding, was born at Paris in 1641. At the age of twenty-three he became minister of war, in which office he displayed great activity, and was crowned with favours by the king. After the death of Colbert in 1683 he had the charge of superintendant of the buildings, arts, and manufactures, of France. Louvois had great abilities, but he was arbitrary, mercenary, and oppressive. He gained a complete ascendancy over Louis XIV., and even went so far as to remove the guards whom the king had appointed. But being one day received with severity by Louis at the council-board, he retired to his apartment and died of chagrin in 1691.—Idid.

TEMPESTA (Antonio), a painter, was born at Florence in 1555, and died in 1630. He was the disciple of Strada, and excelled in landscapes with figures. He was also an engraver.—Felicien.

TEMPLE (William), a celebrated English statesman, was the son of Sir John Temple, master of the rolls in Ireland, and was born in London in 1629. He received part of his education under his maternal uncle, Dr. Henry Hammond, and next at the school of Bishop Stortford, from whence he removed to Emanuel college, Cambridge. At the restoration he became a member of the parliament of Ireland, but soon left that kingdom and settled in England. He rendered his country important services as ambassador to the United States; particularly in effecting the league between England, Holland, and Sweden, in 1668, and in bringing about the marriage of the prince of Orange to lady Mary, daughter of the duke of York. In 1680 he retired from public affairs, and divided his time between his books and his gardens, but he was often consulted by the ministers, and by king William in person. He died at his seat of Moor Park, in Surrey, in 1700. His works consist of Memoirs of what passed in his public employments; Letters; Miscellanies; and Observations on the United Provinces of the Netherlands, in 2 vols. folio. His son John Temple was appointed secretary at war immediately after the revolution, but drowned himself the same year.—Eng. Brit.

TEMPLEMAN (Peter), a physician, was born at Dorchester in 1711. He was educated at the Charter-house, next at Trinity college, Cambridge, and lastly at Leyden under Boerhaave. Having taken his doctor's degree he settled in practice at London, and on the establishment of the British museum was appointed keeper of the reading room, which place he resigned on being elected secretary to the society of arts. He died in 1769. Dr. Templeman wrote some poetical pieces, and translated Norden's Travels in Egypt. He is not to be confounded with Thomas Templeman, a schoolmaster at Bury, in Suffolk, who published Tables of the Size and Population of the different Kingdoms of the World, folio.—Ann. of Bowyer.

TENCIN (Claudine-Alexandrine Guerin de), was the sister of the cardinal de Tencin, who died in 1758. She was born at Grenoble, and took the veil in the monastery of Montfleury; but with the consent of the pope she threw off the religious habit, and entered into the gay world at Paris, where she led the fashion for some time, and was celebrated for her intrigues, for which she was once confined in the Chatelet, and afterwards in the Bastille. She died in 1719. Madame de Tencin wrote the Siege of Calais or the Misfortunes of Love, and some other romances.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

TENIERS (David), called the old, a painter, was born at Antwerp in 1582. He was the disciple of Rubens, after which he went to Rome, where he imitated the manner of Elsheimer. He returned to Antwerp, and died in 1649. His subjects are chemists, country fairs, ale houses, and merry meetings, painted in an admirable style. His son David, called the young, was born at Antwerp in 1610, and died there in 1694. He surpassed his father. He painted night scenes, feasts, the temptation of St. Anthony, &c. His pieces are numerous, but very valuable. Abraham, another son of old Teniers, was also a good painter, and particularly excelled in a knowledge of the chiaro oscuro.—De Piles. Felicien.

TENISON (Thomas), an eminent prelate, was born at Cottenham, in Cambridgeshire, in 1636, and educated at the free school of Norwich, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees. In 1680 he was presented to the rectory of St. Martin in the Fields, and in 1689 to the archdeaconry of London. He was so strenuous an advocate for the protestant cause in the reign of James II. that king William advanced him to the bishopric of Lincoln in 1691, and to the see of Canterbury in 1694. He died in 1715. He wrote some sermons, tracts against popery, and published the Remains of Lord Chancellor Bacon, in one volume, octavo.—Le Neve's Lives of the Alps.

TENZELIUS (William Ernest), a learned German, was born at Arnstadt, in Thuringia, in 1659, and died in 1707. His works are, 1. Saxonia Numismatica, 4 vols.; 2. Supplementum Historiæ Gothanæ, 3 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

TERBURG (Gerard), a Dutch painter, was born at Zwol in Holland, in 1608. He was employed at the court of Spain, where he gained great wealth, and was made a chevalier. On his return to his own country he settled at Deventer, where he was chosen one of the magistrates. He died in 1681. He painted portraits, conversations, and humorous scenes.—Houbraten.

TERENCE (Publius Terentius), a dramatic poet, was a native of Africa, and sold as a slave to Terentius Lucanus, a Roman senator, who gave him his liberty on account of his genius. He studied Greek with such assiduity as to transmute the best comedies from that language into the Latin; of which, however, only six remain, the style of which is elegant and the sentiments delieste. He is said to have been drowned in a voyage from Greece, B. C. 159. The best editions of Terence are those of Westerhovius, 2 vols. 4to., Amst. 1726; Edinb. 12mo. 1758; Cambridge. 4to., 1723; and that of Zeunius, 8vo. Lipsf. 1774.—Biog. Classica.

TERRASSON (Andrew), a French divine and priest of the oratory, was born at Lyons, and died at Paris in 1723. His Sermons in 4 vols. 12mo. are distinguished by their eloquence.—New. Dia. Hist.

TERRASSON (John), brother of the above, was also of the congregation of the oratory, which he quitted contrary to the wish of his father, who was so religious that he defined all his sons for the monastic order. In 1707 the abbé Terrasson was admitted a member of the academy of sciences, and in 1721 he obtained the professorship of philosophy, Greek, and Latin. He died at Paris in 1750. His works are, 1. Critical Dissertation on the Iliad, 2 vols. 12mo. This has been translated into English. 2. Reflections in Favour of Law's System. This was a defence of the Mississippi project. 3. Sethos, a moral romance. This has also been translated into English, in 2 vols. 8vo. 4. A translation of Diodorus Siculus, in 7 vols. 12mo. Gaspard Terrasson, another brother of John, became a member of the oratory, which he afterwards quitted. He died in 1752. His sermons have been printed.—Ibid.

TERRASSON (Anthony), of the same family as the above, was born at Paris in 1705. He distinguished himself as an advocate, and composed, by order of the chancellor D'Agneffeau, the History of Roman Jurisprudence, folio; for which he was named censor royal, and professor in the royal college. He died in 1782. Besides the above work he wrote Miscellanies of History, Literature, &c. 12mo.—Ibid.

TERRRE (John Baptist), a dominican, was born at Calais in 1610. He had been both a soldier and sailor before he entered into the monastic state. He afterwards became a zealous missionary in America, from whence he returned in 1658, and died at Paris in 1687. He wrote a General History of the West India Islands belonging to the French, 4 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

TERTRE (Francis Joachim Duport du), a French jesuit, was born at St Malo in 1715, and died in 1759. He wrote, "An Abridgement of the History of England," 3 vols. 12mo.; a History of Conspiracies, 10 vols. 12mo.; Abridgement of the History of Spain, 5 vols. 12mo.; and some other works.—New. Dia. Hist.

TERPANDER, a lyric poet and musician of Lesbos, 675 B. C. He is said to have appeased a tumult at Sparta, by the melody and sweetness of his notes. He added three strings to the lyre, which before had only four.

TERTULLIAN (Quintus Septimius Florens), one of the fathers of the church, was a native of Carthage, and bred to the bar. The constancy of the martyrs converted him to christianity, which he defended with great zeal and eloquence. From Carthage he went to Rome, and in the persecution under Severus he drew up a famous apology for the christians. In the latter part of his life he fell into the errors of montanism. He died about 216. The best editions of Tertullian's works are, that of Rigobin, Paris, folio; and of Venice 1746, folio; and that of Semler, 4 vols. 8vo., Halli 1778—Coar. Dupin.

TERWESTEN (Augustin), a painter, was born at the Hague in 1644. He improved himself in Italy, where he studied the work of the best masters. By his means the academy at the Hague was revived, and that at Berlin instituted. He died in 1711. He had two brothers, Elias and Matthew. The first excelled in painting fruits and flowers, and died in 1724; the other painted historical subjects, and died in 1735.—Pillings.

TESTA (Peter), an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Lucca. He was drowned in the Tiber in 1650, endeavouring to recover his hat, which had been blown into the river while he was sitting on the bank sketching a design.—Ibid.

THEAS, a famous courtesan, who corrupted the youth of Athens. She accompanied Alexander, who was persuaded by her to destroy the city of Persepolis. After the death of the Macedonian conqueror she became the wife of Ptolemy, king of Egypt.—Bayle.

THALES, a philosopher of antiquity, was born B. C. 640, at Miletus. After travelling many years, particularly into Egypt, where he studied the mathematics, he returned to his native place, and opened school. Among his disciples were Anaximander, Anaximenes, and Pythagoras, and he was often visited by Solon and Thalesbulus. He is generally allowed to have been the father of the Greek philosophy, and stands first on the list of the seven wise men. His doctrine was, that water is the first principle of all bodies; that God is the mind which pervades the universe. He made some inventions in geometry, and first observed the apparent diameter of the sun. He likewise observed the nature and course of eclipses, and divided the year into 365 days. Thales died B. C. 545.—Diog. Laert. Stoicly.

THELLSSOUN, (Peter Isaac), a native of Geneva, who settled as a merchant in London, where he acquired a prodigious fortune, and died in 1798. He left about 100,000l. to his family, and the remainder of his property, considerably above half a million, is to accumulate to a certain period, when, if there are none of his descendants and name existing, the whole is to be applied by parliament to pay off the national debt. In about one hundred years the amount will be about one hundred and forty — Millions. The family have endeavoured to set aside the will in chancery, but without success.—Genl. Mag.

— THEMISON, a celebrated physician of antiquity, who lived before the christian æra, and was the disciple of Asclepiades. He departed from the old system, and formed a medical sect called Methodists.—Formal.

— THEMISTIUS, an orator and philosopher, was born in Paphlagonia in the fourth century. He acquired so great a reputation that Theodosius the Great made him prefect of Constantinople, though a pagan. He was very intimate with St. Gregory Namasianen. He died about A. D. 410. He wrote, Commentaries on the Philosophy of Plato and Aristotle; the last only is extant. There remain some of his Discourses, printed at Paris in 1684, folio.—Vossius.

— THEMISTOCLES, a celebrated Athenian general, was the son of Neocles, who disinherited him for his profligacy. This disgrace roused the ambition of Themistocles, who courted the favour of the people, and with such success, that when Xerxes invaded Greece he was at the head of the republic of Athens, and by his determined spirit and address occasioned the defeat of the Persian fleet near Salamis. He afterwards, by a stratagem, prevailed on Xerxes to abandon Greece, and for thus saving his country he received distinguished honours. He then turned his attention to the strengthening of the fortifications, improving the harbours, and increasing the navy; but in the midst of his glory he was accused of incestuous designs to aggrandize himself, and was banished. Themistocles then threw himself upon the generosity of Artaxerxes, who received him with kindness, though he had formerly set a price upon his head. He died at Magnesia, in the Persian dominions, B. C. 449, aged 65.—Plutarch. Corn. Nepos.

— THEOBALD (Lewis), a dramatic writer, was born at Sittingbourn, in Kent, and died in 1742. He wrote several dramatic pieces of little merit. He is chiefly known by his edition of Shakspeare in 8 vols, 12mo., which, though depreciated by Warburton, possesses considerable merit, and shews no want of judgment.—Biog. Dram.

— THEOCRITUS, a Greek poet, who flourished at Syracuse B. C. 282. Little is known of him, only that his friend and patron was Ptolemy Philadelphus. He is said to have been strangled by order of Hiero, king of Syracuse, for having written a satire against him. Of his various works we have only the Idylls, which are remarkable for their pleading simplicity and sweetness, and Epigrams. The best editions are, Warton's, Oxon. 1770, 2 vols. 4to.; Reiske, Lips. 2 vols. 4to. 1760. Theocritus has been translated into English by Polwhele, 2 vols. 8vo.—Biog. Classica.

— THEODORE. See NEWHOFF.

— THEODATUS, king of the Goths in Italy, was placed on the throne in 534 by his aunt, Amalasenta, who married him; but some time afterwards she caused her to be strangled. The emperor Justinian declared war against him, and Belisarius, his general, marched into Italy, on which the soldiers of Theodatus deposed him and placed Vitiges on the throne, who put him to death in 536.—Univ. Hist.

— THEODORUS of Mopsus, so named from the place of which he was bishop, a city in Cilicia. He died in 428. His works, which favour nestorianism and socinianism, were condemned in the fifth general council. What remains are a Commentary on the Psalms; another on the Twelve Minor Prophets, and some Fragments.—Dupin.

— THEODORIC, a father of the church, was born in 386. About 420 he was made bishop, which office he discharged with great reputation. He was deposed in a synod at Ephesus for espousing the cause of Nestorius, but was restored in the general council of Chalcedon. He died about 460. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History; Commentaries on the Scriptures; Lives of Saints, and other works, published by Sirmond in Greek and Latin, 4 vols. folio, 1642, and a fifth volume was added in 1684.—Ibid.

— THEODORIC, the first king of the Goths in Italy, was the natural son of Theodemir, second king of the Ostrogoths, and given as an hostage to Leo I. in 461. He rendered great services to the emperor Zeno, who honoured him with the consulate in 484. He was afterwards sent against Odoacer, whom he put to death, and made himself master of all Italy. In 509 he espoused a sister of Clovis, king of France. Theodoric displayed the qualities of a great prince. He regulated the administration of justice, allayed religious disputes, revised the laws, and encouraged commerce. He died in 526.—Moreri.

— THEODOSIUS, a Roman emperor, was born in 346 at Cauca, a city in Spain, of a noble family. His father, count Theodosius, was beheaded by order of Valens in 376. The son was called to court by Gratian, who associated him in the empire, and appointed him to govern Thrace and those provinces which Valentinian had possessed in the East. He defeated the Goths in several actions, and compelled them to sue for peace. His fame spread into Persia, and Sapor III. solicited his alliance. In 385 a conspiracy was formed against him, but it was discovered, and Theodosius displayed the magnanimity of his disposition by pardoning the criminals. But in 390 he committed a cruel action in causing the inhabitants of Thessalonica to be put to the sword, on account of a sedition and riot in their city. St. Ambrose was so struck with horror by this transaction that he refused to admit Theodosius into the church till he had given proofs of repentance. The emperor having defeated Maximus, marched to Rome, where he received the honours of a triumph, after which he returned to Constantinople and defeated the barbarians who had ravaged Macedonia and Thrace. He then turned his arms against the usurper Eugenius, who had been placed on the throne after the murder of Valentinian. Having defeated him at Aquileia he caused him to be beheaded in 394. Theodosius died the year following at Milan.—Univ. Hist.

THEODOSIUS II. succeeded his father Arcadius, son of the preceding, in 408 under the guardianship of his sister Pulcheria. She caused him to marry Athenais, daughter of Leontius the philosopher, who being baptized took the name of Eudocia. [see EUDOCIA]. Theodosius defeated the Persians with great slaughter near the Euphrates; but he was less fortunate against the Huns, who overran the empire, so that the emperor was obliged to purchase a peace. Theodosius was a good-natured prince, but weak and timid. He died in 450.—Univ. Hist.

THEODOTUS of Byzantium, surnamed the Tanner from his occupation. In the persecution under Marcus Aurelius he was arrested, and, to save his life, renounced the christian religion. The faithful having reproached him for his apostacy, he invented the heretical notion that Christ was only a man. He was excommunicated, but obtained many followers, who were called Theodotians. He is not to be confounded with Theodotus the banker, who instituted the sect of Melchisedecians, because they held that Christ is inferior to Melchisedeck.—Dupin. Mesbeim.

THEOGNIS, a Greek poet, was a native of Megara, and flourished B. C. 544. There remain of his some fragments printed in the Corpus Poetarum Græcorum, and other collections.—Vossius.

THEON, a Greek sophist, who wrote a treatise of rhetoric entitled, Progymnasmata, written with elegance. It was printed at Leyden in 1726, 8vo. in Greek and Latin.—Ibid.

THEON of Alexandria, a philosopher and mathematician in the time of Theodosius the Great. was father of the celebrated Hypatia. His Commentary on Euclid was printed in Greek at Basle in 1533, folio; and that on Aratus at Oxford in 1672, quarto.—Ibid.

THEOPHANES (George), a Greek historian, was born at Constantinople of a noble family. He entered into the monastic state, and was received with distinction at the seventh general council; but the emperor, Leo the Armenian, exiled him to Samothrace, where he died in 818. He wrote a Chronicle beginning where Syncellus ends, and reaching to the reign of Michael Curoplatus. It was printed at the Louvre in 1655, folio.—Moreri.

THEOPHANES (Prokopovitch), a Russian historian, was born in 1681. He was archbishop of Novogorod, and died in 1786.

He wrote the Life of Peter the Great, and some theological treatises.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

THEOPHILUS, bishop of Antioch, flourished in the second century. He was the first who used the term Trinity to express the three persons in the Godhead. His Defence of Christianity was edited by Gesner at Zurich in 1546, and is appended to the works of Justin, 1642, folio.—Dupin.

THEOPHRASTUS, a Greek philosopher, was born at Erefus, in Lesbos. Plato was his first master, and he afterwards became a disciple of Aristotle, who had a great esteem for him. He succeeded that philosopher in his school at Athens, and his name became so celebrated that he was attended by two thousand pupils. He died at the advanced age of 107. His works are, History of Stones, of which Hill has given an English translation; Treatise of Plants, printed at Amsterdam, folio; Moral Characters; these were translated into English by Brayer. All his works have been published in folio by Heinsius at Leyden in 1613.—Vossius.

THEOPHYLACT, archbishop of Achrida, and metropolitan of Bulgaria in the eleventh century, was a native of Constantinople, and wrote Commentaries on the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles; also on some of the Minor Prophets and Epistles, printed at Paris in folio. He was also the author of Letters and Institutio Regia, 4to.—Dupin.

THERAMENES, an Athenian philosopher and general, was one of the thirty tyrants who assumed the government of Athens, but he opposed their cruelties, on which Critias, one of his colleagues, accused him of troubling the state, and Theramenes was condemned to take poison B. C. 403. It is remarkable that as he took the fatal bowl he said, "here's to the health of Critias," which proves that drinking healths was a custom among the ancient Greeks.—Plutarch.

THESPIA, a Greek poet of Attica, supposed by some to be the inventor of tragedy, 536 B. C. He went from town to town in a cart, on which was erected a temporary stage, where two actors, with faces daubed by the lees of wine, entertained the audience with choral songs and speeches.—Laert.

THEVENOT (Melchisedeck), librarian to the king of France, was born at Paris in 1621. He was ambassador at Constantinople and at Genoa, and assisted at a conclave held after the death of pope Innocent X. He died in 1692. His Travels in the Levant, 2 vols. folio, are highly esteemed. He also wrote the Art of Swimming, 12mo.—Moreri.

THEVENOT (John), another traveller, who died in 1667. He introduced coffee into France, and was the author of Travels in Asia, 3 vols. 4to. and 5 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

THIERS (John Baptist), a learned divine of the Sorbonne, was born at Chartres about 1636. After being a professor in the university of Paris he obtained the benefice of Champrond, in the diocese of Chartres, where he embroiled himself in disputes with his superiors respecting ecclesiastical dues. He died in 1703. He wrote a Treatise on Superstitions respecting the Sacraments; a History of Perukes; De Festorum Dierum Immunitioe liber, and several other curious works.—Morevi.

THIRLBY (Styan), an ingenious and learned English critic, was born about 1692, and died in 1753. He was a doctor of laws of the university of Cambridge, and wrote a Tract against Whiston on the Trinity; but he is principally known by his capital edition of Justin's works, folio, 1723.—Anecd. of Boyer.

THIELIN (John Philip), a painter, was born at Mechlin in 1618. He was a nobleman of considerable fortune, and was employed by the king of Spain. He excelled in painting flowers, and died in 1667. His three daughters painted in the same style as the father.—Pilkington.

THOMAS, surnamed Didymus, an apostle of Jesus Christ, was a native of Galilee. He is distinguished in the sacred history by his disbelief of the resurrection of his master, on which Jesus vouchsafed to permit him to put his fingers into his wounds, on which Thomas exclaimed, "my Lord and my God." He suffered martyrdom in India.—Cave.

THOMAS (James Ernest), a landscape painter, was born at Haglestein in 1588, and died in 1653. He resided a long time in Italy, where he cultivated the friendship of Elzheimer, whose style he adopted.—Felibien.

THOMAS (William), a learned prelate, was born at Bristol in 1613, and educated at St. John's college, Oxford, after which he entered into orders. In 1665 he obtained the deanry of Worcester, and in 1677 was consecrated bishop of St. David's, from whence he was translated to Worcester, where he died in 1689. He wrote an Apology for the Church of England; Roman Oracles silenced; and several Sermons. His grandson, William Thomas, was also a divine of the church of England, and an eminent antiquary. He published an improved edition of Dugdale's History of Warwickshire, 2 vols. folio, and a Survey of the Cathedral of Worcester. He died in 1738.—Wood. Gen. Biog. Diog.

THOMAS (Elizabeth), commonly called Corinna, an ingenious English lady, was born in 1675. She lost her lover, Mr. Gwynet, as they were about to be married in 1711, which proved the source of her misfortunes. The remainder of her life was a scene of trouble and sickness. Being intimate with Mr. Henry Cromwell, his Letters with some of Mr. Pope's, came into her hands, and Curll, the bookseller, having obtained them sent them to the press, which so provoked the poet that he gave Corinna no honourable place in his Dunciad. She died in 1730. Her Poems and Letters were published in 2 vols. after her death.—Gen. Diog.

THOMAS (Anthony Leonard), a member of the French academy, was born at Clermont, in Auvergne, in 1732, and died in 1785. He wrote in 1756 Reflections, historical and literary, on Voltaire's poem of Natural Religion, in which he defends christianity with great energy. In 1759 his Eloge of the Marshal Saxe was crowned by the French academy. He afterwards celebrated the memories of D'Aguesseau, Du Guay Trouin, Sully, Des Cartes, and Marcus Aurelius. He also wrote an Essay on the Character, Manners, and Minds of Females, 8vo; an Essay upon Elogies, 2 volumes 8vo. He was likewise a good poet. A complete edition of his works appeared at Paris in 1802, 7 vols. 8vo.—Nouv. Diog. Hist.

THOMASUS (James), professor of eloquence at Leipsic, was born there of a good family. Leibnitz was his disciple, and had a great opinion of his philosophical talents. He died in 1684. His principal works are, the Origin of Philosophical and Ecclesiastical History; and several learned Dissertations, 11 vols. 8vo. His son, Christian Thomastus, published a German Literary Journal at Leipsic, for some articles of which he was obliged to quit his country and go to Berlin. The king of Prussia made him professor of law in the university of Halle, where he died in 1728. He wrote in Defence of Concubinage; the History of Wisdom and Folly; and some other books.—Ibid.

THOMSON (James), an eminent poet, was born at Ednam, in the shire of Roxburgh, in 1700. He was educated at Jedburgh, and afterwards at Edinburgh, with a view to the ministry in the church of Scotland, which profession he declined. Having written his poem of Winter, he brought it to London where it was published, but lay unnoticed for a considerable time. Afterwards its great merit brought it into notice and popularity, and the author added the other three seasons. Mr. Thomson accompanied the hon. Mr. Talbot in his travels, and on his return settled at Richmond, in narrow circumstances. He produced some dramatic pieces of considerable merit; Liberty, a poem, and the Cattle of Indolence, in the manner of Spenser. But his fame rests upon the poem of the Seasons, to which even Dr. Johnson has borne the testimony of approbation. In descriptive scenery, and pathetic expression, few poets will be found to excel Thomson. His manners were gentle and inoffensive, and his piety rational and unassuming. About two years before his death he obtained the place of surveyor-general of the Leeward Islands. He died in 1748. His works have been printed in four volumes 12mo.—Life prefixed to his works.

THORNTON (Ralph), a topographer and antiquary, was born at Leeds, in Yorkshire, in 1638. He was fellow of the royal society, and wrote the Topography of Leeds and the parts adjacent. He died in 1725.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

THORIUS (Raphael) a physician in the reign of James I. who was distinguished by his learning, and his love of wine. He was a French protestant, and died in London, of the plague, in 1625. He wrote a poem on Tobacco, in Latin, and some other works.—Wicod.

THORNDIKE (Herbert), a learned divine, was educated at Trinity college, Cambridge, where he proceeded to his degree of bachelor in divinity. In 1633 he was elected master of Sidney college, of which he was soon after deprived for his loyalty. At the Restoration he obtained a prebend in Westminster abbey. He died in 1672. He wrote a folio volume, entitled Epilogus, in which he defends the church of England with great learning and ability. He was also the author of a Treatise on Weights and Measures; another on Church Censures, and assisted Walton in the Polyglot.—Collier.

THORNHILL (sir James), an eminent painter, was born in Dorsetshire in 1676. His uncle, the famous Dr. Sydenham, enabled him to pursue his inclination for painting, and he greatly improved himself abroad. The dome of St. Paul's, the hospital at Greenwich, and Hampton-court palace, exhibit fine specimens of his great talents in composition. He was appointed principal painter to queen Anne, who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He acquired considerable wealth by his profession, and became a member of the house of commons. He died in 1732. Hogarth married his daughter.—Pilkington.

THORNTON (Bonnel), an English poet, and miscellaneous writer, was born in London in 1724, and educated at Westminster-school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford, where he engaged with Colman, and others, in a periodical work entitled the Student; and afterwards in another, called the Connoisseur. In 1766 he published a translation of Plautus, 2 vols. 8vo. and the year following a burlesque poem, called the Battle of the Wigs, against the physicians. He died in 1768.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

THOU (James Augustus de), or THUANUS, a celebrated historian, was the son of Christopher de Thou, first president of the parliament of Paris, and was born in that city in 1553. He was intended for the ecclesiastical state, and his uncle, the bishop of Chartres, resigned some of his benefices in his favour; but the death of his elder brother altered the plan, and he became a counsellor to the parliament, and afterwards president. Henry III. employed him in an embassy first to Vienna and next to Venice. Henry IV. admitted him into his councils, and engaged him in several important negotiations. He died universally respected in 1617. The history of his own time from 1545 to 1607, is written in pure Latin, and with great fidelity. The best edition is that of London in 7 vols folio. His Latin poems were printed in 1611, 4to. His son, Francis Augustus de Thou, was principal librarian to the king, but having attached himself to Cinq-Mars, he was condemned to death, and beheaded at Lyons in 1642.—Moreri.

THRASYBULUS, a celebrated Athenian, who, in the time of the thirty tyrants, took refuge at Thebes. Having gained some followers, he marched against the usurpers and expelled them. There was instituted a yearly feast at Athens in commemoration of this triumph. Thrasybulus afterwards wisely procured a general amnesty to be passed, which decreed that no one should be punished for the disorders which had passed but the principals. He displayed his valour in Thrace, and slew the Lacedæmonian general with his own hand. Thrasybulus fell in a battle with the Aspendians, who were the allies of Sparta, B.C. 394.—Plutarch.

THUCYDIDES, a Greek historian, was born at Athens 469 years B.C. He was of noble birth, and on arriving at maturity entered into the army, but failing in an expedition with which he had been entrusted, he was banished, and in his exile he wrote the History of his Times; a work which far exceeds that of Herodotus. He was afterwards recalled, and died at Athens B.C. 391. The best editions of Thucydides are that of Stephens, Paris, 1588; that of Oxford, by Hudson, 1696; and that of Duker, Amst. 1792; all in folio.

THUILLIER (Dom Vincent), a member of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Coucy in 1685, and died in 1736. He translated Polybius into French, 6 vols 4to.; and wrote Letter of an antient Professor of Theology on the Bull Unigenitus.—Moreri.

THUNBERG (Charles Peter), a celebrated Swedish botanist, was the disciple of Linnæus. The government of Holland sent him to their settlements in Japan, where he made great collections. After this he went to Ceylon, and on his return to Europe, became professor of botany at Upsal. He died at the end of the eighteenth century. His Flora Japonica was published at Leipzig in 1784, 8vo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

THURLOE (John), a political writer, was born in Essex in 1616, and bred to the law. He became confidential secretary to Cromwell, and was admitted into all his private parties. He continued in the same situation to his son; and at the Restoration was committed into custody, but was soon released. He died at Great Milton, in Oxfordshire, in 1668

His state papers have been printed in 7 vols. folio.—Gen. Dict.

THYSIUS (Anthony), a learned writer, was born at Harderwick in Holland about 1603. He was professor of poetry and eloquence at Leyden, and librarian of the university. He died in 1670. His works are, Compendium Historiæ Bataviæ; Exercitationes Miscellanæ; and several of the variorum editions of the Classics.—Moreri.

TIARINI (Alexander), a painter, was born at Bologna in 1577, and died in 1668. He painted portraits and historical subjects in a fine style.—Pilington.

TIBERIUS (Claudius Nero), emperor of Rome, succeeded Augustus. The beginning of his reign was popular, and he affected to be thought the father of the people; but he afterwards displayed his real character in his cruelty to his mother Livia and his wife Julia, and in the murder of many of the senators. He also caused Germanicus to be poisoned, and committed numerous excesses. He died in the midst of debauchery at Misenum, A. D. 57, aged 78.—Suetonius. Tacitus.

TIBERIUS (Constantine), emperor of the East, was originally a Thracian, and by his merit rose to the first offices in the state. Justin the younger appointed him his colleague in 574. On the death of Justin, in 578, he became sole emperor. His armies defeated the Persians, and he reigned with great wisdom and moderation. He died in 582.—Un. Hist.

TIBULLUS (Aulus Albius), a Roman poet in the reign of Augustus. He had served in the army, which he quitted for a life of pleasure and indolence. Four books of his Elegies remain, which are distinguished for their elegance. They are usually published with Catullus and Propertius.—Biog. Clusæ.

TICKELL (Thomas), a poet and miscellaneous writer, was born in Cumberland in 1686, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford. He translated the first book of the Iliad, which Addison preferred to that of Pope. He also wrote some papers in the Spectator, and became private secretary to Mr. Addison, when he was secretary of state. He wrote a beautiful poem on the death of that great man, and published a collection of his works. He died in 1740.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

TICKELL (Richard), a poet and political writer, who died in 1793. He published "The Project," and the "Wreath of Fashion," poems which had some popularity. But his principal piece was a pamphlet, called Anticipation, in which he imitated the manner and style of the leading members of the house of commons in 1779. He also adapted the Gentle Shepherd to the stage, and wrote the Carnival of Venice, a comic opera.—Ibid.

TIDEMAN (Philip), a painter, was born at Hamburgh in 1657, and died in 1703. He was the disciple of Laireffe, and painted subjects of fabulous history and allegory.—Pilington.

TIGRANES, king of Armenia, maintained a war against the Romans, but was defeated by Lucullus and Pompey. By a bribe of 60,000 talents, he was suffered to keep possession of his throne. His son, of the same name, revolted against him, but was defeated. The Romans, however, made him king of Sophene. He was afterwards sent in chains to Rome, by Pompey.

TILINGIUS (Mathias), a learned physician, was born in Westphalia, became professor at Rinteln, physician to the court of Hesse-cassel, and died in 1615. His works are, 1. Curiosa Rhabarbari disquisition, 4to.; 2. Lilii Albi descriptio, 8vo.; De Laudano opiate, 8vo.; 4. Opilogia Nova, 4to.; 5. De Febribus, 8vo.; 6. Cinnabari Mineralis, 8vo.—Moreri.

TILLEMANS (Peter), a landscape painter, was a native of Antwerp; he came to England in 1708, and was employed by several noblemen in taking views of their seats, huntings, races, and horses. He died in 1734.—Vertue.

TILLEMONT (Sebastian Le Nain de), a French historian and critic, was born at Paris in 1637. He was educated in the school at Port Royal, and became one of the best writers of that institution. His History of the Emperors; and Ecclesiastical History, are written with great fidelity and clearness. He died in 1698.—Moreri.

TILLI (John, count), an illustrious general, was born at Brussels, and was for some time a member of the order of Jesuits, which he quitted for a military life. He displayed great courage in Hungary against the Turks, and in 1620 had the command of the troops under duke Maximilian, at the battle of Prague. He shewed superior talents in numerous actions in the German wars, and was no less distinguished by his humanity. He was at last defeated by Gustavus Adolphus, of Sweden, and received a mortal wound in defending the passage of the Lech in 1632.—Moreri.

TILLI (Michael Angelo), a botanist and physician, was born at Florence in 1655, and educated at Pisa. At the recommendation of Quedi, he was appointed physician to the great duke, and was successively professor in the university of Pisa, superintendent of the botanic garden, and fellow of the royal society of London. His greatest work is the Catalogus Horti Pisani, in fol. printed at Florence, 1723. He died in 1740, aged 85.—Halleri Bibl. Bot.

TILLOTSON (John), an eminent prelate, was the son of a clothier at Sowerby, in Yorkshire, and born in 1630. He received his education at Clare-hall, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow in 1651. Though bred among the Puritans, he conformed at the Restoration to the church of England, and became curate of Chestnutt, in Hertfordshire. In 1663 he was chosen preacher to the society of Lincoln's-Inn, and the year after, lecturer of St. Lawrence Jewry. In 1666 he took his degree of D.D. and in 1670 was made prebendary and two years after dean of Canterbury. He attended lord Russell on the scaffold, and endeavoured to prevail on him to acknowledge the doctrine of non-resistance, a principle which the doctor himself had afterwards occasion to renounce. He was very zealous against popery in the reign of James II. and immediately after the Revolution became the confidential friend of William and Mary, who bestowed on him the archbishopric of Canterbury after the deprivation of Dr. Sancroft. This drew upon him the hatred of the non-jurors, who published many severe animadversions upon him. He also received numerous letters of abuse, a large bundle of which was found in his study, with this inscription in his handwriting on the back, "These are libels, I pray God forgive the authors of them, I do." This excellent prelate died in the arms of his pious friend Mr. Nelson, in 1694. His Sermons were published after his death, for the benefit of his widow, in 10 vols. 8vo. and 3 vols. folio. They are distinguished by their perspicuity and closeness of reasoning.—Life by Birch.

TIMAGENES, an historian, who was a native of Alexandria, and became a slave at Rome, to the son of Sylla. His master gave him his liberty on account of his abilities. He was afterwards in the service of Augustus, but lost his favour, on which he burnt the history of his reign which he had written.—Vossius.

TIMÆUS of Locria, a philosopher, who was a disciple of Pythagoras. He held that there is a universal motion throughout nature. A little treatise by him on the Nature of the Soul, and of the World, is in the works of Plato, and gave to that philosopher the idea of his Timæus.—Diog. Laert. Suidas.

TIMOLEON, a celebrated Corinthian. His brother Timophanes aiming at the sovereign power, was slain by Timoleon, assisted by his brother Satyrus. Timoleon went afterwards to relieve the Syracusans from the tyranny of Dionysius, whom he compelled to fly. Timoleon spent the rest of his life at Syracuse, and died B. C. 337.—Plutarch.

TIMON, the Misanthrope, was born near Athens B. C. 420. He declared himself the enemy of the human race, and had a companion named Apemautus, who possessed a similar disposition. The latter asking him one day why he paid such respect to Alcibiades, "It is," says the churl, "because I foresee that he will prove the ruin of the Athenians."—Plutarch.

TIMOTEO (da Urbino), an eminent painter, was born at Urbino in 1470, and died in 1524. He painted historical subjects, portraits, and landscapes in a fine style.—Pilkington.

TIMOTHEUS, a poet and musician of Miletus. He was the friend of Euripides, and received an immense sum from the Ephesians, for a poem in honour of Diana. He died B. C. 557.—Pliny.

TIMOTHY, the disciple of St. Paul, was a native of Lystra, a city of Lycaonia. His father was a Pagan, but his mother was a Jewess. He became bishop of Ephesus, where, it is said, he was stoned to death, A. D. 97.—Asiatick. Res.

TINDAL (Matthew), a deistical writer, was born at Beer-ferris, in Devonshire, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of All-souls college, and took his degree of doctor of laws. He turned papist in the reign of James II. but professed himself a protestant and took the oaths at the Revolution to keep his fellowship. He died in 1733. His works are, 1. The Rights of the Christian Church, 8vo. 1706. The design of this work, which was anonymous, was to shew the inutility of the clergy. 2. Christianity as Old as the Creation, 4to. 1730. In this he endeavoured to undermine revelation. It was answered by several able writers, particularly Conybeare, Leland, and Foster.—Gen. Dict.

TINDAL (Nicholas), nephew of the preceding, was educated at Exeter-college, Oxford, and became fellow of Trinity-college, rector of Colbourn, in the Isle of Wight; and chaplain to Greenwich hospital, where he died in 1774. He published a translation and continuation of Rapin's "History of England."—Anecd. of Bowyer.

TINELLI (Tiberio), an historical and portrait painter, was born at Venice in 1566, and died in 1638. Louis XII. conferred on him the order of St. Michael.—De Piles.

TINTORETTO (James Robusti), a famous painter, was born at Venice in 1512. He was a disciple of Titian, who, fearing that he would become a powerful rival, dismissed him. He was called the furious Tintoretto, from the bold manner of his painting, and the rapidity of his genius. He died in 1594. His son and daughter were also good artists.—De Piles.

TIPPOO-SAIB, sovereign of Mysore and the Maharrattas, was the son of Hyder Ally, whom he succeeded in the government of his estates, which he defended with success against the Great Mogul. In 1790 he engaged in a war with the English, and was defeated in a number of actions. In 1792 lord Cornwallis obliged him to sue for peace, when Tippoo delivered his two sons as hostages. The war was resumed in 1799, which terminated with the entire conquest of Myfore and the death of Tippoo, who fell fighting bravely on the ramparts of his capital. His library was stored with valuable MSS. which are now in the college of Calcutta.—Hist. War in India.

TIRABOSCHI (Jerome), a celebrated Italian writer, was born at Bergamo in 1731. He was a Jesuit, and became professor of rhetoric at Milan. The duke of Modena appointed him his librarian, and he was enrolled among the nobility of that city. He died in 1794. His works are, 1. Memoirs on the Antient Order of Homilies, 3 vols. 4to. 2. History of the Writers of Modena, 6 vols. 4to. 3. History of Italian Literature from the age of Augustus, 13 vols. 4to.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

TIRAQUEAU (Andrew), or Tiraquellus, a French lawyer of the 16th century. He was a counsellor in the parliament of Paris, and laboured much to drive chicanery from the bar. He was employed by Francis I. and Henry II. in affairs of consequence, and approved himself a man of singular integrity. His works amount to 7 vols. in folio. He died in 1574.—Moreri.

TISSOT, an eminent Swiss physician, who distinguished himself in favour of inoculation, and also in recommending an experimental practice of physic. His medical works, particularly his advice to people concerning their health, are truly excellent. He died in 1797.—Novo. Dict.

TITIANO, or Vecelli, an Italian painter, was born at Cadore, in Friuli, in 1480. His master was Giovanni Bellini, whose stiff and laboured stile Titian adopted; but on perceiving the works of Giorgione he altered his manner, and contracted an intimacy with that great artist. The reputation of Titian rose rapidly, and the emperor Charles V. conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and a pension. He painted history, portraits, and landscape. His principal pictures are, A Last Supper, in the Escorial in Spain, and one at Milan, representing Christ crowned with Thorns. He died in 1576. His brother Francis was also a good artist in history and portrait, and Horatio, the son of Titian, painted some excellent portraits. He died in 1579.—De Pile.

TITUS VESPASIAN, a Roman emperor, was the son of Vespasian, and born in A. D. 40. He served under his father, and distinguished himself greatly at the siege of Jerusalem. In the year 79 he obtained the imperial dignity. In his youth he was dissipated and extravagant, which gave room to fear that he would prove another Tiberius or Nero, but his subsequent conduct proved these apprehensions were groundless. He became the pattern of virtue, and the father of his people. He reformed the courts of law, and severely punished informers. Regarding his time as precious only for the public good, he once said, on the recollection of not having done any act of utility, "My friends, I have lost a day." He died A. D. 81.—Cresier.

TITUS, a disciple of St. Paul, was a Greek and a Gentile, but on his conversion he became amanuensis to the apostle, who consecrated him bishop of Crete, where he died at an advanced age.—Cave.

TIXIER (John), or Rossius Tector, was lord of Ravisy, in the district of Nivernois. He taught the belles lettres in the college of Navarre, at Paris, with considerable success, and died in 1532. He wrote letters, dialogues, epigrams, and a work entitled "Officina Epitome," 8vo.—Moreri.

TODD (Hugh), an English divine, was born in Cumberland, about 1660, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford. His publications were, "The Description of Sweden," "The Life of Phocion," &c. He left in MS. Notitia Ecclesie Cathedralis Carliensis, &c. Notitia Prioratus de Weddeshall, &c. "A History of the Diocese of Carlisle," &c. He died after 1708.—Gen. Dict.

TOLAND (John), a deistical writer, was born in Ireland in 1669, and brought up a papist. But at the age of fifteen he turned protestant, and afterwards went to the university of Glasgow, from whence he removed to Edinburgh. After visiting Leyden and Oxford, he returned to Ireland, which country he was obliged to leave to avoid a prosecution for writing his book called "Christianity not Mystical." In 1698 he published the Life of Milton; which was followed by his deistical book entitled "Nazarenus," and several other pieces of a like tendency. He died in 1722. His posthumous works were printed in 2 vols. 8vo. 1726.—Gen. Dict.

TOLLIVS (Jacob), a learned physician, was born at Ingra, in the territory of Utrecht, and became professor of eloquence and Greek, at Brandenburg. He published editions of Ausonius and Longinus with notes. He died in 1696. His brother Cornelius became amanuensis to Isaac Vossius, and afterwards professor of Greek and rhetoric at Harderwyck. He published a piece entitled "De Infelicitate Literatorum." Another brother called Alexander is known by a good edition of Appian.—Moreri.

TOLLET (Elizabeth), an ingenious English lady, was born in 1694, and died unmarried in 1754. She was skilled in Latin, French, and Italian, and was acquainted with history and mathematics. She wrote some poems and a drama called "Susanna, or Innocence Preserved."—Biog. Dram.

TOMPION (Thomas), an English watch and clock-maker of extraordinary merit, who died in 1696.

TONSTALL (Cuthbert), a learned prelate, was born in 1476. He studied at Oxford, Cambridge, and at Padua, and was accounted the best mathematician of his time. He was consecrated bishop of London, in 1522; the year following made lord privy-seal; and in 1530 translated to Durham, of which he was deprived in the reign of Elizabeth for denying her supremacy. He died in confinement in 1559. He wrote a treatise, De Arte Supputandi, Lond. 1522, 4to.—Gen. Diß.

TOOKE (George), an English poet, was born about 1595. He served in the expedition against Cadiz, in 1625, as captain of a band of volunteers, the particulars of which he has described in a poem. He died in 1675. He wrote canzonets to the memory of his wife.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

TOOKE (Thomas), an English divine, was born in Kent, and educated at St. Paul's school, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi-college, Cambridge. TURENNE (Henry de la Tour d'Auvergne), viscount de, second son of the duc de Bouillon, and Elizabeth of Nassau, daughter of William I. of Nassau, prince of Orange, was born at Sedan in 1611. He learned the art of war under prince Maurice, his maternal uncle, and became the greatest general of his age. After several gallant actions he took Brisach in 1638, for which Richelieu offered him his niece in marriage, but Turenne being a protestant declined the honour. The next year he served in Italy, and afterwards signalized himself by the conquest of Roussillon. At the age of twenty-three he became field-marshal, and in 1644 was appointed marshal of France. About this time he was sent to Germany, where he gained several victories, but was defeated in 1645 at Manin-dall. He shortly after repaired this loss by the battle of Northlingen, and the same year re-established the elector of Treves in his estates. In the following year he effected the famous junction with the Swedish army, and obliged the duke of Bavaria to sue for peace. That prince having violated the treaty, Turenne defeated him in the battle of Zusmarshausen, and drove him from his dominions. In the civil wars of France he acted at first against the court, but in 1651 he made his peace, and became general of the royal army, and was opposed to the prince of Condé, whom he defeated. In 1657 he took Dunkirk in conjunction with the English troops. This was followed by the capture of several places in Flanders, which produced peace between France and Spain in 1659. The war being renewed in 1667 he was appointed general marshal of all the armies, and had the honour of instructing the king in the art of war. About this time he renounced the protestant religion. In 1674 he conquered Franche Comté, which occasioned a league between the German states against France. To prevent their junction Turenne attacked the army commanded by the duke of Lorraine, and gained a splendid victory. He afterwards defeated the imperialists at Mulhausen, and again at Turkheim. Montecuculi was then sent against him, and while the two armies were in view of each other, and preparing for battle, Turenne was killed by a cannon ball, at Sultzbach, in 1675.—M. reri.

He removed the papal seat from Avignon to Rome. This pope founded many churches, and reformed numerous abuses. He died in 1370.—Pia-tina. Bouvier.

URBAN VI. an Italian, was elected to the papal chair in 1378. The cardinals afterwards chose Robert of Geneva, who took the name of Clement VII. Urban severely persecuted his enemies after securing his seat. He died in 1389.—Bouvier.

URBAN VIII. (Maffeo Barberino), ascended the pontifical throne in 1623. He condemned the Jansenists, and died in 1644. He wrote Latin poems, printed at Paris, in folio, and Italian poems, printed at Rome in 1640, 12mo.—Tiraboschi.

URCEUS (Anthony Codrus), a learned Italian, was born in 1416. His works are, Speeches, Letters, and Poems, in Latin. He died in 1500.—Bayle.

URSINUS (Zachariah), a protestant divine, was born at Breslaw in 1534. On turning Calvinist he was persecuted by the Lutherans, which induced him to go to Heidelberg, and from thence to Newstadt, where he became professor of divinity. He died in 1583. His works have been printed in 3 vols. folio. He is not to be confounded with George Ursinus, a Danish divine, who published a learned treatise on the Hebrew Antiquities.—Ibid.

URSINUS (John Henry), a lutheran divine, who was superintendent of the churches of Ratibon. He died in 1667. His works are, 1. Exercitationes de Zoroastro, Hennete, Sanchoinathone, 8vo; 2. Sylve Theologicæ & symbolice, 12mo; 3. De Ecclesiarum Germanicarum origine et progressu, 8vo. His son, George Henry, wrote some philological works. He died in 1707.—Ibid.

URSUS (Nicolas-Raymarus), a Danish mathematician, was in his youth a swineherd, and did not learn to read till he was eighteen. His progress afterwards was very rapid, both in the languages and sciences. He taught mathematics at Stralsburgh, from whence he was invited to a professorship at Prague. He died in 1600.

He invented an astronomical system so like that of Tycho Brahe as to bring him into a dispute with that astronomer respecting the right of discovery.—Moreri.

USHER (James), an illustrious prelate, was born of an antient family at Dublin in 1580. His uncle, Henry Usher, archbishop of Armagh, the founder of Trinity college, placed him in that seminary, where he made a great progress in all kinds of learning. At the age of sixteen he formed a Chronology of the Bible, in Latin, which was the origin of his great work, afterwards published under the title of Annals of the Old and New Testament, the best edition of which is that of Geneva in 1722, in 2 vols. folio. In 1607 he was appointed professor of divinity at Dublin, and chancellor of St. Patrick's cathedral. In 1620 he was promoted to the bishopric of Meath, from whence he was translated to the archbishopric of Armagh in 1626. On the breaking out of the Irish rebellion he retired to England, and was promoted to the see of Carlisle, from which he received no advantage, owing to the civil wars and the abolition of episcopacy, of which he approved himself a zealous advocate. The curates of the university of Leyden offered him a professorship, which he declined; as he also did an invitation from cardinal Richelieu to settle in France with the free liberty of his religion. He died in 1656, and was buried at Westminster abbey. Besides his Annals, he published a Body of Divinity, folio; the History of Gorchalc in Latin; Antiquitates Ecclesiarum Britannicarum, folio; a Edition of the Epistles of Ignatius, Barnabas, and Polycarp, with notes; Sermons and other learned works.—Life by Parr; preface to Usher's Letters, 1686, folio.

UTENBOGAERT (John), one of the principal supporters of the Remonstrants, was born at Utrecht in 1557, and died at the Hague in 1644. His principal works are an Ecclesiastical History, folio; and Memoirs of his own Life, 4to.

V.

VAILLANT (John Foy), a French medallist, was born at Beauvais in 1632. He studied medicine, in which he took his doctor's degree. Colbert employed him to collect medals in the East for the royal cabinet. On his return he was taken by the Algerines. After a captivity of some months he recovered his liberty, and being in danger of shipwreck he swallowed some of his largest medals, which did not come away for a considerable time. In 1702 he became pensionary of the academy of inscriptions. He died in 1706. His principal works are, 1. History of the Casars, 2 vols. 4to.; 2. Seleucidarum Imperium, 4to.; 3. Historia Ptolemaeorum, Ægypti Regum, folio; 4. Nummi Antiqui Familiarum Romanarum, two vols. folio; 5. Numismata Græca, folio. His son, John Francis, was a learned physician and medallist. He died in 1708. He wrote a Treatise on the Nature and Use of Coffee; and a Dissertation on the Cabiri.—Moreri.

VAILLANT (Sebastian), a French physician and botanist, was born at Vigny, near Pontoise, in 1609. He became superintendent of the royal garden, and a member of the academy of sciences. He died in 1722. His works are, 1. Remarks on Tournefort's Botanical Institutions; 2. Discourse on the Structure of Flowers; 3. Botanicon Parisiense, or a Description of Plants which grow about Paris, folio, with plates; 4. a small Botanicon, 12mo. 1743.—Halleri Bibl. Botan.

VAILLANT (Willeran), a portrait painter, was born at Lille in 1633. He was employed at the French court, and died in 1677. His brother Bernard was a good painter of portraits in crayons.—Pilk.

VAISSETTE (Joseph), a learned benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Gaillac in 1685. He wrote, 1. Discourse on the Origin of the French Nation; History of Languedoc, folio; a Universal Geography, 4 vols. 4to. He died in 1756.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

VALENS (Flavius), emperor of the East, was the son of Gratian, born in Pannonia in 328. He was taken as associate in the empire by his brother Valentinian in 364. He was a zealous Arian, and violently persecuted the orthodox bishops, who were all banished. Valens forced the Goths to make peace, but imprudently suffered them to settle in Thrace, where they were joined by great numbers of barbarians, and the war being renewed he marched against them, but was defeated near Adrianople. His soldiers carried him off and lodged him in a house, to which the pursuers set fire, and he was burnt alive A. D. 378.—Crevier.

VALENTIN (Moses), an eminent painter, was born at Colomiers in Brie, in 1600. He adopted the manner of Caravaggio, and his pieces are highly esteemed. He died at Rome in 1632.—De Piles.

VALENTINE, an heresiarch of the second century, was a native of Egypt, and a philosopher of the platonic sect. Being disappointed of a bishopric, he separated from the church, and improved upon the gnostic notion of Æons, certain beings, as he pretended, by whom the world was created and governed. He gained followers, and died A. D. 160.

VALENTINE (Basil), the fictitious name of a chemical author in the sixteenth century, whose writings are in the German language, but have been translated into Latin and English. The principal are, 1. Curus Triumphalis Antimonii, or the Triumphant Chariot of Antimony, Amst. 1671, 12mo.; 2. the Twelve Keys of Philosophy, 8vo.; 3. Testament of Basil Valentine, 12mo.—Moreri.

VALENTINE (Michael Bernard), professor of medicine at Gießen, was born there in 1657, and died in 1729. He wrote, 1. Historia Simplicium Reformata, folio; 2. Amphitheatrum Zootomicum, folio; 3. Medicina Nova-Antiqua, 4to.; 4. Cynofura Medicæ, 3 vols. 4to.; 5. Viridarium Reformatum, folio; 6. Corpus Juris Medicolegale, folio; 7. Physiologia Biblicæ Capitæ Selectæ, 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VALENTINIAN I. emperor of the West, was the eldest son of Gratian. He gave the empire of the East to his brother Valens, in 364, after which he defeated the Germans, and quelled a revolt in Africa. The Quadi having taken up arms in 374, he marched against them and ravaged their country with fire and sword, which compelled them to sue for peace; but while he was speaking to their ambassadors he broke a blood vessel through passion, of which he died A. D. 375. His son, Valentinian II., was saluted emperor on his father's death by the soldiers, but he did not obtain it till his brother Gratian's death in 383. He was dethroned by the tyrant Maximus in 387. Theodosius restored him after defeating Maximus the year following; but in 392 he was strangled by his general, Arbogastes. Valentinian was a prince of great virtues and eminent piety. There was a third emperor of this name, who was the grandson of Theodosius the Great, and acknowledged emperor in 423 at the age of six years, under the guardianship of his mother, Placidia, who governed with great prudence; but when Valentinian came of age he plunged into debauchery, and ruled with such tyranny that he was publicly assassinated in 455.—Crevier.

VALERIANUS (Publius Licinius), a Roman, who was proclaimed emperor by his soldiers in Rhætia in 254. He associated his son Gallienus in the government, and persecuted the christians. He made war on the Goths and Scythians with some success, but he was taken prisoner in an expedition against Sapor, king of Persia, who carried him to his capital in triumph, and treated him with great indignity, after which he ordered him to be flayed alive, and his body to be rubbed with salt, in which state he expired, A. D. 270, aged 71. His skin being tanned red was nailed up in a temple.—Ib.

VALERIANUS (Pierius), a learned Italian, was born at Belluno, in the state of Venice, about 1475. Leo X. and Julius II. offered him a bishopric, which he refused, and accepted only the place of apostolic notary; he died in 1558. His chief works are Latin Poems in 2 vols. 8vo.—Moreri.

VALERIUS MAXIMUS, a Latin historian, who served with Sextus Pompeius in the army, and at his return wrote a collection of remarkable actions and sayings of eminent Romans, dedicated to Tiberius. The best edition is that of Leyden with notes, 8vo. 1670.—Vossius.

VALESIUS (Henry), or Henry de Valois, a learned critic, was born at Paris in 1603; he was brought up to the bar, which profession he abandoned and devoted himself to literary pursuits. His merit procured him the place of historiographer to the king, and a pension; he also received another from the clergy of France for publishing an edition of the Ancient Ecclesiastical Historians, printed at Amsterdam in 1639, in 3 vols. folio; and at Cambridge in 1720. He became blind, and died in 1726. His brother Adrian was also royal historiographer, and published a work entitled, Gesta Francorum, 3 vols. folio. He died in 1692.—Niceron.

VALINCOURT (John Baptist Henry du Trouffet de), a French writer, was born in Picardy in 1653, and died in 1730. He wrote, the Life of Francis of Lorraine, Duke of Guise, 12mo.; Critical Observations on the Œdipus of Sophocles, 4to. &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VALKENBURGH (Theodore), a painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1675. He acquired considerable property, which he lost in an unfortunate voyage to the West Indies. He died very poor in his native country in 1721. His pictures, especially those representing dead game, are valuable. There was another artist of this name, who died in 1623; he painted markets and sports.—Houbraken.

VALLA (Laurence), an Italian writer, was born at Placenza in 1415. He revived the Latin language from Gothic barbarity; but he was a very rigorous critic. Having hazarded some free opinions respecting the doctrines of the Roman church he was condemned to be burnt, but was saved by Alphonso, king of Naples. Valla was then confined in a monastery, but pope Nicholas V., who respected his talents, called him to Rome, and gave him a pension. He died there in 1465. His works are, 1. on the Elegance of the Latin Language, folio, and at Cambridge in octavo; 2. History of the Reign of Ferdinand, King of Arragon, 4to.; 3. Translations of Thucydides, Herodotus, and Homer's Iliad; 4. Notes on the New Testament; 5. Treatise on Falsehood and Truth; 6. Fables.—Tiraboschi.

VALLE (Peter Della), a famous traveller, was a native of Rome. He travelled into Turkey, Egypt, the Holy Land, Persia, and India, and on his return to Rome published an account of his voyages in fifty-four Let-fers; the best edition of which is that of Rome 1662, 4 vols. 4to. He died in 1652, aged 66.—Moreri.

VALLISNERI (Anthony), an eminent Italian naturalist, was born in Tuscany in 1661. He studied under Malpighi, and afterwards became physician to the pope. He died in 1720. His works, which abound with curious discoveries in natural history and medicine, were printed at Venice in 3 vols. 4to. 1773.—Ibid.

VALSALVA (Antony Marie), a famous physician, was born at Imola, in Italy, in 1666. He was professor of anatomy at Bologna, and wrote a valuable treatise concerning the Human Ear, 4to., and some Anatomical Dissertations in Latin, printed at Venice in 2 vols. 4to. 1740. He died in 1723.—Halleri Bibl. Anat.

VALVERDA (John de), a famous Spanish physician, who accompanied the cardinal of Toledo to Rome. He wrote in Spanish a Treatise on Anatomy, printed at Venice in 1589. He was also the author of a Treatise de Animi et Corporis Sanitate truenda, 1553.—Nic. Antonio. Hisp. Scrip.

VANAKEN (Joseph), a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp. He excelled in painting satin, velvet, lace, and embroidery. He died in 1749. There was another of his name who painted landscapes and sea-pieces.—Pilkington.

VANBRUGH (sir John), a dramatic writer and architect, was born in Cheshire. His first comedy, called "the Relapse; or, Virtue in Danger," was acted with applause in 1697, and encouraged him to produce several others, which were all well received, and still hold their place on the stage. He was for some time clarencieux king of arms, which place he sold; and in 1716 was appointed surveyor of Greenwich hospital. He was also comptroller-general of works, and surveyor of the royal gardens. Sir John built several superb edifices, the principal of which is Blenheim, the seat of the duke of Marlborough. He died in 1726.—Biog. Dram.

VANCOUVER (captain George), of the royal navy, author of a "Voyage of Discovery to the North Pacific Ocean, and Round the World," in the years 1790-1795. He died May 10th, 1798.

VANDALE (Anthony), a learned physician, was born in Holland in 1638. He was bred to trade, but quitted that profession for the study of physic, which he practised with reputation at Haerlem, where he died in 1708. He wrote a Treatise on the Oracles, which was answered by several writers, and abridged by Fontenelle. Vandale was also the author of a work on the Origin and Progress of Idolatry; a Dissertation on Aristæas and the Septuagint Version, &c.—Moreri.

VANDER LINDEN (Henry), professor of divinity at Franeker, was born in 1546, and suffered greatly on account of his attachment to the Reformation. He died in 1614.—Ibid.

VANDER LINDEN (John Antonides), grandson of the preceding, was born at Leekuyfen in 1609, and educated at Leyden. He took his degree of doctor of physic at Franeker, where he was chosen professor of physic. In 1651 he accepted the professorship at Leyden, where he died in 1654. His works are, 1. De Scriptis Medicis, 8vo; 2. Selecta Medica, quarto; 3. Editions of the Works of Hippocrates, Celsus, and Spigelius.—Halleri Bibl. Anat.

VANDERMEER (John), a painter, was born at Haerlem in 1628, and perished in a shipwreck in 1690. He excelled in painting landscapes and sea views. His brother was also a good artist in representing landscapes and animals.—Houbraken.

Pope Urban VII. created him doctor of divinity, sent him the cross of the order of Malta, and gave him a place in the apostolic exchequer. He died in 1635. His principal performances are comedies, which were acted with such success at Madrid as to produce the author a considerable fortune. His composition was so ready, and his invention so fertile, that he sometimes wrote a comedy within the compass of a single day. He also wrote several poems; and all his works make twenty-five volumes.—Nic. Antonio de Hist. Script.

VEGETIUS (Flavius Renatus), a Latin writer in the fourth century. He wrote Military Institutions, which give a very exact view of the ancient tactics. He was also the author of a Treatise on the Veterinary Art, which is contained in the Rei Rusticæ Scriptores; Leipzig, 2 vols. 4to. The Military Institutions were printed at Paris in 1762, 12mo.—Voßius.

VEIL (Charles Marie de), a Jew of Metz, who was converted to christianity by Bossuet, and became a canon regular of the order of St. Augustine; but about 1679 he came to England, and turned baptist preacher, and died about 1690. He wrote Commentaries on the minor prophets, and other books of the Scripture. His brother, Lewis, was also converted, and became a protestant. He published a treatise entitled "Catechismus Judæorum in Disputatione et Dialogo Magistræ et Discipuli scriptus a R. Abrahamo Jagel, monte Silicis oriundo," Hebrew and Latin, 1679.—Moreri.

VELASQUEZ (Don Diego de Silva), a Spanish painter, was born at Seville, in 1594, and died at Madrid in 1660. Philip IV. appointed him his first painter, conferred on him the order of knighthood, and granted him a liberal pension. Few of his pictures are to be seen out of his native country.—Cumberland's Ancet. of Spanish Painters.

VELLEIUS-PATERCULUS, a Roman historian, was born of a noble family in Campania. He was a military tribune, and served under Tiberius, in Germany: being the friend of Sejanus, he is supposed to have suffered at the time of his fall. Paterculus wrote an epitome of the History of Greece and Rome, of which only a part remains. The best editions are that of Rhunkenius, Leyden, 2 vols. 8vo, 1779; and that of Burman, 1719, 8vo.—Vossius de Hist. Lat.

VELSERUS (Mark), or Wesler, a learned civilian, was born at Augsburg, and died in 1614. His works are—1. Rerum Augusto-Vindelicarum, folio; 2. Rerum Boicærum, 4to.—Moreri.

VENDOME (Louis Joseph, duke de), a celebrated French general, was born in 1654, and entered early into the army as a volunteer under Louis XIV. in Holland. After passing through the different ranks, he became a general, and was sent into Spain, where he took Barcelona in 1697. The king named him commander in chief in Italy, in 1702, in the room of Villeroy, who had been very unsuccessful. Vendome changed the face of affairs, and gained several victories over the Imperialists. In 1705 he defeated prince Eugene at Cassano, and was on the point of taking Turin, when he was recalled to take the command in Flanders, where he was defeated by the duke of Marlborough. He then went into Spain, restored Philip to his capital, and took the English army, under lord Stanhope, prisoners. He died in Spain in 1712.—Ibid.

VENERONI (John), a French writer, was born at Verdun. He taught Italian at Paris, and, to pass for a Florentine, italianized his name from Vigneron to Veneroni. He wrote, 1. A Method of learning Italian, 1770, 12mo. This grammar has been translated into English, in 8vo. 2. A Dictionary, Italian and French, and French and Italian, 4to.; 3. Select Fables; 4. The Letters of Loredano and cardinal Bentivoglio translated into French.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VENETIANO (Dominic), a Venetian painter, who introduced oil painting into Italy, but communicating the secret to Castagno, he was falsely murdered by him that he might have the secret to himself.—Pilk.

VENIUS, or VAN VEEN, (Otho), a painter, was born at Leyden in 1556. He studied under Zucchero at Rome, after which he went to Antwerp, and from thence to Brussels, where he died in 1634. He had a great knowledge of the claro oscuro. He was also a good writer, and published Amorum Emblemata, and several other works, with plates after his own designs. Rubens was his disciple.—De Pils. Felibien.

VENN (Henry), an English divine, was born at Barnes in Surrey, in 1725, and received his education at Jesus college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and became fellow of Queen's college. In 1759 he was presented to the living of Huddersfield in Yorkshire, which in 1770 he resigned for that of Yelling in Huntingdonshire. He died at Clapham in 1796. Mr. Venn wrote "The Complete Duty of Man," (very different from the Whole Duty of Man); "Sermons on various Subjects, 8vo.;" "Mistakes in Religion exposed, 8vo.;" and several single sermons. He was a high Calvinist.—N. etology, 1798.

VENNER (Tobias), an English physician, was born at Petherton in Somersetshire, in 1577; and educated at Alban-hall, Oxford. In 1613 he took his doctor's degree, and practised first at Bridgewater, and afterwards at Bath; he died in 1660. He wrote a book entitled, "Via recta ad Vitam longam; or an Easy Way to a Long Life;" also a Treatise on the Bath Waters.—Wool.

VENNER (Thomas), a fanatic in the reign of Charles II. He was a cooper in London. He opposed all government, republican and monarchical, asserting that the kingdom of Jesus on earth was begun. He and his followers were called fifth-monarchy men; and soon after the Restoration they proclaimed king Jesus publicly in the streets, for which Venner and twelve others were executed in 1661.—Richard's Hist. Eng.

VERDIER (Casar), a French surgeon, was born near Avignon. He read lectures at Paris with great reputation, and died there in 1759. He wrote, 1. Abridgement of Anatomy, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. Memoirs on Surgery; 3. Treatise on Midwifery, 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VERE (Edward), earl of Oxford, was educated at St. John's college Cambridge. He was eminent for his valour and literary talents. In 1588 he sat upon the trial of Mary queen of Scots, and had a command in the fleet serving against the Spanish armada. He died in 1604. His poems were much admired in his time. There is a specimen in Percy's Reliques of Antient Poetry; and another in England's Parnassus, 4to. 1600.—Theatr. Poet.

VERE (sir Francis), an English general, was born in 1554. In 1585 he went to Holland with the forces sent by queen Elizabeth, under the command of the earl of Leicester. In 1596 he was appointed governor of Flushing, and afterwards gained immortal honour at the battle near Newport, and for his gallant defence of Ostend against the Spaniards. He displayed equal bravery and skill at the siege of Bergen-op-Zoom, and many other occasions. He died in 1608. Sir Horace Vere, his younger brother, served with him in the Low Country wars, and afterwards had the command of the forces sent by king James to the Palatinate. He escaped by wonderful presence of mind and skilful manœuvres from Spinola, with only four thousand men. He was created lord Vere by Charles I. and died in 1635.—Callier. Granger.

VERELST (Simon), an eminent Flemish painter, who excelled in flowers and fruits; he visited England, and died in 1710.—Ver-tue. Pilkington.

VERGENNES (Charles Gravier, count de), a French minister of state, was born of a noble family in Burgundy. In 1755 he was sent ambassador to Constantinople, and afterwards to Sweden; but when Louis XVI. came to the throne he was recalled, and made minister of foreign affairs. He displayed the qualities of a profound statesman, particularly in the peace of 1783. He died in 1787. There has been attributed to him an Historical and Political Memoir upon Louisiana, 2 vols. 8vo. printed in 1802.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VERMEYEN (Philip), an eminent anatomist, was born in Holland in 1643. He laboured as a husbandman till he was twenty-two years of age, and then gained a place at the university of Louvain, where he studied medicine, and received his doctor's degree, and obtained a professorship. He died in 1710. His works are, 1. De Corporis Humani Anatomia, 2 vols. 4to; 2. De Febribus, 8vo.—Halleri. Bibl. Anat.

VERMEYEN (John Cornelius), an eminent painter, was born near Haerlem, and died at Brussels in 1559, aged 59. His beard was so long as to reach the ground. He was greatly employed and esteemed by the emperor Charles V.—Houbraek n.

VERNET, a French painter, was born at Avignon in 1712. He displayed great talents in his native country, and greatly improved them at Paris, where he was highly esteemed, and became the first marine painter in Europe. He died in 1789.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VERNON (Edward), a brave English admiral, was born in Westminster, in 1684. He was unsuccessful in his expedition against Carthagena in South America; but, in 1739, he took Porto Bello with a small force. He died in 1757.—Mortimer. Seal-lett.

VERROCHIO (Andrew), a painter and statuary, was born at Florence in 1432, and died in 1488. He discovered the art of taking casts in plaster, from the faces of dead or living persons. He executed some fine statues in bronze, but his paintings were indifferent.—De Pler. Felicien.

VERSCUURING (Henry), a painter, was born at Gorcum, of which place he was chosen a magistrate, but without quitting his profession. He was drowned in 1690, aged 63.—Houbraek n.

VERSKOVIS (James Francis), an artist, was born in Flanders: he carved figures and vases, in ivory and wood; he had a son who was eminent in painting. Both died in England about 1749.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

VERSTEGAN (Richard), an English antiquary, was born in London of Flemish parents, and educated at Oxford, which he left without taking a degree. Being a roman catholic, he went to Antwerp, where he wrote a Restitution of Decayed Intelligence in Antiquities concerning the most noble and renowned English Nation, 4to.; this was reprinted at London in 1634, and contains many curious passages; the last edition is 8vo., 1674. Verstegan also wrote, the sundry successive Regal Governments of England; and some other works. He died in 1625.—Wood, A. O.

VERTOT (René Aubert de), a French historian, was born in Normandy in 1655. He became a capuchin, but afterwards quitted that order, and entered among the canons regular of Premonstre. In 1705 he was admitted a member of the academy of belles-lettres, and in 1715 was appointed historiographer of the order of Malta. He died in 1735. His works are, History of the Revolutions of Portugal, 12mo; another of the Revolutions of Sweden; and a History of the Roman Revolutions; History of Malta, 4 vols. 4to. and 7 vols. 12mo; Origin of the Grandeur of the Court of Rome; and a Critical History of the Establishment of the Britons among the Gauls.—Me.

VERTUE (George), an engraver, was born in London in 1684. His works are mostly portraits. He wrote a History of Painting and Painters in England, which was published by Horace Walpole, in 4 vols. 4to. Vertue died in 1757.

VERUS (Lucius Ceionius Commodus), a Roman emperor, was the son of Emilius Domitia Lucilla, and adopted by Emilius Aurelius. He commanded a great number of barbarians in the East, whom he defeated and was honoured with a triumph. He was admitted as associate in the empire, but died of an apoplexy in an expedition into Germany, in the 39th year of his age. He was a prince of dissolute manners.—Crevier.

VESALIUS (Andrew), an eminent physician, was born at Brussels about 1514. He studied at Paris under James Sylvius, after which he taught anatomy with great reputation in several universities: the emperor Charles V. and Philip II. of Spain appointed him their physician, but having opened the body of a Spanish gentleman, the relations reported him to the Inquisition, and to expiate his offence he was obliged to go on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. On his return the ship was lost on the island of Zante, where he perished in 1564. He wrote, De Corporis humani Fabrica, Leyden, 2 vols. folio, 1722.—Halleri Bibl. Anat.

VESPASIAN (Titus Flavius), a Roman emperor, was descended from an obscure family at Rieti: he rose entirely by his merit, and was rewarded with the consular dignity for his public services. Nero sent him against Judæa, where he took several strong places, and laid close siege to Jerusalem, which was afterwards taken by his son Titus. On the death of Vitellius, A. D. 69, he was proclaimed emperor by his army, and the choice was approved by the senate and people. He reformed the abuses which prevailed in all departments of the state, introduced excellent regulations for the correction of public morals, embellished Rome with many useful works, fortified all the cities of the empire, and approved himself the father of the people, while he refused the title. He was also a patron of men of learning, and discountenanced vice and immorality. This virtuous monarch died A. D. 79, aged 71.—Crevier.

VESPUTIUS (Americus), a native of Florence, who in 1497 made a voyage of discovery from Spain, by order of Ferdinand king of Castille. He discovered land about 1000 leagues W. of the Canaries, where he found signs of gold, and brought back some of the natives. In 1499 he sailed again from Cadiz, and discovered what he conjectured to be a continent in five degrees of south latitude. He made two other voyages in the service of Emmanuel king of Portugal, and made some discoveries on the coast of Africa, but his accounts are very imperfect. It is, however, very extraordinary, that so vast a continent as the western world should be called after this adventurer's name instead of that of Columbus.—Churchill's Voyages. Martin.

VICARS (John), an English writer, was born in London, and educated first at Christ's Hospital, and next at Queen's college, Oxford. He became usher of the school in Christ's Hospital, and distinguished himself in the civil wars as a zealous presbyterian. He died in 1652. He wrote, God in the Mount, or England's Remem- brancer, a poem, 4to.; Looking-glass for Malignants; and other virulent pamphlets against the royalists. Butler mentions him as "being inspired with ale or viler liquors."—Hudibras. Wood, A. O.

VICARY (Thomas), the first anatomical writer in English, was serjeant-surgeon to Henry VIII. Edward VI. Mary I. and Elizabeth, and chief surgeon of St. Bartholomew's hospital. His book is entitled "A Treasure for Englishmen, containing the Anatomy of Man's Bodie;" published in 1518.—Aikin's Biog. Mem. of Medicine.

VICTOR-AMADEUS, the first king of Sardinia, succeeded his father as duke of Savoy in 1675. He joined the allies against France, on which marshal Catinat was sent against him, gained a great victory at Staffarde, and nearly subdued the whole of Savoy. Victor on the other hand entered Dauphiny, and made himself master of some strong places, which, however, he was obliged to abandon, and to sue for peace. He made war again in 1701, having been promised by the emperor a considerable accession of territory: the duke de Vendome took possession of a considerable part of Savoy, and the French laid siege to Turin, which was relieved by Eugene. In 1713 Victor recovered the whole of his territory, and was acknowledged king of Sardinia. In 1730 he abdicated the throne to his son, but repenting of what he had done, he endeavoured to recover the crown. In this, however, he failed, and died in 1732, aged 67.—Univ. Hist.

VICTORIUS (Benedict), a physician, was born at Faenza in Italy, about 1481. He was professor at Bologna, and died about 1560. He wrote, De morbo Gallico, 8vo.; and some other works. Lionel Victorius, a relation of his, was also a medical professor at Bologna, and died there in 1520. He wrote on the Diseases of Children, 8vo.

VICTORIUS (Peter), a learned Italian, was born at Florence in 1499. His life was employed in collecting and explaining the ancient Greek and Latin writers, particularly Cicero. He was professor of rhetoric and member of the senate at his native place, where he died in 1585.—Tiraboschi.

VIDA (Mark Jerom), a modern Latin poet, was born at Cremona in 1470. He entered into the congregation of canons regular at Rome, where he was in great favour with Leo X. who gave him a priory; and Clement VII. as a reward for a poem dedicated to him, made him bishop of Alba. He died in 1566. He wrote, 1. the Art of Poetry, a piece of great merit; 2. a poem on Verification; 3. Scacchia Ludus, or a poem on Chess; 4. Hymnis de rebus divinis; 5. Christiados libri sex. Besides these poetical works he wrote Dialogues on the Dignity of a Republic, Letters, and other pieces in prose. The best edition of his poems is that of Oxford, 3 vols 8vo.—Ibid.

VIETA (Francis), a celebrated mathematician, was born at Fontenay in Poitou, in 1540. He was the first who used letters in algebra to designate known quantities. He also made corrections in the calendar, and improvements in geometry. He died in 1603. His works were published at Paris in 1646, in 1 vol. folio.—Moreri.

VICAND (John), or Wigand, a German divine, was born at Mansfield in 1523. He had a share in the "Centuries of Magdeburg," printed at Basle, in 13 vols. folio, 1562. He was appointed superintendent of the churches of Pomerania, and died in 1587.—Melch. Adam.

VIGILIUS, an African prelate, and polemic writer, who flourished about 484. His works were printed at Dijon in 1665, 4to.—Dupin.

VIGILIUS (pope), was a Roman, and obtained that dignity from Theodora, wife of Justinian, on a promise of revoking the acts of the council of Constantinople against the Eutychian bishops in 537. He afterwards published a condemnation of that sect, for which he was persecuted and banished. He died at Syracuse in 555.—Platina.

VIGNOLE (James Barozzio), an Italian architect, was born at Vignola in 1507. He studied at Rome, and afterwards visited France, where he formed plans of several superb works. The cardinal Farnese recalled him to Rome, where he died in 1573. He wrote a Treatise on the Five Orders of Architecture, 3 vols. 4to.—D'Argenville.

VIGNOLES (Stephen de), better known by the name of de la Hire; a French captain, who signalized himself in the wars of Charles VII. He forced the duke of Bedford to raise the siege of Montargis, and accompanied Joan of Arc to the relief of that city, whereby he contributed to the re-establishing of Charles on his throne. He died in 1447.—Moreri.

VILLALPANDUS (John Baptist), a Spanish jesuit, who died in 1608. He distinguished himself by a learned Commentary on Ezekiel, 3 vols. folio, 1596. In this work is a very curious and exact description of the city of Jerusalem. He was also the author of an Exposition on St. Paul's Epistles.—Nic. Antonio Hist. Script.

VILLARET (Claude), a French historian, was born at Paris in 1715. He was for some time an actor, but quitted the stage for a literary life. He died in 1766. Villaret continued Velly's History of France. He also wrote a Treatise on the Art of Acting; and a Tract on the Mind of Voltaire, 8vo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VILLARS (Louis-Hector), peer and marshal of France, and grandee of Spain, was born at Moulins, in the Bourbonnois, in 1653. After distinguishing himself on various occasions in the army, he was made marshal-de-camp in 1690, and was sent against Marlborough, but was defeated at Malplaquet, and dangerously wounded. He was appointed plenipotentiary for concluding a peace at Rastadt, in 1714. In 1733 he was sent into Italy, where he took Pfightone, but died soon after at Turin in 1734.

VILLENA (the marquis of), a Spanish poet, was of the royal house of Arragon, and lived at the beginning of the 15th century; he translated the Aeneis into Spanish verse, but his best performance is his book on the Gaya Ciencia, in which he describes the ceremonies of the Troubadours; his translation of Dante into prose is much esteemed by his countrymen: he died in 1434.—Gen. Dict.

VILLENEUVE (Gabrielle Susanna Barbot de), a celebrated French novel writer. She was the widow of Villeneuve, a lieutenant colonel in the French service, and wrote, the Young American; the Conjugal Phoenix; the Fair Hermits; and some other novels, the principal of which is, the Gardener of Vincennes. She died in 1755.

VILLIERS (George), duke of Buckingham, was born at Brookesby in Leicestershire, in 1592. After receiving a scanty education, he was introduced at the court of James I. who was struck with his fine person, and made him his cup-bearer. The king also condescended to be his school-master, appointed him gentleman of the bed-chamber, and knight of the garter. Honours and places were heaped on the favourite in rapid succession; he was advanced to the dignity of duke, made lord high admiral, master of the horse, and had the disposal of all places in church and state. He kept the same footing in the favour of Charles I. whom, when prince of Wales, he had accompanied to Spain to negotiate a marriage with the infant. But the people and parliament were discontented; votes and remonstrances were passed against the duke, who caused the parliament to be dissolved, and the supplies to be raised for the king's service by illegal measures. War breaking out with France, the duke took the command of the expedition fitted out for the relief of Rochelle, instead of which he made a descent on the isle of Rhé, and lost the principal part of his forces. A new expedition was formed, but while the duke was at Portsmouth and about to embark, he was stabbed by a discontented lieutenant named Felton, Aug. 23, 1628.—Clarendon.

VILLIERS (George), duke of Buckingham, son of the preceding, was born in 1627. He was educated at Cambridge, and on the breaking out of the civil wars, served the king with great zeal till the ruin of the royal cause, when he went abroad. He afterwards accompanied Charles II. to Scotland, and was with him at the battle of Worcester, when he had the good fortune to escape. By marrying the daughter of lord Fairfax he recovered a principal part of his estate before the restoration, when he was made a lord of the bed-chamber, member of the privy council, and master of the horse. But entering into a conspiracy against the king, he lost his places. He afterwards recovered the royal favour, and was employed as ambassador to France. He died in 1688. The duke wrote a comedy by way of ridiculing the dramatic writers of his time, under the title of the Rehearsal. He was also the author of some poems. His morals were very dissipated.—Biog. Dram.

VINCENT (Thomas), a pious divine, who was ejected from the living of St. Mary Magdalen, Milk-street. When the plague raged in London, he continued in the city, and preached regularly, to the great comfort of the inhabitants in that afflicting season. He died at Hoxton in 1671. He wrote, God's Terrible Voice in the City by Plague and Fire, 8vo.; an Explanation of the Catechism; and other religious books.—Calamy.

VINCENT (Nathaniel), another non-conformist minister, was educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, and afterwards had the living of Langley Marsh, in Buckinghamshire, from whence he was ejected in 1662. He suffered imprisonment for preaching in a conventicle, but obtained his release, and died in 1697. He wrote the Conversion of a Sinner and the Day of Grace, 8vo.; several sermons, and other pious books.—Ibid.

VINCI (Leonard de), a painter, was born in the castle of Vinci, near Florence, in 1445. Verrochio was his master, whom he soon excelled; as he did all the painters of his time. One of his greatest performances was a picture of the Lord's Supper, at Milan, in which city he founded his celebrated school of painting. He was also an excellent architect, and constructed the famous aqueduct which supplies Milan with water. From that place he went to Florence, where he laboured with Michael Angelo in ornamenting the grand council chamber. At the invitation of Francis I. he visited the French court, where he died in the arms of that monarch, in 1520. He wrote a Treatise on Painting, in Italian, folio, and some other works on the same subject.—De Piles.

VINES (Richard), a nonconformist divine, was born at Blaston, in Leicestershire, and educated at Magdalen college, Cambridge. On entering into orders, he obtained the rectory of Weddington, in Warwickshire. He joined the presbyterians in the civil war, and became a member of the assembly of divines at Westminster. He was also a frequent preacher before the parliament; and appointed master of Pembroke hall, Cambridge, which he resigned in 1650, because he would not take the engagement. He died in 1655. Several of his sermons have been printed.—Neal's Hist. Puritans.

VINNUS (Arnold), professor of law at Leyden, was born in Holland in 1588, and died in 1657. He wrote a Commentary on the Institutes of Justinian, 2 vols, 4to.; and another on the ancient law writers, 8vo.—Moreri.

VIRGIL (Publius Virgilius Maro), prince of the Latin poets, was born at Andes, near Mantua, about 70 years B. C. His first years were spent at Cremona, from whence he removed to Rome, when his country was partitioned out among the soldiers after the battle of Philippi. There, by means of his friend Mæcenas, he was introduced to Augustus, who restored to him his estate. On this occasion he wrote his first Eclogue; and on completing the Bucolics, he undertook the Georgics. After these were finished, and had been read by Augustus, he began the Æneid, at the request of the emperor. This great poem has left the palm of superiority undecided between Homer and Virgil. The poet was engaged eleven years upon this immortal work, but died without revising it, at Brundisium, B. C. 19, and in the 51st year of his age. He left the greatest part of his property to Mæcenas, Tucca, and Augustus. His remains were interred on a spot in the road leading from Naples to Puteoli, and the following epitaph was inscribed on his tomb:

*Mantua me genuit; Calabri rapuere; tenet nunc
Parthenope: cecini pascua, rura, ducis.*

Virgil was of a remarkably timorous disposition; and as a proof of his modesty the following anecdote is recorded. Having written this distich on his patron,
*Nocte pluit tota, redeunt spectacula mani;
Disiunctum imperium cum Jove Cæsar habet,*
he placed it in the night on the gate of the palace. Enquiries were made by Augustus after the author of so fine a compliment, when Bathyllus, a miserable poet, avowed the verses, and obtained the reward. On this Virgil again wrote the same verses, and under them,

Hos ego versiculos feci, tulit alter honores;
with the beginning of another line in these words,

Sic vos non vobis,

four times repeated. Augustus desired to have these lines completed, which Bathyllus could not effect. Virgil then finished them in this order:

Sic vos non vobis nidificatis aves;

Sic vos non vobis vellera fertis oves;

Sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes;

Sic vos non vobis fertis aratra boves,

Having thus proved himself the author of the distich, he received a reward, and the usurper was banished. The best editions of Virgil are Baskerville's, 4to. Birmingham, 1757; the Variorum, 8vo, 1661; and Glasgow, 12mo, 1758. This poet has been well translated into English by Dryden, Pitt, and Warton.—Biog. Classica.

VIRGINIA, daughter of the centurian L. Virginius. Appius Claudius, being enamoured with her charms, to obtain possession of her person, bribed a man to claim her as the daughter of his slave, when Appius, as judge, ordered her to be delivered into his hands. Virginus, who was at the camp, being informed of this infamous outrage, hastened to Rome, and, in the presence of Appius and the Roman people, plunged a knife into his daughter's bosom. He then returned to the camp, where he harangued the soldiers, who instantly marched to Rome. Appius destroyed himself in prison, and the office of decemvir was abolished, B. C. 449.—Livy.

VITELLIO, or VITELLO, a native of Poland, in the 13th century, who wrote a good treatise on optics, printed at Basil in 1572, folio.—Moreri.

VITELLIUS (Aulus), a Roman emperor, who rose by his vices. He was born of an illustrious family, and introduced himself into the favour of Tiberius by administering to his pleasures. He also gained the esteem of Caligula, Claudius, and Nero, by flattering their passions. Thus he possessed himself of the highest offices of the state; and by his lavish presents became a favourite with the soldiers. He was proclaimed in Germany by his army at the same time that Otho was invested with the purple. Three battles were fought between the rivals, which Vitellius lost; but in a fourth he was victor. His conduct was so licentious and extravagant, that the people revolted, and placed Vespasian on the throne. Vitellius, after suffering all manner of indignities from the populace, was put to death, and his body thrown into the Tiber, A. D. 69.—Tacitus. Suetonius.

VITRINGA (Campegius), professor of divinity at Franeker, was born at Leuwarden, in Friseland, in 1659. He died of an apoplexy in 1722. He wrote a Commentary on Isaiah, in 2 vols. folio; Apocalypsis Anachrisis, 4to; Typus Theologiae Practicae, 8vo; Synagoga Vetus, 4to; Archi-synagogus, 4to; De Decemviris Otiosis Synagoga, 4to; Observationes Sacrae, 4to.—Campegius Vitringa, his son, was born at Franeker in 1693, and died in 1723. He wrote an Abridgment of Natural Theology.—Moreri.

VITRUVIUS (Marcus Vitruvius Pollio), a celebrated architect, was born at Formia, in Italy. He was greatly esteemed by Julius Caesar, and employed by Augustus in constructing public buildings and warlike machines. He wrote a valuable Treatise on Architecture, the best edition of which is that of Amsterdam, in 1649, folio.—Felilien.

VIVARES (Francis), an ingenious engraver, was born in the village of St. John de Bruel, in Rouergue, in 1709. At the age of 18 he came to London, where his uncle, a master taylor, intended to bring him up to his own business. But he preferred the burin to the needle; and he was assisted in his favourite pursuit by Amiconi, an Italian painter, who gave him some instruction in drawing. He married when young, and had sixteen children by his first wife; and by his three wives thirty-one. He particularly excelled in landscapes, the foliage of his trees, and the richness of his foregrounds. Woollet had always one of his engravings before him when he was at work. He died in 1780.—Private Communication.

VIVES (John Lewis), a learned writer, was born in 1492, at Valentia, in Spain. He came to England, and was employed in instructing princess Mary, daughter of Henry VIII.; but speaking freely of that monarch's divorce, he was sent to prison. On recovering his liberty, he went to Flanders, and died at Bruges, in 1540. He wrote a Commentary on St. Augustine's City of God; a Treatise on the Corruption and Decline of the Arts and Sciences; another on Religion, &c.—Moreri.

VIVIANI (Vincent), a mathematician, was born at Florence in 1621. He was the disciple of Galileo, and became first mathematician to the grand duke of Tuscany. He was a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, and died in 1703. His works are, 1. A treatise, entitled, Divination upon Aristotle, folio; 2. De Maximis et Minimis Geometrice Divinatio, in quintum Comicorum Apollonii Pergæi adhuc desideratum, folio; 3. Enodatio Problematum Universalis Geometris Propositionum a Claudio Commies, 4to; 4. Treatise of Proportions, 4to.—Tiraboschi.

VOET (Gisbert), or Voetius, a learned divine and professor at Utrecht, who rendered himself remarkable by accusing Des Cartes of atheism; and the magistrates of that city were so weak as to condemn the apologetical letters of the philosopher upon the misrepresentations of this furious bigot, whose adherents were called Voetians. He died in 1677, aged 88. His works are, Politica Ecclesiastica, 4 vols. 4to.; Diatriba de Cælo Viatorum, &c. His son Paul became professor of law at Utrecht, and wrote a Treatise on lawful and unlawful Duels, 12mo. He died in 1667.—Bayle.

VOISIN (Daniel Francis), minister of state and chancellor of France, died in 1718, aged 62. He was a man of inflexible integrity, as a proof of which the following anecdote is recorded. Louis XIV. had promised pardon to a notorious offender, but Voisin refused to seal the pardon: Louis in a rage demanded the seals, and having sealed the instrument offered them to his minister: "They are contaminated," said Voisin, "I will take them no more." Louis was struck with admiration at this, and threw the pardon into the fire. "Now," said Voisin, "I can take them, fire purifies every thing."—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VOITURE (Vincent), an elegant writer, was born at Amiens in 1592. He attended the duke of Orleans into Languedoc, and was sent to negotiate affairs of importance at Madrid, where he wrote some Spanish verses, which were ascribed to Lopez de Vega. He had several employments at court, but died poor in 1648. His poems and letters were printed after his death in 2 vols. 8vo.—Moreri.

VOLKOF (Feodor), a Russian actor, was born at Yaroslaf in 1729. By frequenting the German theatre he became passionately fond of the stage; and having constructed one in a private house, he performed with his brothers. His merits were soon perceived, and he was enabled to erect a proper theatre, and to collect a company. In 1752 he was sent for to Peterburgh, where the empress took him and his company into her service. Volkof was ennobled, and obtained a large estate. He died in 1763.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

VOLTAIRE (Marie-Francis Aroust de), a celebrated writer, was born at Paris in 1694. He received his education in the college of Louis the Great, and shewed proofs of a lively genius in his earliest years. He was intended for the law, which he renounced for poetry. Having an irresistible turn for satire, he was imprudent enough to write lampoons against the government: for which he was sent to the Bastille, where he continued a year. In 1718 appeared his tragedy of Oedipus, which experienced great success. In 1722 he produced his Mariamne, which was condemned in consequence of a ludicrous circumstance: Mariamne is represented as poisoned by order of Herod, and as the actress raised the cup to her mouth, a wag cried out, "The queen drinks!" This sarcasm proved the ruin of the piece. In 1726 he was again imprisoned in the Bastille; but after a confinement of six months he recovered his liberty, on which he went to England, where he published his Henriade by subscription. In 1730 came out his tragedy of Brutus, esteemed the best of his dramatic compositions. This was followed by several others, the principal of which are, Zara, Merope, Alzira, and Mahomet. His Philosophical Letters were burnt by a decree of parliament, and the author, apprehensive of the consequences to his person, withdrew from Paris. By the interest of Madame d'Étiolles he gained the favour and protection of the court, and was appointed historiographer of France. In 1746 he was admitted a member of the French academy; and in 1750 the king of Prussia granted him a considerable pension. Voltaire paid that monarch a visit at Potsdam, where he was honourably entertained: but some differences arising between them, the poet quitted Prussia, carrying with him the poetical works of the king, who caused him to be arrested on the road, till the fugitive manuscript was restored. Voltaire then went to Colmar, from whence he removed to Geneva, and afterwards settled at Ferney, a village in the county of Gex, which he cultivated, and procured many ingenious artisans to settle there, whose works he sent to Russia, Germany, Spain, Italy, and Holland. At the beginning of the year 1778 he obtained leave to reside at Paris, where he was received with many flattering marks of distinction, but died there of a retention of urine, May 30, the same year. His remains were interred in the abbey of the Bernardina, near Troyes, but removed in 1791 by an order of the national assembly, and laid in the church of St. Genevieve, at Paris. Besides his poetical works, he wrote, Essay on General History; the Age of Louis XIV; Life of Charles XII. of Sweden; and History of the czar Peter the Great: the romances of Candide, Zadig, and some others. All his works have been published in 30 vols. 4to. and 70 vols. 8vo. He was cynical in his manners, an insidious enemy to Christianity, and insufferably vain and avaricious. As a writer, he was lively, brilliant, and imposing; but superficial and dogmatical.—Life prefixed to his Works.

VONDEL (Josse, or Justus du), a Dutch poet, was born in 1587, of anabaptist parents, which sect he quitted, and turned Roman catholic. He died in 1679. His works make 9 vols. 4to.; the principal is a poem on the taking of Amsterdam, by Florence V. count of Holland.—Moreri.

VOPISCUS (Flavius), a native of Syracuse, who flourished A. D. 304. He wrote the history of Aurelian, Tacitus, Florianus, Probus, Firmius, Carus, &c. printed at Leyden in the Historiz Augustæ Scriptores, 2 vols. 8vo.—Vossius.

VORMAR (Isaac), a learned German, who was employed as one of the Imperial plenipotentiaries in negotiating the peace of Westphalia. He died in 1662. He wrote Memoirs of Public Affairs.—Moreri.

VORSTIUS (Conrade), a theological writer, was born at Cologne, in 1569. He took his doctor's degree at Heidelberg, and in 1611 succeeded Arminius in the divinity chair at Leyden. James I. king of England caused his book "de Deo" to be burnt, and complained to the states against the author, who retired to Torgau. He died in 1622. He published several other controversial books.—Ibid.

VORTIGERN, a British chief, who, on the departure of the Romans in 445, was elected king of South Britain. To repel the Scots and Picts he invited over the Saxons to his assistance, who landed in 460, under the command of Hengist and Horsa, and drove out the invaders. Vortigern fell in love with Rowena, daughter of Hengist, and on his marriage gave the father the kingdom of Kent, to which was afterwards added the whole of Wessex. Vortigern retired to Wales, and was burnt in his castle in 484.—Saxon Chron.

Vos (Martin de), a painter, was born at Antwerp about 1534, and died there in 1604.

He painted history, portraits, and landscapes, in a very fine style.—Houbraken.

Vossius (Gerard John), a learned writer, was born near Heidelberg in 1577. He studied first at Dort and afterwards at Leyden, where he was appointed professor of philosophy in 1599; and at the same time he was chosen director of the college at Dort, notwithstanding his youth. In 1614 he accepted the charge of director of the theological college at Leyden, and afterwards was appointed professor of eloquence and chronology. His History of Pelagianism rendered him obnoxious to the Calvinists; but it procured him in England the favour of archbishop Laud, and a prebend in the cathedral of Canterbury. While in England he was admitted to the degree of doctor of laws at Oxford. In 1633 he accepted the professorship of history at Amsterdam, where he died in 1649. His works have been printed in 6 vols. folio.—Niceron.

Vossius (Dionysius), son of the above, was born at Dort in 1612. He was profoundly learned in the Oriental languages, and died at Amsterdam in 1633. He published a Latin translation of Maimonides on Idolatry, with notes, and other works.—Ibid.

Vossius (Isaac), another son of Gerard John Vossius, was born at Leyden in 1618. He visited Sweden on the invitation of queen Christina. In 1670 he came to England, and obtained from Charles II. a canonry of Windfor, and the degree of doctor of laws from the university of Oxford. He died in 1688. He published a book to prove that the Septuagint Version was produced by inspiration: but though he was remarkable for believing the strangest inconsistencies, he expressed some doubts respecting the sacred text, which made Charles II. say, "this learned divine is a strange man, he believes every thing but the Bible." His works are numerous.—Ibid.

Vossius (Gerard), a Romish divine, and relation of the above, was born in 1609. He published the works of Gregory Thaumaturgus, Ephrem Syrus, and some pieces of John Chrysostom and Theodoret, with Latin versions and notes.—Ibid.

Vouet (Simon), a painter, was born at Paris in 1582. He was for some time painter of the academy of St. Luke at Rome, but was recalled to France by Louis XIII, who employed him in ornamenting his palaces, and gave him a pension. He was the founder of the French school, and died in 1641.—De Piles.

Vroon (Henry Cornelius), a Dutch painter. He excelled in describing sea fights, and drew the designs for the tapestry in the house of lords which represent the destruction of the Spanish armada.—Houbraken,

W.

WADING (Peter), an Irish jesuit, was born at Waterford in 1586. He became chancellor of the universities of Prague and Gratz, and died in the latter city in 1644. He wrote Latin poems, and a treatise against heretics in the same language.—Moreri.

WADSWORTH (Thomas), a non-conformist divine, was born in Southwark, and educated at Christ's college, Cambridge. At the restoration he was minister of Newington Butts, and of Laurence Pountney church, London, of which he was deprived in 1662. He died in 1676. He wrote on the Immortality of the Soul, and some Sermons.—Calamy.

WAGENSEIL (John Christopher), a learned German, was born at Nuremberg in 1633. He took his degree of doctor of laws at Orleans, after which he became professor of law and history at Altorf, but exchanged that professorship for the chair of Oriental languages. He died in 1705. He wrote, 1. De Urbe Norimbergæ, 4to.; 2. Pera Librorum Juveniliū, 12mo.; 3. Tela Ignea Satanae, 2 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

WAGNER (John James), a physician of Switzerland, was born in 1641. He became librarian of the city of Zurich, and died in 1695. He wrote, Historia Naturalis Helvetiæ Curiosa, 12mo.—Ibid.

WAGSTAFFE (Thomas), a learned divine, was born in Warwickshire in 1645, and educated at the Charter-house in London, from whence he removed to New-Inn Hall, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. He afterwards became chancellor of Litchfield cathedral, and rector of St. Margaret Patten, London, but was deprived at the revolution for refusing the oaths. He practiced physic for some time, and in 1693 was consecrated a nonjuring bishop. He died in 1702. Mr. Wagstaffe published several Sermons, and an able Vindication of King Charles I. proving him to have been the author of the Icon Basilike.—West. Gen. Diā.

WAKE (William), a learned prelate, was born at Blandford, in Dorsetshire, in 1657, and admitted a member of Christ church, Oxford, in 1672. In 1689 he took his doctor's degree, and afterwards became chaplain to king William and queen Mary, preacher to the society of Gray's Inn, and canon of Christ church. In 1694 he obtained the rectory of St. James, Westminster; in 1701 was made dean of Exeter; in 1705 bishop of Lincoln; and in 1716 translated to Canterbury. He had a great controversy with Dr. Atterbury on the rights of convocations, and afterwards entered into a correspondence with some of the French bishops about a union between the two churches.

He died in 1797. The archbishop published a translation of the Epistles of the apostolical Fathers, 8vo.; Exposition of the Church Catechism; Tracts against Popery; and several Sermons.—Wood, A. O. Gen. Dict.

WAKE (Isaac), a miscellaneous writer, was born in Northamptonshire, and elected fellow of Merton college, Oxford, in 1598. He was afterwards public orator of the university, and employed as ambassador to Venice and Savoy; on which occasion he was knighted. He died in 1632. He wrote Rex Platonius; Discourse of the thirteen Cantons of the Helvetic League; on the State of Italy; on the Proceedings of the King of Sweden, &c.—Wood, A. O.

WAKEFIELD (Robert), a learned divine, was born in the north of England, and educated at Cambridge, after which he went abroad, and in 1519 was Hebrew professor at Louvain. Shortly after he returned to England, became king's chaplain, and was appointed Hebrew professor at Oxford. He was also made one of the canons of Christ church, and died in 1537. He wrote a Paraphrase on the Ecclesiastes; Syntagma de Hebræorum; and some other works.—Ibid.

WAKEFIELD (Gilbert), a learned writer, was born at Nottingham in 1756. He received his education under Mr. Wooddeson at Kingston-upon-Thames, of which parish his father was minister. In 1772 he entered of Jesus college, Cambridge, where he took his bachelor's degree in 1776. The same year he published a small collection of Latin Poems, with some notes on Homer. In 1778 he entered into deacon's orders, and became curate of Stockport, in Cheshire, from whence he removed to Liverpool. In 1779 he married, and about the same time quitted the church and undertook the office of classical tutor in the dissenting academy at Warrington. While in that situation he published a number of works, the principal of which were, a translation of the First Epistle to the Thessalonians; another of the Gospel of St. Matthew; an Enquiry into the Opinions of the Christian Writers of the three first Centuries, concerning the Person of Jesus Christ, four vols. 8vo.; and the Silva Critica. This last appeared from the Cambridge university press. In 1790 he removed to the new dissenting college at Hackney, his connexion with which ended in about a year. Soon after this he published a pamphlet against Public Worship, which startled even many of his most ardent admirers, and was answered chiefly by dissenters. He continued to reside at Hackney, engaged in classical studies, till the progress of the French revolution and the war led him into the field of politics. He wrote some severe pamphlets against government, of which no notice was taken. But his Letter to the Bishop of Landau was considered as so inflammatory and of such a dangerous tendency, that the attorney-general instituted a prosecution against him, and the publisher. Mr. Wakefield was sentenced to be imprisoned two years in Dorchester gaol, from whence he was liberated in May 1801, but died of a fever in September following. In his religious sentiments he was a Socinian, and in his political a republican. As a classical scholar few excelled him; and his critical productions will be highly valued when his other works are sunk into oblivion. The principal are, a translation of the New Testament, 2 vols. 8vo.; Tragediarum Græcarum Delectus, 2 vols. 12mo.; and a superb edition of Lucretius, 3 vols. 4to.—Memoirs written by himself, 8vo. Monthly Mag.

WALDO (Peter), the author of the sect of Waldenses in the 12th century, was a merchant of Lyons. The sudden death of a friend in his presence proved the cause of his conversion. He gave his property to the poor, preached to them the truths of the gospel, and gathered many followers. Being driven from Lyons they went into Dauphiny, Provence, and other countries. Though their manners were inoffensive, yet as they seceded from the church of Rome, a crusade was formed against them, by which many thousands were destroyed. The sect, however, still continued, and spread over the vallies of Piedmont.—Meibem.

WALES (William), an ingenious mathematician. He went round the world with captain Cook in his first voyage as astronomer, and published, in a quarto volume, an Account of the Astronomical Observations which were made in the Southern Hemisphere. After his return he was appointed mathematical master of Christ's hospital, where he died in 1799. Besides the above, Mr. Wales published Remarks on Mr. Forster's Account of Cook's Voyage; an Enquiry into the Population of England and Wales; and an improved edition of Robertson's Elements of Navigation. He also communicated a Dissertation on the Achronical Rising of the Pleiades to Dr. Vincent.—Genl. Mag.

WALKER (Clement), an English writer, was born at Cliffe, in Dorsetshire, and educated at Christ church, Oxford, after which he retired to his estate in Somersetshire. Before the civil war he was made usher of the exchequer, and was elected member of parliament for the city of Wells. He was a zealous presbyterian, and so great an enemy to the independents and Cromwell that he was sent to the Tower, where he died in 1651. He wrote, the History of Independency, 4to., which contains many curious relations; the High Court of Justice, or Cromwell's Slaughter House, 4to.; and some other works.—Wool.

WALKER (Edward), an historian, was born in Somersetshire. In 1639 he was made secretary at war, and was afterwards present at the battle of Edgehill in the royal army.

In 1643 he was appointed garter king at arms, and knighted. After the restoration he became one of the clerks of the privy council. He died suddenly in 1676. He wrote, Historical Discourses, folio; Order of the Ceremonies used at the Celebration of St. George's Feast at Windsor, 1674; Acts of the Knights of the Garter in the Civil Wars, &c.—Wood.

WALKER (William), a learned divine and grammarian, was successively master of the schools of Lowth and Grantham, in Lincolnshire, and had the honour of instructing Sir Isaac Newton. He was rector of Colsterworth, in the same county, and died there in 1684, aged 61. He wrote several books on Grammar, Rhetoric, and Logic, but his principal performance is a Treatise on English Particles, 8vo.—Granger.

WALKER (John), an English divine, was of Exeter college, Oxford. He was a native of Devonshire, and became rector of St. Mary's in the city of Exeter. For his work entitled, An Attempt towards Recovering an Account of the Sufferings of the Clergy in the great Rebellion, folio, 1714, he was created D. D. by the university of Oxford. He died about 1725.

WALKER (Robert), painter to Oliver Cromwell. Mr. Walpole says, that one of the portraits of the protector was purchased by an agent of the grand duke of Tuscany for 500*l*. Walker died about 1670.

WALKER (Samuel), a pious divine, was born at Exeter in 1714. He was educated at Exeter college, Oxford, after which he entered into orders, and travelled with a young gentleman as his tutor. He settled at Truro, in Cornwall, where he conducted himself as an exemplary parish priest. He died in 1761. Mr. Walker published two volumes of Sermons on the Catechism, and two volumes of Practical Discourses.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

WALKER (George), a celebrated Irish divine, who distinguished himself by his gallant defence of Londonderry in 1689 against the forces of James II. till it was effectually relieved. He was slain at the battle of the Boyne.—Ibid.

WALKER (Obadiah), an English divine, was born in Yorkshire, and educated at University college, Oxford, where he became fellow, but was deprived by the parliamentary visitors in 1648. He recovered his place at the restoration, and in 1676 was chosen master of the college. He turned papist in the reign of James II., and published a virulent book against the character of Luther, and some other pieces. After the revolution he was deprived of the mastership, on which he retired to London, and was maintained by his old pupil, Dr. Radcliffe. He died in 1698.—Wood, A. G.

WALL (Martin), a learned physician, was born at Powick, in Worcestershire, in 1708. He was educated at Worcester college, Oxford, and afterwards chosen fellow of Merton college. He settled as a physician at Worcester, and died at Bath in 1776. Dr. Wall had a fine taste for painting, and designed the frontispieces to Hervey's Meditations. He wrote on the Virtues of Malvern Waters, and some other medical tracts.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

WALLACE (Sir William), a famous Scotch gentleman, was born of a poor but ancient family. Being resolved to deliver his country from the English yoke, he gathered a number of followers in 1298, attacked the enemy, and slew the earl of Warren. Wallace was revered as the saviour of the nation, and chosen regent during the captivity of Baliol. He penetrated into England, and ravaged Durham with fire and sword. Edward I., then in Flanders, immediately hastened home and marched against Wallace, who was defeated but fled. He was afterwards basely betrayed to the English, and executed in 1305.—Buchanan.

WALLER (Edmund), an English poet, was born at Colhill, in Buckinghamshire, in 1605. He received his education at Eton and King's college Cambridge; but became a member of parliament at the age of eighteen, in which capacity he distinguished himself by some noisy speeches against the king and clergy. He, however, spoke against the abolition of episcopacy. In 1643 he was sent to the Tower on a charge of conspiring to deliver the city to the king. Two persons were executed for the plot, and Waller was condemned to be hanged, but saved himself by an abject submission and a liberal distribution of money. After a year's imprisonment he went into exile; but returned by favour of Cromwell, on whom he wrote an elegant panegyric. He also wrote another on the death of the protector, but celebrated the restoration and praised Charles II. He was also elected into parliament, where, by his eloquence and wit, he was the delight of the house. He endeavoured to procure the provostship of Eton, but being refused by Clarendon he joined in the persecution of that great man. He died in 1687, and was buried in the church of Beaconsfield. His Poems are easy, smooth, and generally elegant.—Judson's Poets. Biog. Brit.

WALLIS (John), a learned divine and mathematician, was born at Ashford, in Kent, in 1616. He received his education at Emanuel college, Cambridge from whence he removed to Queen's college, on obtaining a fellowship. In 1640 he entered into orders, and soon after was appointed one of the scribes to the assembly of divines at Westminster. He afterwards became Savilian professor of geometry at Oxford, and keeper of the archives of that university. He was also one of the founders of the royal society. At the restoration he was confirmed in his places, and became chaplain to the king. He was likewise one of the divines employed in revising the Liturgy. Dr.

Wallis died in 1708. He published some books against Hobbes; a grammar under the title of Grammaticæ Linguae Anglicanae, 8vo.; Commercium Epistolicum, 4to.; De Cycloide et Corporibus inde Genitis; De Aëstu Maris hypothesis Nova; Mechanica, sive de Motu Tractatus Geometricis; Archimedis Syracusani Arenarius et Dimensio Circuli, &c. Dr. Wallis was profoundly skilled in the art of decyphering.—Wood. Martin.

WALPOLE (Sir Robert), a celebrated statesman, was born at Houghton in Norfolk, in 1674. In 1700 he was chosen member of parliament for Lynn. In 1705 he was appointed secretary at war, and in 1709 treasurer of the navy, but on the change of ministers he was voted by the commons to be guilty of corruption, and ordered to be expelled the house. The whig party, however, strenuously supported him, and he was re-elected for Lynn, though the house declared the election void. At the accession of George I. he was made paymaster of the forces, but two years afterwards he resigned his place and joined the opposition. Another change taking place in 1725, he had the lead in the administration, and was nominated first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer. He maintained his power with great firmness till 1742, when he resigned, and was created earl of Orford, with a pension of 4000l. a year. He died in 1745.—Life by Coxe.

WALPOLE (Horace), youngest son of the preceding, was educated at Eton school, from whence he was sent to King's college, Cambridge, where he wrote some verses on Henry VI. the founder. In 1728 he was appointed inspector of exports and imports, which place he exchanged for that of usher of the exchequer. The year following he travelled, in company with Mr. Gray, the poet; but a separation took place in Italy, owing to some misunderstanding between the two friends. In 1741 Mr. Walpole was elected into parliament; but he never made any other speech than one in defence of his father, in 1742. He retired from parliament in 1761, and led a life of literary ease at his seat of Strawberry Hill, in Middlesex, where he had a printing press, from which proceeded several elegant works, by himself and others. On the death of his nephew in 1791 he succeeded to the title of earl of Orford, which became extinct at his own death, in 1797. Mr. Walpole wrote a Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors; Historic Doubts concerning Richard III.; Anecdotes of Painting, enlarged from Vertue; the Castle of Otranto, a romance; an Essay on Modern Gardening; and the Mysterious Mother, a tragedy. All his works have been pompously printed in 6 vols. 4to.—Walpoleiana, 2 vols. 12mo. 1800.

WALSH (William), a poet, was born at Auberley in Worcestershire, about 1660. He was a commoner of Wadham college, Oxford, which he left without a degree, and became gentleman of the horse to queen Anne. He was the early friend of Pope, who bestows some handsome compliments upon him in his Essay on Criticism. He died in 1708. His poems are not above mediocrity.—Johnson's Poets.

WALSINGHAM (Thomas), a benedictine monk of St. Alban's, was a native of Norfolk, and died about 1440. He wrote Auctarium Polychronici; Acta Regis Henrici VI. &c.—Pitfaut.

WALSINGHAM (Sir Francis), a statesman, was born at Chislehurst in Kent, and educated at Queen's college Cambridge, after which he went abroad. He entered early into public employment, and was twice sent ambassador to the French court. In 1573 he was appointed secretary of state. He was a man of deep penetration and of profound policy. His negotiations and dispatches have been published under the title of "the Complete Ambassador," folio. He died in 1590, at the age of 90.—Biog. Brit.

WALTERS (John), a Welsh divine of the established church, was educated at Oxford, where he took his degree of M. A. and on taking orders became rector of Llandochoau in Glamorganshire. He died in 1797. Mr. Walters compiled a valuable English and Welsh Lexicon, 1 vol. 4to. 1794. He was also author of a Dissertation on the Welsh Language, and some sermons.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

WALTON (Brian), a learned prelate, was born at Cleaveland, in Yorkshire, in 1600, and was educated first at Magdalen college, and afterwards at Peter-house, Cambridge. In 1639 he took his doctor's degree, and at this time was prebendary of St. Paul's, chaplain to the king, and rector of St. Martin Orgar's London. He suffered considerably at the breaking out of the civil war, on which he fled to Oxford. He undertook and happily performed the publishing of a Polyglot Bible, in 6 vols. folio, in which he was assisted by the learned Edmund Castell, and other eminent men. Dr. Walton was also the author of a Defence of this Work, against Dr. Owen; and a book on the right of the London clergy to tithes. In 1660 he was preferred to the see of Chester, but died in London the year following.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

WALTON (Izaak), a biographical writer, was a native of Stafford, and became a tradesman under the Royal Exchange in London, where he acquired a good fortune. He was very fond of fishing, and wrote a standard book on the subject, entitled, "The Complete Angler, or Contemplative Man's Recreation," 8vo. Of this work Sir John Hawkins has given an improved edition. Mr. Walton was also the author of the lives of Donne, Wotton, Hooker, Herbert, and bishop Sanderson, written in a very plain but entertaining manner, and full of curious anecdotes. Mr. Zouch has published a splendid edition of these lives, in a quarto volume, with memoirs of the author, who died at Winchester in 1683, aged 84.—Wood, Huxkins.

WANLEY (Nathaniel), an English divine, who was educated at Trinity college, Cambridge, and afterwards obtained a living at Coventry, where he died about 1690. He published a curious book, called, "The Wonders of the Little World, or the History of Man," folio, in which there are many strange relations.—Gen. Dict.

WANLEY (Humphrey), son of the preceding, was born in 1672, and educated at Edmund hall, Oxford. He became secretary to the society for promoting christian knowledge, and librarian to the earl of Oxford. He was uncommonly skilled in bibliography and the northern languages. He died in 1726. Mr. Wanley formed a catalogue of Saxon manuscripts for Dr. Hickes's Thesaurus.—Ibid.

WANSLER (John Michael), a learned German, was born at Erfurt, in Thuringia, in 1635. He learnt the Oriental languages of Ludolph, who employed him to publish his Aethiopic Dictionary, in which Wansler inserted many articles of his own invention. He also assisted Dr. Castell in preparing his "Lexicon Heptaglotton." The duke of Saxe Gotha engaged him to go to Abyssinia; but he went no farther than Cairo. He was afterwards employed by Colbert to collect manuscripts and medals for the library of the king of France. He died in 1679.—Ibid.

WARBURTON (William), a learned prelate, was born at Newark upon Trent, in 1698, and bred an attorney, which profession he relinquished, and after going through a course of study he took orders without having had any university education. He afterwards received the degree of D. D. by mandamus from Cambridge. By marrying a niece of Mr. Allen of Prior Park he gained a considerable fortune, and in 1755 was preferred to a prebend in the cathedral of Durham. He was also preacher of Lincoln's Inn, and in 1757 advanced to the deanry of Bristol. In 1760 he was consecrated bishop of Gloucester, and in 1768 he instituted a lecture at Lincoln's Inn, in the form of a sermon, to prove the truth of revelation from the Prophecies. The bishop died in 1779, and was buried in Gloucester cathedral. His greatest work was the Divine Legation of Moses, 3 vols. 8vo. in which he defended revelation upon the grounds of religious deism, by admitting that though a future state made no part of the Jewish legislator's system, yet that the truth of the Mosaic scheme is capable of a moral demonstration. The performance, however, gave great offence to many learned and pious believers, who attacked it with great force; and were replied to by the author with haughtiness and asperity. Prior in point of publication, but next in ability, was the Alliance betwixt Church and State, 8vo.; in which well-reasoned work he incontrovertibly proved the necessity of religious establishments. Besides these works Dr. Warburton printed a Discourse entitled Julian, or a Discourse concerning the Earthquakes and Fiery Eruptions which defeated that emperor's attempt to rebuild the Temple at Jerusalem; two volumes of Sermons; a View of Lord Bolingbroke's Philosophy; a Tract on the Lord's Supper; a Treatise against the Methodists on the Doctrine of Grace; and several miscellaneous pieces. The whole of his works have been handsomely published by his friend bishop Hurd, in 6 vols. 4to. Pope left him the copyright of his works, which Warburton printed with notes. He also published an edition of Shakspeare, which was severely handled by Edwards, in his Canons of Criticism.—Life of Warburton by bishop Hurd.

WARD (Samuel), a learned divine, was educated at Emmanuel college, Cambridge, and in 1609 became master of Sidney college in that university. He was also professor of divinity and archdeacon of Taunton. He was one of the divines sent to the synod of Dort, where he altered his sentiments with respect to the calvinistic doctrines, which he had before rigorously maintained. He was imprisoned by the rebels on the breaking out of the civil war, and died of the ill treatment which he had received in 1643. He wrote some Theological Pieces, and several of his letters are in the collection of archbishop Usher's, folio.—Gen. Dict.

WARD (Seth), a learned divine and mathematician, was born at Buntingford in Hertfordshire, in 1617. He was educated at Sidney college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, of which he was deprived for refusing the covenant. He afterwards went to Oxford, where he was appointed savilian professor of astronomy. He was also elected president of Trinity college, which he resigned at the restoration. In 1661 he became fellow of the royal society, and the year following bishop of Exeter, from whence, in 1667, he was translated to Salisbury. In 1671 he was made chancellor of the garter, which honour he procured to be annexed to the see of Salisbury. He lost his reason some years before his death, which happened in 1689. He wrote a Lecture on Comets; an Idea of Trigonometry; Geometrical Astronomy; Exercitation on the Philosophy of Hobbes; Discourse on the Being and Attributes of God; and some Sermons.—Life by Dr. Pope.

WARD (John), professor of rhetoric at Gresham college, was born in London in 1679, and educated at Utrecht, where he took his degrees in law. He was intended for the ministry among the dissenters, but it does not appear that he followed that profession. He was admitted a member of the royal society in 1723, and became one of the vice-presidents in 1752. He was also a trustee of the British museum, and died in 1758. Dr. Ward wrote the Lives of the Gresham Professors, 1 vol. folio: Lectures on Oratory, 2 vols. 8vo.; and Dissertations on Difficult Passages of Scripture, 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WARD (Edward), a burlesque writer at the end of the 17th century, who wrote the London Spy, and turned Don Quixote into hudibrastic verse. He is not to be confounded with Thomas Ward, who wrote a poem in doggerel verse, called the History of the Reformation, 2 vols. 12mo. He was a bigotted papist.—Gen. Dict.

WARE (sir James), an historian, was born at Dublin in 1594. He received his education in Trinity college there, and in 1629 was knighted by the lords justices, to whom his father was secretary. He succeeded him as auditor general of Ireland, but in the rebellion he came to England and was sent to the Tower by the parliament, but released a few months afterwards, on which he returned to Dublin. He next went to France, but recovered his place at the restoration, and died at Dublin in 1666. He wrote De Prasulibus Hibernia, folio; the History and Antiquities of Ireland, folio; and several other works.—Wood's Fasti.

WARGENTIN (Peter), a Swedish mathematician, was born at Stockholm in 1717, and died there in 1788. He constructed Tables of the Satellites of Jupiter, and wrote several papers in the Transactions of the Academy of Stockholm.—Norv. Diet. Hist.

WARHAM (William), an eminent prelate and statesman, was born at Okely in Hampshire, and educated at Winchester school and New college Oxford, of which he became fellow. In 1494 he was sent ambassador to the duke of Burgundy, and on his return was advanced to the bishopric of London. He was also made lord chancellor; and in 1504 translated to the see of Canterbury. He governed with great moderation, and died in 1532.—Wood, A. O. Burnd's Reform.

WARIN (John), a sculptor and engraver of Liege, was born in 1604. His merits procured him a place in the mint at Paris, where he engraved the seal for the French academy, which is considered as his masterpiece. The subject is cardinal Richelieu. He also made two busts in bronze, of Louis XIV. which are very fine. He was poisoned by some villains in 1672. He was extremely avaricious.—Moreri.

WARING (Edward), a learned mathematician, was born in Shropshire, and admitted of Magdalen college, Cambridge, in 1758. In 1760, he was appointed Lucas's professor of mathematics, and in 1762 he published his Miscellaneous Analytica, 4to. a work of the highest order in abstruse mathematics. In 1767 he was created doctor of physic. He died in 1798. Besides the above work he published some papers in the Philosophical Transactions; Proprietates Algebrarum Curvarum; and Meditationes Analyticae.—Monthly Mag.

WARNER (Ferdinando), an English divine, who was rector of St. Michael, Queenhithe, London, and of Barnes in Surry. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History of England, 2 vols. very superficial and inaccurate; Memoirs of sir Thomas More; History of the Irish Rebellion, 2 vols. 8vo.; and a Treatise on the Cure of the Gout. Dr. Warner died of this disorder in 1768.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WARNER (John), son of the above, was educated at Cambridge, where he proceeded to his degree of D. D. in 1773. In 1771 he obtained the livings of Hockliffe and Chalton in Bedfordshire, and that of Stourton in the county of Wilts. He was afterwards chaplain to the English embassy at Paris. He died in 1800. Dr. Warner wrote a learned Tract on the Pronunciation of Greek, entitled Metron-ariston. He also translated the Life of Friar Gerund, from the Spanish, in 2 vols. 8vo.—Monthly Mag.

WARNER (Richard), a botanist, was bred to the bar, but never followed the profession. He resided at his seat of Woodford-green in Essex. He published "Plantæ Woodfordienfes, or a Catalogue of Plants growing spontaneously about Woodford in Essex," 8vo. He was also the author of a Letter to Garrick, on a Glossary to Shakespeare, 8vo.; and translated some of the comedies of Plautus. He died in 1775, and bequeathed his library to Wadham college, Oxford, where he had received his education.—Pulteney's Sketches of Bot.

WARTON (Thomas), a divine and poet, was born at Godalmin in Surry, in 1687. He was educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, where he took his degrees, and became professor of poetry twice. He obtained the vicarage of Basingstoke and Chobham, and died in 1745. A volume of his poems was printed in 1747, 8vo.—Europ. Mag.

WARTON (Joseph), a learned divine, was son of the preceding, and born at Basingstoke, about 1722. He received his education at Winchester school, from whence he removed to Oriel college, Oxford, which he left on taking his first degree. In 1757 he was created M. A. by diploma. In 1756 he published a volume of Odes, in 4to. of which a second edition appeared the year following. About this time he became rector of Wymslade, Hampshire. In 1753 he published his translation of Virgil, with notes, 4 vols. 8vo. He was at this time settled as usher of Winchester school, of which, in 1766, he became master. In 1768 he took his degree of D. D. About 1787 he was presented to a prebendal stall in Winchester cathedral, on which he resigned the mastership of the school. In 1756 he published an ingenious Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope, to which, in 1782, he added a second volume, and in 1797 he published a new edition of that author. Dr. Warton died at his living of Wickham in Hampshire, in 1800.—Ibid.

WARTON (Thomas), brother of the last mentioned, was born in 1728, and educated first at Winchester school, and next at Trinity college Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his degrees in arts. In 1756 he became professor of poetry, which situation he held ten years. In 1771 he was presented to the vicarage of Kidding-ton in Oxfordshire, of which parish he wrote an account as the specimen of a history of the county, which never appeared. In 1785 Mr. Warton was appointed poet laureat, and also Camden's professor of modern history at Oxford. He died in 1790. He wrote some elegant Poems, 2 vols. 8vo ; a History of English Poetry, 3 vols. 4to. ; the lives of sir Thomas Pope, and Dr. Bathurst, 2 vols. 8vo ; Notes on Milton's smaller poems ; and some miscellaneous pieces—Europ. Mus.

WARWICK (sir Philip), was born in 1608, in Westminster, and educated at Eton; after which he studied at Geneva. On his return to England he was made secretary to the lord treasurer Juxon, and clerk of the signet. In 1646 he was appointed one of the king's commissioners to treat with parliament for the surrender of Oxford, and was afterwards made secretary to his majesty. At the restoration he became member for Westminster, and was knighted. He died in 1682. He wrote "Memoirs of Charles the First," 8vo.—Wood's Fasti.

WASHINGTON (George), was born February 11, 1732, in Virginia. His family emigrated from Chehire to that country about 1630. His father, Mr. Augustus Washington, was a man of considerable landed property. The subject of the present article received his education at home under a private tutor; after which he became an eminent surveyor. He also became major in the provincial militia, in which capacity he was sent by general Dinwiddie, in 1753, to the French commander on the Ohio to complain of the inroads that were made, in violation of the treaties between the two crowns: he also at the same time negotiated a treaty with the six nations, and other western tribes of Indians, for which he received the thanks of his country. In 1755 he served as colonel under the unfortunate general Braddock, who fell a victim to his own haughtiness and imprudence. Mr. Washington on that occasion gave strong proofs of his military courage and skill, particularly in conducting the retreat of the army. He held the command of the Virginia troops till 1758, when he gave in his resignation on account of ill health.

He now served his country as a senator, and was elected a member of the assembly for Frederick county, and afterwards for that of Fairfax. When the breach between Great Britain and her colonies was widened by mutual animosity beyond all prospect of reconciliation, the eyes of his countrymen were fixed upon Mr. Washington, and accordingly in June 1775 he took the supreme command of the army of America, at Cambridge, in New England. Of the particulars of that great revolution it is impossible here to give a detail. The history of Washington, from this period, is the history of the American war, and must necessarily be voluminous. Suffice it to observe, that to his intrepidity, prudence, and moderation, the Americans were almost wholly indebted for that independence which was secured to them by the treaty of peace concluded in 1783. Soon after this event Washington resigned his commission to congress, and in his address on that occasion the magnanimity of the hero is blended with the wisdom of the philosopher. As a genuine proof of his patriotism, he would receive no pay for eight years service, but defrayed his expenses during the war out of his private purse. He now returned to his seat of Mount Vernon, like Cincinnatus, and set himself to complete those favourite improvements in agriculture which had been suspended. In 1799 he was elected president of the United States, on which he quitted his estate, and was received at Philadelphia with the applause which he had so well merited. His government was marked by that well-tempered prudence which distinguished all his conduct. An insurrection among the people of Alleghany and Washington counties, instigated by the French agent, Genet, was suppressed by the energy and moderation of the president; who in 1796 effected a commercial treaty with Great Britain. He resigned his office the same year; and in 1798 accepted the command of the army, which he held till his death. This melancholy event happened Dec. 14, 1799.—Life of Washington, &c. 1804.

WASSE (Christopher), a learned Englishman, was fellow of King's college, Cambridge, and afterwards superior beadle of law at Oxford. He translated Grotius's Catechism into Greek verse, and Gratius's Cynegeticon into English. He died in 1690.—Wash.

WASSER (Anna), an ingenious lady, was born at Zurich in 1679. She painted portraits in oil, but chiefly excelled in miniature painting. She died in 1713.—Painting.

WATELET (Claude Henry), a French poet, was born at Paris in 1718. He was member of the French academy and of several foreign societies. Though he had been receiver-general of the finances, &c.

died poor in 1786. He wrote a poem on the Art of painting; and some Comedies and other pieces of merit. He also left a Dictionary of Painting, Sculpture, and Engraving, which has been printed.—Nov. Dict. Hist.

WATERLAND (Daniel), a learned divine, was born at Walleby, in Lincolnshire, in 1688, of which parish his father was rector. He received his education first at Lincoln, and next at Magdalen college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and in 1715 was chosen master. He was also appointed chaplain to the king, and had the rectory of Ellingham in Norfolk. In 1787 he obtained the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and afterwards a canonry of Windsor. He died in 1740. Dr. Waterland wrote a Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity against Dr. Clarke, with a defence of that book. He was also the author of Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lecture; a Treatise on the Eucharist; a History of the Athanasian Creed; and other excellent works.—Biog. Brit.

WATERLOO (Anthony), a landscape painter in the 16th century, was born at Utrecht. His pictures are admirably executed, and sell very dear.—Pitt.

WATS (Gübert), an English divine, was born in Yorkshire, and educated at Lincoln college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and was created D.D. He died in 1657. Dr. Wats translated lord Bacon's treatise De Augmentis Scientiarum, 4to.; and Davila's History of the Civil Wars in France.—Wood.

WATSON (John), a learned prelate, was born at Rengworth in Worcestershire, and educated at All Souls college, Oxford, after which he became a physician, but on the accession of queen Elizabeth he took orders. In 1572 he became dean, and in 1580 bishop of Winchester. He died in 1589. This bishop wrote a Latin tragedy, entitled Abraham.—Wood. Langbaine.

WATSON (Thomas), a non-conformist divine, was educated at Emmanuel college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. He obtained the living of St. Stephen Walbrook, in the civil wars, but was deprived after the restoration. He died suddenly in 1673. He wrote a Course of Sermons on the Assembly's Catechism, in 1 vol. folio; and some other discourses.

WATSON (James), a Scotch printer, was born at Aberdeen, and carried on his business with great reputation at Edinburgh, where he died in 1728. He printed a beautiful Bible in 4to.; another in crown 8vo.; and one of a very small size, less and much neater than Field's.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WATSON (David), a learned writer, was born in Scotland in 1710. He received his education at St. Andrew's, where he became professor of philosophy; but in 1747 he left that university and came to London.

He led an irregular life, and died in great poverty in 1756. He published a Literal Translation of Horace, in 2 vols. 8vo. with notes.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WATSON (Robert), a divine and historian, was born at St. Andrew's, in Scotland, about 1730. He studied in the school and university of his native place, and afterwards at Glasgow and Edinburgh. He became doctor of laws, professor of logic, rhetoric, and belles-lettres, at St. Andrew's, and lastly principal of the united college. He died about 1780. Dr. Watson wrote The History of the Reign of Philip III. of Spain, which was printed in 1 vol. 4to., and 2 vols. 8vo. in 1789.—Europ. Mag.

WATSON (sir William), an eminent botanist, was born in London, and educated at Merchant Taylor's school, after which he was apprenticed to an apothecary. In 1738 he married and set up for himself, and in 1741 he was admitted a member of the royal society, to whose volumes he communicated many valuable papers on botanical subjects. About 1744 he engaged in the study of electricity, in which he made several important discoveries, and received as a recompence the Copley medal from the royal society in 1745. In 1757 he was presented with the degree of M.D. by the university of Halle, and also by that of Wittenberg. In 1762 he was chosen one of the physicians of the Foundling hospital, and in 1784 a fellow of the royal college of physicians. In 1786 he received the honour of knighthood from his majesty. He died in 1787. His tracts on Electricity have been collected into one volume 8vo.—Pukerney.

WATSON (John), an English divine, was born at Presbury in Cheshire, and educated at Brasenose college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1769 he was presented to the valuable rectory of Stockport, in his native county. He died in 1788, aged 59. Mr. Watson wrote the History of Halifax, in Yorkshire, 1 vol. 4to. 1775.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WATSON (Henry), a surgeon, was born in London in 1702; and celebrated as a lecturer in anatomy, and in 1761 was elected surgeon of Westminster hospital. He died in 1793. He wrote an account of the Absorbents of the Urinary Bladder, and some papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Ibid.

WATTEAU (Anthony), a painter, was born at Valenciennes in 1684, and died at Nogent, near Paris, in 1721. He resided some time in England, which he was obliged to quit on account of his health. He painted conversations and burlesque subjects in a good style.—Pilkington.

WATTS (Isaac), a pious and ingenious divine among the dissenters, was born at Southampton in 1674. He received part of his education under Mr. Rowe, a dissenting minister who kept an academy in London, where he had that eminent prelate archbishop Hort for a fellow pupil. In 1696 Mr. Watts became tutor to the son of sir John Hartop, and after residing in that family four years he went to live with sir Thomas Abney at Newington. He also accepted an invitation from the independent congregation in Berry-street, St. Mary Axe. In 1728 the universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen did honour to themselves in conferring on him the degree of doctor in divinity. This truly estimable man died in 1741. His principal works are, A Treatise on Logic; An Essay on the Improvement of the Mind, intended as a supplement to that work; Introduction to Astronomy and Geography; Hymns; and a poetical version of the Psalms, usually sung in dissenting congregations; Horæ Lyricæ, or Poems, chiefly religious; Miscellaneous Thoughts, 12mo.; Scripture History, in a catechetical form, 12mo.; two volumes of Sermons; and Philosophical Essays, 8vo. The whole of his works, which are remarkable for their clearness and usefulness, have been printed in 6 vols. 4to.—Life by Dr. Gibbons.

WEAVER (John), a dancing master, who composed several dramatic pantomimes, as "The Loves of Mars and Venus;" "Orpheus and Eurydice;" and "Perseus and Andromeda." He also wrote "A History of the Mimes and Pantomimes of the Ancients;" "The Art of Dancing, with a Treatise on Action and Gesture." He died about 1730.—Biog. Dram.

WEBB (Philip Carteret), an eminent lawyer and antiquary, was born in 1700. In 1751 he was employed in obtaining the charter of incorporation for the society of antiquaries. He was member of parliament and solicitor to the treasury. He died in 1770. Mr. Webb wrote a number of small tracts, chiefly on legal subjects.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WEBB (Benjamin), an English penman, was born in London in 1725. He was frequently employed in writing copies of honorary freedoms, bestowed by the city of London upon eminent persons; particularly that presented to his Danish majesty in 1768. His works consist principally of tables of calculations. He died in 1774.—Ibid.

WEBSTER (William), a writing master, who kept a school in Castle-street Leicester fields. He translated, from the French of La Hôte, a Compendious Course of Mathematics, 2 vols. 12mo.; and wrote a small treatise on Arithmetic, and another on Book-keeping. He died in 1744, aged 60.—Ibid.

WECHSEL (Christopher), a celebrated printer in Paris, who began to print Greek authors in 1530. His editions were remarkable for their correctness, which was owing to his employing the learned Sylburgius for his reader. He died in 1572. His son, Andrew, being a protestant, withdrew to Basil, where he carried on the printing business. He published a catalogue of books printed by him and his father, 8vo.—Moreri.

WEEVER (John), an English antiquary, was a native of Lancashire, and educated at Cambridge. He published a folio volume of great curiosity and value, entitled Funerall Monuments, 1631. An edition in 4to. was published in 1767. Weever died about 1632.—Wood.

WELBY (Henry), an extraordinary character, was born in Lincolnshire, where he had a large estate, but an attempt being made on his life by his brother, he took the resolution of secluding himself from all society. He accordingly took a house in Grub-street, London, where he lived forty-four years without being seen by any one. He died in 1636.—Phœnix Britannicus.

WELLS (Edward), a learned divine, was born at Corsham, in Wiltshire, about 1665, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford. He proceeded D. D. and obtained the living of Cotesbach in Leicestershire. He died about 1730. Dr. Wells published an Answer to Dr. Clarke on the Trinity; some pamphlets against the dissenters; a valuable work on the Geography of the Old and New Testament, 2 vols. 8vo.; a Course of Mathematics for young Gentlemen, 3 vols.; and some other works.—Wood.

WELSTED (Leonard), a poet, was born in 1689, and educated at Westminster school, where he wrote the humorous tale of "The Apple Pye," which has been falsely attributed to Dr. King. Mr. Welsted obtained a situation in the ordnance office; and he was honoured with a situation in the Dunciad by Mr. Pope. However, he was a man of genius, and several of his poems possess great merit. He translated Longinus on the Sublime into English from Boileau's version, and wrote a comedy, called "The Dissembled Wanton." He died in 1747.—Biog. Dram.

WELLWOOD (Thomas), a Scotch physician, was born near Edinburgh in 1652, and educated at Glasgow. His father was suspected of being concerned in the murder of archbishop Sharpe, which made him fly to Holland, from whence he returned with king William. The son became king's physician for Scotland, and settled at Edinburgh, where he died in 1716. He wrote "Memoirs of English Affairs from 1588 to the Revolution," very superficial and partial, in 1 vol. 8vo. He is not to be confounded with a presbyterian of the same name, who died at Perth in 1680. He wrote Emmanuel's Land, and some other pious works.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WENZELAS, emperor of Germany, and king of Bohemia, was the son of Charles IV. whom he succeeded in 1378. He was deranged in his mind, on which account he was placed under confinement, and died in 1419.—Univ. Hist.

WENTWORTH (Thomas), earl of Strafford, was born in Yorkshire, of an ancient family. He was one of the principal leaders of the popular party in the house of commons against the measures of Charles the first; but was gained over to the court, made a peer, and appointed president of the north, and lord lieutenant of Ireland. On this occasion the famous Pym said to him, "You have left us, but we will never leave you till your head is off your shoulders." In this he kept his word. Lord Strafford displayed great talents for government in Ireland, where he encouraged agriculture, and laboured with zeal to promote the protestant interest. When the rebellion broke out in Scotland, he gathered a force, and endeavoured to persuade the king to act with vigour, but his advice was overruled. His enemies in the commons, with Pym at their head, impeached him at the bar of the lords, and he was ordered into custody. His trial lasted eighteen days, and was carried on with uncommon virulence. His defence made a deep impression upon the hearers, though it did not abate the malice of his persecutors, who passed a bill of attainder against him. The king, however, refused his assent to it a long time. At length the earl himself wrote to advise his majesty to yield, which he did with extreme reluctance; and this great man was beheaded on Tower-hill, May 12, 1641.—Clarendon.

WERT (Adrian Vander), a painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1639, and died there in 1727. He painted historical subjects in miniature, which he finished in a style of great elegance. His works are very scarce. His brother Peter was his pupil, and a good painter. He died in 1718.—Pilkington.

WESLEY (Samuel), an English divine, was born in Dorsetshire, and educated at Oxford, but was bred a dissenter. He afterwards conformed, and wrote some tracts against his old connexions. He obtained the living of South Ormesby in Lincolnshire, and afterwards Epworth in the same county, where he died in 1735. Mr. Wesley wrote a number of poems, which were ridiculed by Garth and other wits. His principal works are, The Life of Christ, an heroic poem, folio; and Dissertations on the Book of Job, in Latin, folio. His son Samuel was under-master of Westminster school many years, and afterwards master of Blundel's school at Tiverton, in Devonshire, where he died in 1799. He wrote the Battle of the Sexes, and several other ingenious poems, printed in 1 vol. 12mo.—Gen. Dict.

WESLEY (John), son of Samuel Wesley the elder, rendered himself remarkable as the founder of a numerous sect. He was born at Epworth in 1703, and educated at the Charterhouse, from whence he removed to Christ church college, Oxford, but in 1726 he was chosen fellow of Lincoln college, where he became an eminent tutor. In 1730 he and his brother, with a few other students, formed themselves into a small society for the purpose of mutual edification in religious exercises. So singular an association excited considerable notice, and among other names bestowed upon the members, that of Methodists was applied to them with such success as to continue to distinguish all their followers to the present time. Thinking that Oxford was not a sphere large enough for his labours, Mr. Wesley, with some others, went to Georgia, in America, in 1735, with a view of converting the Indians. After a stay there of two years, he returned to England, where he commenced itinerant preacher, and gathered many followers. The churches being shut against him, he built spacious meeting-houses in London, Bristol, and other places. For some time he was united with Mr. Whitfield, but differences arising on account of the doctrine of election, which was zealously espoused and preached by the latter, they separated, and the methodists were denominated according to their respective leaders. Mr. Wesley was indefatigable in his labours, and almost continually engaged in travelling over England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. His society, though consisting of many thousands, was uncommonly well organized, and he preserved his influence over it to the last. He died in London, in 1791. He published some volumes of hymns, numerous sermons, political tracts, and pieces in controversy against the Calvinists and Moravians. His preaching was extemporary, but not vehement. He dwelt much upon practical religion, though he taught his followers to look for extraordinary motions of the holy spirit, and to aspire to a state of sinless perfection.—Life by Whitehead.

WESLEY (Charles), younger brother of the above, was born in 1708, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ church college, Oxford, of which he became student. He was one of the first methodists, and continued a constant preacher among them to his death, which happened in 1788. He wrote several hymns and other pious pieces. His two sons, Charles and Samuel, have distinguished themselves by their extraordinary skill in music.—Ibid.

WESSELUS (John), a learned German, was born at Groningen, about 1419. His great merit was known to pope Sixtus IV. who invited him to Rome, and promised him whatever he should require. Wesselus contented himself with asking for a Hebrew and Greek bible in the Vatican library. "And why," said the pope, "do you not ask for a bishopric?" "Because I do not want one," replied Wesselus. He died in his own country, in 1489. He maintained many opinions similar to those of Luther. Some of his works were printed at Groningen in 1614, 4to. with this title, Jarrago rerum Theologicarum.—Moreri.

WEST (Gilbert), an eminent writer, was born in 1706, and educated at Winchester and Eton, and afterwards at Christ church, Oxford. He became treasurer of Chelsea hospital through the favour of William Pitt, afterwards earl Chatham. In 1747 Mr. West printed his valuable work in vindication of the worth of our Saviour's resurrection, for which the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws. He also published a translation of Pindar into English verse, and wrote some elegant poems in Doddsley's collection. He died at Wickham, in Kent, in 1756.

WEST (Richard), an eminent lawyer, was a barrister in the Temple, and in 1717 became king's counsel. In 1725 he was made lord chancellor of Ireland, but died the year following. He wrote a Discourse concerning Treasons and Bills of Attainder; and another Treatise on the Manner of creating Peers. He married a daughter of bishop Burnet's.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WEST (James), an ingenious gentleman, was educated at Baliol college, Oxford. In 1741 he sat in parliament for St. Alban's, and was appointed one of the secretaries of the treasury, which office he resigned in 1762. He was president of the royal society, and one of the vice-presidents of that of antiquaries. He died in 1772. The late marquis of Landowne purchased his MSS. and his collection of books was sold by auction.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

WEST (Thomas), a topographical writer, was born at Ulverston, in Lancashire, where he died in 1779. He wrote "The History of Furness; and "A Guide to the Lakes."—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WESTFIELD (Thomas), a pious prelate, was born in the Isle of Ely, and educated at Jesus college, Cambridge. He afterwards obtained the living of St. Bartholomew, behind the Exchange, and the archdeaconry of St. Alban's. He was a pathetic preacher, as to be called the weeping prophet. At the beginning of the rebellion he was made bishop of Bristol. He died in 1644.—Lloyd's Account of Suffering Loyalists.

WESTSTEIN (John Rodolph), a learned divine, was born at Basil in 1617, and succeeded his father as professor of Greek and theology in that university, where he died in 1711. He published some learned works, particularly Origen's Dialogue against the Marcionites. His brother, John Henry, was also a learned man. He settled as a printer at Amsterdam, where he published several correct editions of ancient authors, with prefaces. He died in 1726, aged 77.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

WESTSTEIN (John James), of the same family as the preceding, was born at Basil in 1693. He travelled into different countries to consult manuscripts of the New Testament, in order to publish an edition with various readings. In 1730 he printed his Prolegomena to that work; which gave such alarm to some of the clergy, that they accused him to the council as a Socinian, and he was deposed from the ministry. On this he went to Holland, where he succeeded Le Clerc as professor of philosophy, and died at Amsterdam in 1754. His edition of the New Testament appeared in 1751, in 2 vols. folio. He added to this great work two epistles of St. Clemens Romanus in Syriac, with a Latin version.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

WHARTON (George), an astrologer, was born in Westmoreland. He spent the greatest part of his patrimony in defence of Charles I. and after the ruin of the royal cause he wrote a number of almanacks, astronomical tracts, a chronology of remarkable events, and other works. He was also the author of some doggerel verses. After the restoration he was created a baronet, and made treasurer of the ordnance. He died in 1681.—Granger.

WHARTON (Anne), a lady distinguished for her poetical talents in the reign of Charles II. She was daughter of Sir Henry Lee, of Ditchley in Oxfordshire, who, dying without a son, left his estate between this lady and her sister, the countess of Abingdon. She was wife of Thomas, afterwards marquis of Wharton; and the author of several poems, printed in Dryden's and Nichols's Collections. She died in 1655.

WHARTON (Henry), an ingenious divine, was born in 1664, at Worstead in Norfolk, of which place his father was vicar. He received his education at Caius college, Cambridge, after which he became chaplain to archbishop Sancroft, who gave him the rectory of Chatham, and the vicarage of Minster, in Kent. He died in 1695. He wrote a Treatise on the Celibacy of the Clergy against the Church of Rome; Specimens of Errors in Burnet's History of the Reformation; Defence of Pluralities, &c.; Historia de Episcopis & Decanis Londonensibus, necnon de Episcopis & Decanis Aflavenfisibus, 8vo; Anglia Sacra, five Collectio Historiarum, &c. 2 vols. folio; and a volume of Sermons, 8vo.—Wood, A.C.

WHARTON (Philip, duke of), was born about 1699. On the death of his father, in 1716, he discarded his tutor, and paid his court to the chevalier St. George, commonly called the Pretender, who dignified him with the title of duke of Northumberland. He soon afterwards returned home, and made his peace with government, and was created duke of Wharton. After this he joined the opposition, and distributed a weekly paper called the True Briton. Having reduced his fortune by his extravagance, he again went abroad, where he attached himself to the Pretender, and died in 1751.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WHATELY (William), a pious divine, was born at Banbury in Oxfordshire, in 1533. He was educated at Christ's college, Cambridge, and afterwards at Edmund hall, Oxford. On entering into orders he became vicar of Banbury, and lecturer of Stratford upon Avon. He was a man of great learning, and died in 1639. He published a number of sermons with quaint titles; a Treatise on Marriage; and an Exposition of the Commandments, 8vo.—Wood.

WHEARE (Degory), an historian, was born at Jacobstow, in Cornwall, in 1573, and educated at Exeter college, Oxford. He afterwards became Camden's professor of history, and principal of Gloucester hall. He died in 1647. He wrote de Ratione & Methodo Legendi Historias Dissertatio, 8vo. 1625, and again in 1637. It was translated into English by Edmund Bohun.—Wood, A. O.

WHEATLEY (Charles), an English divine, was born in London in 1686, and educated at St. John's college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. On taking orders he settled in London, where he was chosen lecturer of St. Mildred, in the Poultry. He was afterwards presented to the vicarages of Brent and Furneaux Pelham, in Hertfordshire. He died at the latter place in 1742. His works are, 1. A Rational Illustration of the Book of Common Prayer, the first edition of which was in folio, and the following ones in 8vo.; 2. An Historical Vindication of the Eighty-fifth Canon on bidding Prayer; 3. Answer to Hoadley on the Sacrament; 4. Private Devotions at the Holy Communion; 5. Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lecture, 8vo. After his death appeared his Miscellaneous Sermons, in 3 vols. 8vo.—Gen. Mag.

WHEELER (George), a divine and baronet, was born at Charing, in Kent, and educated at Lincoln college, Oxford, after which he travelled into the Levant, accompanied by Dr. Spon. On his return he presented several valuable antiquities collected in his travels, to the university, which complimented him with the degree of M. A. He entered into orders, and was made prebendary of Durham, and presented to the vicarage of Basingstoke, in Hampshire, and the valuable rectory of Houghton-le-Spring, in the county of Durham. He died in 1724. His works are, a Journey into Greece, folio, 1682; an Account of the Churches and Places of Assembly of the Primitive Christians, 1689, 8vo.; and the Protestant Monastery; or Christian Economics, 12mo.—Wood. Gen. Dict.

WHICKOCOT (Benjamin,) a pious divine, was born in Shropshire in 1609, and educated at King's college, Cambridge, of which he became provost, but was removed at the Restoration. He was afterwards successively minister of Blackfriars and St. Lawrence-Jewry, London. He died in 1683. His funeral sermon was preached by Dr. Tillotson. The first volume of his sermons was published by the earl of Shaftesbury, author of the Characteristics; the three next by Dr. Jeffery; and the fifth by Dr. Samuel Clarke.—Gen. Dict.

WHISTON (William), a divine and mathematician, was born at Norton in Leicestershire in 1667. He was educated first at the free school of Tamworth, and removed from thence to Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his degrees in arts. He afterwards became domestic chaplain to bishop Moore of Norwich, who gave him the living of Lowestoft. In 1700 he succeeded Sir Isaac Newton as Lucas's professor of mathematics at Cambridge, in which situation he read lectures on that great man's principles of philosophy. About this time he began to oppose the generally received doctrine of the Trinity, and conducted himself with so much imprudent zeal in the controversy, that he was formally deprived of the professorship, and expelled the university. He then retired to London, where he supported himself by teaching mathematics, reading lectures, and writing books. In his latter years he turned baptist. He died in 1752. Mr. Whiston was a man of considerable learning, but excessively credulous, notwithstanding his want of faith in the Trinity. His principal works are, A New Theory of the Earth, 8vo. This was answered by Dr. Keil. Astronomical Lectures, 8vo; Translation of Josephus, 4 vols. 8vo; Astronomical Principles of Religion; History of the Old and New Testament, 6 vols. 8vo; and Memoirs of his own Life, 2 vols. 8vo.—Wood.

WHITAKER (William), a learned divine, was born at Holme in Lancashire, in 1548; and educated at Trinity college, Cambridge. He took his doctor's degree, and became regius professor of divinity, and master of St. John's college in that university. Dr. Whitaker wrote some able books against popery. He was suspected of puritanism, and died in 1595.—Fuller.

WHITBY (Daniel), a learned divine, was born at Ruthden, in Northamptonshire, in 1638. He became scholar of Trinity college, Oxford, and afterwards fellow. Dr. Ward, bishop of Salisbury, to whom he was chaplain, gave him a prebend in his cathedral, and the rectory of St. Edmund in that city. He also became chanter of the cathedral, and died in 1725. Dr. Whitby wrote a number of controversial books; but he is chiefly known by an excellent volume on the five Points against Calvinism, 8vo; and his Paraphrase and Exposition of the New Testament, 2 vols. folio.—Wood. Gen. Dict.

WHITE (Thomas), an eminent divine, was born at Bristol; and became a student of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, in 1566. After entering into orders, he settled in London, and obtained the rectory of St. Gregory, and that of St. Dunstan in the West. He was also successively prebendary of St.

Paul's, treasurer of the church of Salisbury, canon of Christ church, Oxford, and canon of Windfor. He died in 1623. Dr. White published some sermons; but he is remembered by his charities, having founded an almshouse at Bristol; a lectureship at Oxford; and made a liberal bequest to Sion college for the London clergy. He is not to be confounded with another minister of both his names, who lived after the Restoration, and was lecturer of St. Andrew, Holborn. He wrote a book on the art of Divine Meditation, 8vo.—Wood. Gen. Dict.

WHITE (Francis), a learned prelate, was educated at Cambridge, after which he became almoner to the king, dean and bishop of Carlisle, from whence in 1631 he was translated to Norwich. He died in 1637. This bishop distinguished himself by his writings against popery, and a conference with Fisher the jesuit in the king's presence in 1624.—Granger.

WHITE (Thomas), or as he called himself Albius, a philosopher and divine of the Roman church, was born in Essex. He was particularly intimate with Hobbes, though as philosophers they did not agree. His works are remarkable for their subtlety about trifles. He died in 1676.—Wood. Granger.

WHITE (Jeremy), a nonconformist divine, was fellow of Trinity college, Cambridge, and household chaplain to Oliver Cromwell. He was a man of considerable humour and dexterity: but was outwitted by Cromwell, for whose daughter he had an affection; and being one day on his knees before her, he was suddenly caught in that posture by the protector, who demanded the reason. White replied that he had been long paying his addresses to the lady's maid, who stood by, but without avail, on which account he was soliciting the lady's interest. Cromwell immediately turning to the wench, demanded why she refused Mr. White; and without ceremony ordered a clergyman to be called, and they were married on the spot. Jeremy lived privately after the Restoration, and died in 1707, aged 78. He wrote a remarkable book on the Restoration of all Things, printed after his death in 8vo. It is a defence of the notion that all men will finally be saved.—Calamy.

WHITE (Robert), an English engraver, who served his time under Loggan. He is supposed to have engraved more portraits and frontispieces than any other artist. He was remarkably exact in his likenesses: and died in 1704.—Strutt's Engravers.

WHITEFIELD (George), one of the founders of the methodists, was born in 1714 at Gloucester, where his mother kept the Bell inn. He received his education in the crypt school at Gloucester, and afterwards became servant in Pembroke college, Oxford. Dr. Benson, bishop of Gloucester, ordained him, after which his zeal prompted him to preach in prisons, private houses, the fields and open streets. A course so strange and irregular could not but give great offence, and the doors of the churches were universally shut against him. His eloquence was peculiarly strong, and well adapted to make a great impression upon ordinary minds; in consequence of which he obtained many followers. In 1738 he went to America, where he was well received, and wonderful effects are recorded in his journals of the power of his preaching. Sudden and violent conversions were considered as indispensibly necessary to prove that the hearers had obtained divine grace. For some time Mr. Whitefield acted in conjunction with the two Wesleys, but at last serious differences arose between them respecting the calvinistic doctrines of absolute election and final perseverance. These were zealously maintained by Mr. Whitefield and his followers, and as strenuously denied by the others. A division arose, and the methodists were divided into two parties, called the Calvinistic and Arminian methodists. Mr. Whitefield built two large conventicles in London, that called the Tabernacle in the city, and another in Tottenham-court-road. He was also powerfully assisted by the countess of Huntingdon, who appointed him her chaplain; and became the patroness of the sect, which still continues in a flourishing state. Mr. Whitefield died suddenly in New England in 1770. His Sermons, Letters and Controversial Tracts, have been printed in 7 vols. 8vo.—Life by Gillen.

WHITEHEAD (Paul), a poet, was born in Westminster in 1710, and received a liberal education. His friend lord le Desperer procured him a patent place worth 800*l.* a year. He died in 1774. The best of his poems, which are not above mediocrity, was entitled the Gymnasiad, a mock heroic, designed to ridicule the brutal custom of prize-fighting.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WHITEHEAD (William), a poet, was the son of a baker at Cambridge, and admitted first a sizar, and afterwards a scholar of Clare-hall, Cambridge. He also obtained a fellowship, after which he accompanied two young noblemen on their travels: by which means he was appointed register and secretary of the order of the Bath. In 1755 he became poet laureat. He died in 1785, aged 70. Besides his odes and songs, he wrote the Roman Father, and Crensa, tragedies; the School for Lovers, a comedy; a Trip to Scotland, a farce, and some other pieces.—Ibid.

WHITEHURST (John) an ingenious mechanic, was born at Congleton, in Cheshire, and bred to his father's business, which was that of a clock and watch-maker. He set up in that line at Derby, where he made the town clock at the town-hall, and the clock and chimes in the tower of All-Saints church. In 1775 he was appointed stamps of the money weights at the mint, on which he removed to London, where he continued to reside till his death in 1788. Mr. Whitehurst was a member of the royal society, and his house was the resort of ingenious and scientific men of whatever nation or rank. He is advantageously known in the world of letters by his Inquiry into the Original State and Formation of the Earth, published first in 1778, and again with improvements, in 1786, in 1 vol. 4to. He was also the author of an Attempt towards obtaining Invariable Measures of Length, Capacity and Weight, from the Mensuration of Time, 8vo; and some papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Europ. Mag.

WHITELOCK (sir James), a learned lawyer, was born in London, in 1570, and educated at Merchant-Tailors' school, from whence he removed to St. John's college, Oxford, and, in 1594, entered of the Middle Temple, where he was called to the bar. In 1620 he was elected member for Woodstock; and about the same time received the honour of knighthood, and the appointment of chief justice of Chester. He afterwards became chief justice of the king's-bench, and died in 1632. His works are Lectures, or Readings in the Middle Temple Hall; and several speeches in parliament.—Wood.

WHITELOCKE (Bulstrode), son of the preceding, was born in London: in 1605, he was educated at Merchant-Tailors' school, and St. John's college, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple. In the long parliament he represented Great Marlow, in Buckinghamshire, and shewed himself very active in prosecuting the earl of Strafford. He was appointed one of the lay members in the assembly of divines; and in 1647, became one of the commissioners of the great seal. In 1653 he was sent ambassador from the Commonwealth to Sweden, and on his return was made one of the commissioners of the treasury. In 1656 he was chosen speaker of the house of commons, and the year following became one of Cromwell's house of lords. In 1659 he was appointed president of the council of state, and keeper of the great seal, which he resigned soon after, and retired to Chilton, in Wiltshire, where he died in 1676. His works are, 1. Monarchy asserted to be the best, most ancient, and legal Form of Government, 8vo.; 2. Memorials of English Affairs, folio, 1682, and again, considerably enlarged, in 1732; 3. Several Speeches in Rushworth's and other collections.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

WHITGIFT (John), an eminent prelate, was born at Great Grimsby, in Lincolnshire, in 1530. He received his education first at Queen's college, and afterwards removed to Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. In 1560 he entered into orders, and became chaplain to bishop Cox of Ely, who gave him a living. In 1563 he was appointed lady Margaret's professor of divinity, great restorer of order and discipline at university. In 1567 he was at Trinity college, and regius professor he resigned two years afterwards, and obtained the deanry of Lincoln in 1576 was consecrated bishop of Ely, from whence, in 1583, he was translated to Canterbury. He was a favourite with Queen Elizabeth, who used to call him her little black and white. He was a zealous governor of the university, and strenuously resisted the encroachments of the puritans. The archbishop's hospital at Croydon, and died in 1604.—Life by Strype.

WHITTINGHAM (William), a learned divine, was born at Chester, an Brasenose college, Oxford. He became fellow of All-souls, and student of Christ-church. On the death of Edward VI. he went abroad; in that of Elizabeth, strong against the liturgy and church of Rome. However he did not scruple to accept the deanry of Durham, where he suffered great depredations in removing the coffins and other ancient remains from the cathedral. He died in 1579. He translated the Geneva Bible; and turned some of the psalms of David. Sternhold and Hopkins's version of the psalms.—Wood.

WHITTINGTON (Robert), a learned lawyer, was born at Litchfield in Staffordshire; he published a law treatise in quarto, 1500; and several other works. He was a man of great learning, and wrote against Lilliput, and died about 1550.—Wood, A. O.

WHITTINGTON (sir Richard), a learned citizen of London, who flourished in the reigns of Richard II. Henry IV. and Henry V. He built Newgate, part of the old London wall, the hand of Grey-Friars, now called Christ-church, part of Guildhall, with a chapel to keep the city record, and three times served London: the last time was in the reign of Edward VI.—Stowe's London.

WICKLIFFE (John de), a learned divine, and styled the morning star of the reformation, was born about 1330, in the parish of Wickliffe, in Yorkshire. He was admitted first of Queen's college, and afterwards removed to Merton college. In 1361 his great talents procured him the mastership of Balliol college; after he was made warden of the hall, then founded by archbishop of Canterbury, whose successor, Langham, died, the instigation of the monks, sworn foes to Wickliffe, for corrupt errors and practices having cited king Edward to refuse to pay him a year monks defended the papal claim, which Wickliffe opposed with such strength, that he was made king's chaplain, and preferred to the rectory of Lutterworth, in Leicester-shire. In 1374 he was sent, with some others, on an embassy to Rome, to complain of the number of benefices in England enjoyed by foreigners. This mission, however, produced no other effect than to confirm Wickliffe in his sentiments of the papal tyranny. After his return he preached with still greater vehemence against the corruptions of the Roman church. Pope Gregory XI. being informed of his conduct, issued several bulls against him, charging him with numerous heresies. An assembly was accordingly held at St. Paul's by archbishop Sudbury, and Courtenay, bishop of London, to examine Wickliffe, who appeared, supported by the Duke of Lancaster and Lord Percy. Wickliffe made an able defence of himself, but the council ended without any determination. Wickliffe died in 1384, and was buried in his church at Lutterworth, but forty years afterwards his bones were taken up and burnt by order of the council of Constance. He wrote a tract on the Schism of the Popes; and translated the New Testament into English. This last has been printed by the care of Mr. Lewis, folio.—Gilpin's Life of Wickliffe.

WICQUEFORD (Abraham), a Dutch statesman, was born at Amsterdum in 1598. He entered into the service of the elector of Brandenburg, who employed him as his agent in France, where he resided thirty-two years, and was very much noticed by Mazarine. But being accused of communicating some secrets of importance to the Dutch government, he was confined in the Bastille some months. When the war broke out between France and Holland he retired to the Hague, where he was taken up and imprisoned four years, on a charge of holding correspondence with the English. He contrived to make his escape, and retired to Zell, where he died in 1682. His works are, a History of the United States, folio; and a Treatise on the Duties of an Ambassador, 2 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

WILD (Robert), a presbyterian divine, who took his doctor's degree at Oxford, and became rector of Aynhoe, in Northamptonshire, of which he was deprived at the restoration for non-conformity. He died at Oundle in 1679. His works are, the Tragedy of Mr. Christopher Love; Ister Boreale, a Poem on the Imprisonment of Mr. Calamy in Newgate; and some other poetical pieces: also some Sermons.—Calamy.

WILD (Henry), a taylor of Norwich, who made himself master of the Hebrew and Arabic, and was drawn from obscurity by Dr. Prideaux, who procured him a place in the Bodleian library. He afterwards removed to London, where he was supported by Dr. Mead. He died about 1733. He translated from the Arabic "Mahomet's Journey to Heaven."—Gen. Biog. Diß.

WILDE (William), a lawyer of the 17th century. He was recorder of London in 1659, created a baronet in 1660, appointed king's serjeant, made one of the justices of the court of common pleas in 1668, and justice of the court of king's bench in 1672. He died in 1679. He edited Yelverton's Reports.—Gen. Diß.

WILKES (Thomas), an augustine monk, of Osney, near Oxford. He wrote a Chronicle of English Affairs from the conquest to the end of the reign of Edward the first.—Nicholson's Hist. Lib.

WILKES (John), alderman and chamberlain of London, was born in Clerkenwell in 1728: he received a liberal education, and after travelling abroad, married a lady of fortune, and became colonel of the Buckinghamshire militia. In 1761 he was elected into parliament for Aylesbury, and at this time became a violent opponent of the Bute administration by publishing a periodical paper called the North Briton, the 45th number of which was so offensive, that a general warrant was issued by the earl of Halifax, secretary of state, to seize Mr. Wilkes and his papers. This affair made a great noise, and brought him into great repute as the patriot of the day. He brought his action in the court of king's bench, where he obtained a verdict, by which general warrants were declared illegal. However he was soon afterwards involved in trouble on account of a most obscene and blasphemous publication called the Essay on Woman; for which he was expelled the house. He was at different times returned for Middlesex, but the election was always declared void till 1774, when he was permitted to take his seat without farther opposition. The same year he served the office of lord mayor. He afterwards obtained the lucrative office of chamberlain of the city of London, and in 1790 quitted parliament. He rendered eminent service in the riots of 1780 by exerting himself with such promptitude as saved the bank from the depredators. He died in 1797.—Life by Almon.

WILKIE (William), a poet and divine, was born in West Lothian, in Scotland, in 1721, and educated for the ministry at Edinburgh. He obtained his degree of doctor in divinity, and became professor of natural philosophy at St. Andrew's, where he died in 1772. Dr. Wilkie published a poem entitled, the Epigoniad; and some ingenious Fables, 8vo.—Anderson's Collection of Poets.

WILKINS (John), a learned prelate, was born at Fawley in Northamptonshire, in 1614, and educated at Magdalen-hall, Oxford. On entering into orders he became chaplain to lord Say, and afterwards to Charles count palatine of the Rhine. In 1638 he published his Discovery of a New World, or an attempt to prove that there may be another habitable world in the moon. This idea he enlarged and supported in a discourse concerning a new planet in 1640. He also published several other ingenious pieces, particularly one, entitled, Mathematical Magic; which was reprinted in 1680. In 1649 he obtained the wardenship of Wadham college, which he vacated in 1656 by his marriage with the sister of Oliver Cromwell, but by his connexion with the usurper the statutes were dispensed with. In 1659 he was made master of Trinity college, Cambridge, of which he was deprived at the restoration. He then became preacher at Gray's-inn, and rector of St. Lawrence Jewry. He was one of the institutors of the royal society, and in 1668 was promoted to the see of Chester. He died in 1672. His mathematical works have been printed in 2 vols. 8vo. He was also the author of some Sermons; a Discourse on the Gift of Preaching; and another on Prayer.—Gen. Dict. Wood.

WILKINS (David), a learned antiquary and divine, was keeper of the library at Lambeth, of which he drew up a catalogue, printed in 1718. Archbishop Wake bestowed upon him some church preferment. He also published the New Testament in Coptic; an edition of the Saxon Laws; and another of Selden's works. He died in 1745.—Anecd. of Bourger.

WILKINSON (Henry), a celebrated preacher among the presbyterians. He was one of the assembly of divines at Westminster, rector of St. Dunstan in the East, canon of Christ church, Oxford, and Margaret's professor of divinity in that university; but was deprived of all his places at the restoration for nonconformity. He died at Clapham in 1675. Dr. Wilkinson printed several sermons.—Calamy.

WILKINSON (Henry), a puritan divine, was born in Yorkshire in 1616. He received his education at Magdalen-hall, Oxford, of which in the time of the rebellion he became principal, but was ejected at the restoration. He died at Great Cornard in Suffolk, in 1690. He published Academical Discourses; a Treatise on Free Will; and another on the Divine Right of the Lord's Day, in Latin.—Calamy.

WILLIAM I. king of England, commonly called the Conqueror, was the natural son of Robert I. duke of Normandy, and of Arlotta the daughter of a furrier at Falaise, where he was born in 1024. He reigned quietly in Normandy till the death of Edward the Confessor, when pretending that the crown had been bequeathed to him by that monarch, he fitted out a large expedition, and landed on the coast of Sussex. As soon as the troops were disembarked he burnt the vessels, exclaiming, see your country. Harold marched against him, but was defeated and slain at Hastings; after which William marched to London, and was crowned at Westminster on Christmas day, in 1066. He reigned with great tyranny, in consequence of which several insurrections took place, but they were soon quelled, and William divided the lands of most of the nobility and gentry among his followers. He also introduced the Norman language, and ordered that all law pleadings and statutes should be in that tongue. To prevent nightly meetings and conspiracies he instituted the curfew, or "cover-fire bell," at the sound of which every night at eight o'clock all fires and candles were to be put out. He caused a survey to be made of all the lands in the kingdom, the account or register of which was called the Doomsday book. In 1078 he finished the tower of London. In 1087 he invaded France, and destroyed the city of Mantes. He was about to march to Paris, but died in consequence of a fall from his horse, and was buried the same year at Rouen.—Rapin.

WILLIAM II. or Rufus, so called from his red hair, was the son of the conqueror, and crowned on the news of his father's death, Sept. 27, 1087. He made a conquest of part of Wales, and obtained the duchy of Normandy from his brother Robert, in 1095. He was a great persecutor of the clergy, and banished Lanfranc, archbishop of Canterbury, from the kingdom. William was accidentally slain by an arrow, shot by Walter Tyrrel, as he was hunting in the New Forest, Hampshire, in 1100, aged 44.—Ibid.

WILLIAM III. of Nassau, prince of Orange, and king of England, was born at the Hague in 1650. He was the son of William prince of Orange, and of Henrietta Maria, daughter of Charles I. He married the princess Mary, daughter of James I. duke of York; and succeeded to the stadtholdership in 1672. He was also nominated general of the troops of Holland against Louis XIV. and made a vigorous resistance to the French armies under Luxembourg, whom he defeated in 1674, but was repulsed in his turn by the prince de Condé. In 1688 the arbitrary measures of James II. induced many disaffected nobles and others to invite over the prince of Orange. He gladly embraced the occasion, and landed without opposition in Torbay, Nov. 5, the same year. James, finding himself unsupported, withdrew to France, and William took possession of his throne in conjunction with his wife, the daughter of that unfortunate monarch. The coronation took place April 11, 1689. The year following William went to Ireland, where he defeated James at the battle of the Boyne. In 1691 he headed the confederated army in the Netherlands, took Namur in 1695, and in 1697 he was acknowledged king of England by the treaty of Ryswick. On the death of Mary in 1693 the parliament confirmed to him the royal title. He fell from his horse and broke his collar-bone, Feb. 26, 1702, and died March 8th following.—Rep. N. Smol. let.

WILLIAMS (John), a celebrated prelate, was born at Aber-Conway in Caernarvonshire, in 1582. He received his education first at Ruthin school, in Denbighshire, and afterwards at St. John's college, Cambridge, where he proceeded to his degrees in arts. In 1612 he became chaplain to the lord chancellor Egerton, by which means he obtained some considerable preferment, and was admitted into his lordship's entire confidence. The chancellor also at his death gave him his manuscript collections. He afterwards became chaplain to the king, and in 1620 dean of Westminster. The year following he was sworn of the privy council, and was made keeper of the great seal, and bishop of Lincoln. He attended James I. on his death-bed, and preached his funeral sermon, in which he compared him to Solomon. Soon after the accession of Charles I. the great seal was taken from him, and he was afterwards prosecuted in the star-chamber on a charge of betraying the king's secrets, fined 10,000*l.* and imprisoned in the Tower, where he remained above three years. In 1640 he was released by order of parliament, and the year following was made archbishop of York. He was again sent to the Tower with some of his brethren, by the lords, for framing a protest against all proceedings in parliament while they were hindered from attending in their places by the mob. When he was released the archbishop went to York, but the wars breaking out he retired to Wales, where he died in 1650.—Life by Hacket, and Lives of the Chancellors.

WILLIAMS (sir Charles Hanbury), a poet and statesman, was the son of John Hanbury, a director of the South Sea company. He represented the county of Monmouth in three successive parliaments, and in 1744 was installed knight of the bath. Two years after he was sent ambassador to Prussia, and afterwards in the same capacity to Russia, from whence he returned in 1759, and died the same year. His poems, which are remarkably lively, are in Dodsley's and other collections.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

WILLIAMS (Daniel), a presbyterian minister, was born at Wrexham in Denbighshire, in 1644. He officiated some time in Dublin, from whence he came to London in 1687, and became pastor of a congregation. In 1709 he obtained his doctor's degree from Glasgow and Dublin, and died in 1716. He founded the library in Redcross-street for dissenting ministers. Five volumes of his Sermons are in print.—Calamy.

WILLIAMS (John), a pious bishop, was born in Northamptonshire, and educated at Magdalen-hall, Oxford. After the restoration he obtained the rectory of St. Mildred in the Poultry, and a canonry in St. Paul's cathedral. In 1689 he became chaplain to William and Mary, who gave him a prebend of Canterbury, and in 1696 promoted him to the bishopric of Chichester. He died in 1709. This bishop published several tracts against the romanists and dissenters, and a volume of sermons, preached at Boyle's lecture.—Wood.

WILLIAMS (Anna), an ingenious lady, was born in 1706 in South Wales: her father was a surgeon, but having a turn for mathematics he imagined that he had discovered the longitude. Filled with this idea he came to London with his daughter in 1730, but the expenses of the metropolis soon swallowed up his scanty means, and he died in the Charter-house. The daughter lost her sight by a cataact, after which she was taken under the protection of Dr. Johnson. Mr. Garrick gave her the profits of a play, which produced 200*l.* and in 1766 she published by subscription a volume of miscellanies in prose and verse. She also translated from the French "the Life of Julian." Miss Williams died in 1783.

WILLIS (Thomas), a physician, was born in 1621 at Great Bedwin, in Wiltshire, and educated at Christ church, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. In 1642 he took up arms in the service of the king, but after the surrender of the garrison he applied assiduously to the study of physic. In 1669 he was appointed Sedley's professor of natural philosophy, and the same year took his doctor's degree. He was one of the first members of the royal society, and was made fellow of the college of physicians. He was the most celebrated physician in his time, and died in Westminster in 1675. His medical and philosophical works have been printed in 2 vols. folio.—Wood.

WILLIS (Browne), son of the above, was born at Blandford, in Dorsetshire, in 1682. He was educated at Westminster-school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of doctor of laws. He was one of the revivers of the society of antiquaries, and during his long life visited all the cathedrals in England and Wales except Carlisle. He was at one time member of parliament for Buckingham, and died in 1760. He gave his cabinet of coins and manuscripts to the university of Oxford. Dr. Willis published a Survey of the Cathedrals, in 2 vols. 4to.; also an Account of the Mitred Abbeyes, 2 volumes 8vo.—Ames of Bouyer.

WILLUGHBY (Francis), an eminent naturalist, was born in Warwickshire in 1635, and educated at Cambridge, where he formed a close friendship with Mr. Ray, whom he accompanied in several excursions over England and Scotland, also through France, Holland, Germany, Italy, and Switzerland. He died in 1672, and left that gentleman trustee to his children. Mr. Ray published from the papers of his friend his Ornithology in Latin, 1676, folio; and in 1678 an English translation of it, with figures engraved at the expense of Mrs. Willughby; also the History of Fishes, in folio, 1686.—Gen. Dict. Poultry.

WILSON (Arthur), an historian, was born in 1596 in Norfolk, and educated at Trinity-college, Oxford, after which he became servant to Robert, earl of Essex. He died in 1652. He wrote the History of the Reign of James I., folio, in a very pedantic style, and excessively partial.—Wood.

WILSON (Thomas), an eminently pious prelate, was born at Burton, in Cheshire, in 1663, and educated at Trinity college, Dublin. He was ordained at Kildare in 1686, and in 1692 became tutor to a son of the earl of Derby. At the same time he was offered the valuable living of Baddesworth, in Yorkshire, which he declined as being inconsistent with his resolves against non-residence. In 1697 he was, in a manner, compelled to accept the bishopric of Man, which had lain vacant four years. He was at the same time created doctor of laws by archbishop Tenison. The annual income of the see did not exceed 300*l.* a year, and yet out of that small stipend his charities were numerous. In 1703 he obtained an act of settlement for the island, and framed ecclesiastical constitutions, which were approved of by the lay proprietors and passed into a law. In 1707 he was made D.D. by the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. In 1722 the governor of the island sent the good bishop and his two vicars general to prison for suspending the archdeacon, who had acted in violation of the ecclesiastical constitutions. After a confinement of two months they were released, and the proceedings were condemned by the king and council; but the bishop refused to prosecute his enemies. He also declined accepting an English bishopric which was offered him, being so attached to his diocese that no temptation could remove him. This apostolical prelate died in 1755, in the 93d year of his age, and the 58th of his consecration. His publications were all of a practical nature, and admirably adapted to inform the ignorant and to edify the virtuous. Since his death have been published his Sermons in 4 vols. 8vo., and his Notes on the Bible in 3 vols. 4to.—Life prefixed to his works. 2 vols. folio.

WILSON (Thomas), son of the preceding, was born in 1703, and educated at Christ church, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of D.D. in 1739. He obtained the rectory of St. Stephen Walbrook, and a prebend of Westminster. He was also sub-almoner to the king. Dr. Wilson rendered himself ridiculous by engaging in party politics, and by his enthusiastic attachment to Catharine Macaulay, whose statue in the character of Liberty he set up in Walbrook church, but on quarrelling with the lady he removed this monument of his folly. He died at Bath in 1784. Dr. Wilson published his father's works.—Europ. Mag.

WILSON (Florence), a Scotch writer, was born in the county of Moray in 1500, and educated at King's college, Aberdeen. He afterwards went to Basil, and lastly to Paris, where he taught philosophy in the college of Navarre. He died in his native country in 1557. He wrote a treatise "De Tranquillitate Animæ."—Mackenzie's Hist. of Scotch Writers.

WILSON (John), was a native of Kendal, in Westmoreland, where his employment was that of knitting stockings. However, his fame for botanical knowledge was so great that he gave lessons alternately at that place and at Newcastle, and was attended by scholars from Scotland. In 1744 he published a Synopsis of British Plants in Mr. Ray's method, 8vo. He died about 1750.—Pulteney's Sketches.

WILSON (Richard), an eminent painter, was born at Pinages, in Montgomeryshire, in 1714. He received an excellent education under his father, who was rector of that parish, and discovering a strong inclination to painting he was placed under an obscure artist in London, and afterwards followed portrait-painting in London with success. In 1749 he went to Italy, where he met with Mr. Lock, an English gentleman, who employed him in taking sketches and painting landscapes. At Rome he cultivated the friendship of Vernet, the celebrated French painter, who advised him to adhere to landscape-painting. In 1755 he returned to England, where he acquired the highest reputation in his line. On the establishment of the royal academy he became a member, and in 1779 librarian. He died in 1782. Wilson has been appropriately called the English Claude.—Europ. Mag. Pilkington.

WINCHELSEA (Anne, countess of), was the daughter of sir William Kingsmill, in Hampshire, and became maid of honour to the duchess of York, second wife of James II. till her marriage with Heneage, son of the earl of Winchelsea. Her principal production was a Poem upon the Spleen. A collection of her works was printed in 1713. She died in 1720.—Biog. Feminæ.

WINCHESTER (Thomas), an eminent divine, was born at Farringdon, in Berkshire, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of D.D. in 1749. He was also elected to a fellowship, which he resigned in 1761 on obtaining the rectory of Appleton, in Berkshire, where he died in 1780. He wrote a valuable tract on the Seventeenth Article of the Church of England, reprinted in 1803. He was also the author of some pieces against the Confessional.—Life by Churton, prefixed to his tract above mentioned.

WINKELMAN (John), a celebrated antiquary, was born at Stendal, in the Marche of Brandenburg, in 1718, of protestant parents. He was bred a shoemaker, which occupation he quitted for the study of literature at Sechausen, where he became a professor of the belles-lettres. In 1754 he went to Dresden, and embraced the Roman catholic religion. The year following he visited Rome, where he was appointed in 1762 president of antiquities. He was considered as the first connoisseur of his time, and his friendship was courted by all persons who travelled to Rome to observe the antiquities and curiosities of that city and neighbourhood. He was assassinated at Trieste, by a villain to whom he was in the act of shewing some of his valuable medals, in 1768. The murderer was soon taken and executed. Winckelman wrote, the History of Arts among the Ancients; Elucidation of difficult Points of Mythology; Allegory for Artists; Remarks upon ancient Architecture. After his death were published his Familiar Letters.—Life of Winckelman by Heyne.

WING (Vincent), an astrological writer. He was author of "the Celestial Harmony of the Visible World" 1657, folio; an Ephemeris for Thirty Years; Computatio Catholica; and Astronomia Britannica. This last is a work of merit. He died in 1669. His name still continues to be affixed to a popular sheet almanack.—Life by Gadhury.

WINGATE (Edmund), a mathematical writer, was born in Bedfordshire in 1593, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Gray's Inn. He was appointed English teacher to the queen of Charles the first; but he took the covenant, and was elected into the parliament called by Cromwell. He died in 1656. He published the Use of the Rule of Proportion, commonly called Gunter's Scale; Natural and Artificial Arithmetic, 8vo. This book has gone through many editions. Tables of Logarithms; Ludus Mathematicus; the Exact Surveyor; and other works.—Wood, A. G. Gen. Dict.

WINSCHOM (John), commonly called Jack of Newberry, who lived in the reign of Henry VIII. and was the greatest clothier in England. He kept one hundred looms at work, and his house was, till lately, shewn as a curiosity. He led a troop of his workmen to the battle of Flodden-field.—Gen. Dict.

WINSLOW (James Benignus), a celebrated anatomist of Denmark, was a nephew of Steno, and born in 1669. He studied under Du Verney at Paris, where he turned Roman catholic and became physician, demonstrator in the king's garden, and member of the academy of sciences. He died in 1760. Winslow was the author of a Course of Anatomy, 4to.; Dissertation on the Uncertainty of the Signs of Death, 2 vols. 12mo.; on Diseases of the Bones; and other works of value.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

WINSTANLEY (William), a biographical writer, was originally a barber. He wrote, "the Lives of the Poets;" "Select Lives of England's Worthies;" "Historical Rarities;" and some other books. His style is miserable, but we are obliged to him for some notices of persons and things which would have been otherwise lost. He died about 1690.—Granger.

WINSTON (Thomas), an English physician, was born in 1575, and educated at Clare hall, Cambridge. In 1602 he went abroad, and took his doctor's degree at Padua. On his return he settled in London, and in 1615 was chosen professor of physic at Gresham college, where he died in 1655. His anatomical lectures were printed in 1650.—Hutchinson's Med. Biog.

WINTOWN, or WYNTOWN (Andrew), a monk and historian in Scotland, who died about 1400. He wrote a Chronicle of his Country in rhyme, in which there is a strange mixture of truth and fable.

WINTRINGHAM (sir Clifton), an eminent physician, was born at York in 1710. He received a liberal education, and after taking his degrees became physician to the duke of Cumberland in 1749. He afterwards obtained the title of baronet, and died in London in 1791. He published an improved edition of Mead's Medical Precepts, 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

WINWOOD (sir Ralph), an eminent statesman, was born in 1565 at Aynhoe, in Northamptonshire, and elected probationer fellow of Magdalen college, Oxford, in 1582. He served the office of proctor in 1589 and soon after went on his travels. In 1607 he received the honour of knighthood, and was sent ambassador to the states of Holland. In 1614 he was made secretary of state and privy counsellor. He died in 1617. His Memoirs of State Affairs were published after his death, in 1 vol. folio.—Wood, A. G. Gen. Dict.

WISLEY (William), an heraldic writer, who was rouge-croix poursuivant of arms, and died in 1618. He published the True Use of Armory shewed by History and plainly proved by Example, 4to.—Ibid.

WISCHART (William), a Scotch divine, was born at Dalkeith in 1657. At the revolution he was made one of the ministers of Leith, and in 1716 chosen principal of the university of Edinburgh, and a minister of that city. He is the author of a Body of Divinity in 1 vol. folio. He died in 1727.

WISCHEART (George), a Scotch prelate, was born in 1609, and educated at Edinburgh. He entered into episcopal orders, and became chaplain to the great marquis of Montrose, whom he accompanied in his last expedition, was taken prisoner and narrowly escaped being put to death. At the restoration he was made bishop of Edinburgh, where he died in 1669. He wrote a very curious account of the wars in Scotland, and the History of the Marquis of Montrose, 1 vol. 8vo.—Gen. Dict.

WISSE (Francis), a learned divine and antiquary, who was fellow of Trinity college, Oxford, and assistant to Dr. Hudson in the Bodleian library. He obtained the rectory of Rotherfield Grays in Oxfordshire; was appointed keeper of the archives of the university, and Radcliffe librarian. He died in 1677. He published Annales Ælfridi Magni, 4to; Inquiries concerning the first Inhabitants of Europe, 4to.; and Observations on the Fabulous Times, 4to.

WISSING (William), a portrait-painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1656. He was the disciple of Dodraens, and on coming to England was employed by Sir Peter Lely, whose manner he imitated. He painted portraits of most of the royal family, and was a powerful rival of Kneller. He died in 1687.—Virtue.

WITHERS (George), an English poet, was born in 1588. He was imprisoned for his first book entitled, "Abuses Whipt and Stript;" but continued to write satires and eclogues in prison. The latter possess merit. In the civil wars he was an officer in the parliament army, was taken by the royalists and condemned to be hanged, but was saved by the intercession of Sir John Denham. He died in 1667.—Granger.

WITSIUS (Herman), a learned calvinistic divine, was born in 1626 at Enckhuysen, in Holland. He became successively professor of divinity at Franeker, Utrecht, and Leyden. He died in 1708. His principal works are, 1. Historia Hierosolymitana; 2. Egyptiaca et Decaphyllon, cum Diatriba de Legionis Fulminatrice Christianorum; 3. De Economie Fædorum, or the Economy of the Covenants. This has been translated into English, 3 vols. 8vo. 4. Miscellaneorum Sacrorum; 5. Maletemata Leydensia, &c.

WITT (John de), son of Jacob de Witt, burgomaster of Dort, was born in 1625 of a noble family. After completing his studies at home he went into other countries, and on his return passed through several offices till he became grand pensionary of Holland. He managed public affairs with great wisdom, and placed the marine in an excellent state. He opposed the elevation of William III. to the stadtholderate, and this conduct proved the source of all his misfortunes. An attempt was made to assassinate him, but it failed. His brother, Cornelius de Witt, was apprehended on a charge of conspiring the death of the prince of Orange, and sent to prison; but though the accusation was unsupported by proofs he was sentenced to be banished. John was about to accompany him, but as they were leaving the Hague the irritated populace fell upon them, and tore them in pieces in the most savage manner, in 1672. Thus fell these virtuous patriots, one of whom had served his country with fidelity as a statesman nineteen years, and the other as a soldier. The Negotiations and Memoirs of John de Witt have been printed in 6 vols.

12mo.—Life of John de Witt, Utrecht, 1709.

WITT (Emanuel de), a Dutch painter, was born at Alcmæer in 1607, and died in 1692. He excelled in architectural subjects.—Houbraken.

WOFFINGTON (Margaret), a celebrated actress, was born at Dublin in 1718. Her first appearance in London was at Covent-garden theatre in 1738 in the character of Sir Harry Wildair, in which she acquired great popularity. She died in 1760.

WOIDE (Dr.) a learned divine, was a native of Poland, but resided in England twenty-five years, was minister of the German chapel in the Savoy, and of the Dutch chapel at St. James's; and also one of the assistant librarians of the British museum. He was deeply skilled in the Eastern languages, particularly the Coptic. He edited several important works, particularly the Alexandrian MS. of the New Testament in the British museum and the Egyptian grammar of Mr. Scholtz. At the time of his death, which happened in 1790, he was engaged on an Egyptian lexicon.—Eur. Mag. Vol. xvii.

WOLFE (James), a celebrated commander, was the son of general Edward Wolfe, and born at Westerham, in Kent, in 1726. He entered young into the army, and possessing great military talents, improved by assiduity and experience, soon distinguished himself as a brave and skilful officer. He was present at the battle of Lafeldt, and in every subsequent engagement in Germany, in the war which terminated at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. When lieutenant colonel of Kingsey's regiment, he brought it to such exact discipline, that, as long as the six battalions on the plain of Minden are recorded in history, the stand of that regiment will be remembered to his honour. He was greatly instrumental to the taking of Lützenburg, and was scarcely returned from thence when he was appointed to the chief command of the important expedition against Quebec in 1759. This undertaking afforded ample scope for the exercise of his great military talents. He was mortally wounded in the moment of victory, on the news of which he lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, "I thank God; I die contented." There is a fine monument to his memory in Westminster abbey; and Woollett engraved a beautiful picture of his death, from a painting by West.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

WOLFF (John Christian), or Wolffus, was born at Breslaw, in 1679. He studied first at Jena, and afterwards at Leipzig, where he published a Thesis on the manner of Studying Philosophy. In 1707 he became professor of mathematics at Halle, and in 1721 was appointed counsellor to the court of the king of Prussia. But some of his metaphysical opinions giving offence to the faculty of theology, he was banished from Halle, on which he removed to Marburg, where he obtained a professorship with the title of aulic counsellor to the prince of Hesse. He was also honoured with marks of distinction by the king of Sweden, and was elected a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, and of that of Peterburg. In 1741 he was recalled by Frederic III. king of Prussia, who appointed him privy counsellor, vice-chancellor, and professor of the law of nature and nations. He was afterwards made chancellor of the university, and the elector of Bavaria created him a baron. He died at Halle in 1754. His principal works are, a Course of Mathematics, 2 vols. 4to.; Philosophia Rationalis, five Logica, 4to.; a System of Metaphysics, 4to.; Jus Naturæ, 8 vols. 4to.; Jus Gentium, 4to.; Horæ Subseque Magdeburgenses; Dictionary of the Mathematics, 8vo.; Specimen Physicæ ad Theologiam Naturalem Applicatæ, 8vo. His Latin style is barbarous, but his ideas are profound and often obscure.—Novæ. Dict. Hist.

WOLLASTON (William), an ingenious divine, was born in Staffordshire in 1659, and educated at Sidney-Sussex college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. He became assistant and afterwards master of Birmingham school; but becoming possessed of a good fortune, by the death of a relation, he retired to London, and led a studious life. He died in 1724. His Religion of Nature Delineated, 4to. and 8vo. is an attempt to prove the truth of religion on mathematical principles. It is a curious work, but very abstruse.—Gen. Dict.

WOLLEBIUS (John), a native of Basil, who flourished in the 17th century. He wrote a little tract, entitled, "Compendium Theologicæ," translated into English by Alexander Ross. The author died in 1629.—Ibid.

WOOLLETT (William), an eminent engraver, was born at Maidstone in Kent, in 1735. He was instructed in engraving by Timney, and became engraver to his majesty. He died in 1783. His engravings fetch a high price, particularly the early impressions of the death of general Wolfe.—Strutt.

WOLSEY (Thomas), a celebrated cardinal, was the son of a butcher at Ipswich in Suffolk, and born there in 1471. He received his education at Magdalen college, Oxford, and became tutor to the sons of Grey, marquis of Dorset, who gave him the rectory of Lymington in Hampshire. Making his way at court he gained the favour of Henry VII. who sent him on an embassy to the emperor, and on his return made him dean of Lincoln. Henry VIII. gave him the living of Torrington in Devon, and afterwards appointed him register of the garter and canon of Windsor. He next obtained the deanry of York, and attending the king to Tournay in France was made bishop of that city. In 1514 he was advanced to the see of Lincoln, and the year following to the archbishopric of York. He was at this time in the zenith of power, and had a complete ascendancy over the mind of the king, who made him lord chancellor, and obtained for him the cardinalship. He was also nominated the pope's legate. His influence and income were prodigious, and he lived in a princely style; but having given offence to the king by not promoting his divorce he fell into disgrace, and his property was confiscated. In 1530 he was seized at York, but died on his way to London, saying "Had I served my God as faithfully as I have the king, he would not have forsaken me in my old age." He was a man of unbounded ambition, and of licentious manners; but of considerable learning and great policy. He founded Christ church college, Oxford, and built Hampton court palace.—Life by Fidler.

WOLTERS (Henrietta), a Dutch lady, was born at Amsterdam in 1692. She painted portraits in miniature with great elegance. She died in 1741.—Pilkington.

WOMACK (Laurence), a learned bishop, was educated at Cambridge, where he took his doctor's degree. In 1660 he was installed archdeacon of Suffolk, and in 1688 nominated bishop of St. David's. He died in 1685. This bishop wrote, 1. The Examination of Tilenus before the Triers, 12mo. This is a smart book against the Puritans. 2. The Calvinistic Cabinet unclosed, 12mo. 3. The Result of false Principles, or Error Convinced by its own Evidence, 4to.; and some other books, chiefly in answer to the Calvinists.—Wood.

WOOD (Anthony), an English antiquary and biographer, was born at Oxford in 1632. He proceeded to his degree of M. A. and in 1674 published the history of that University. This work was afterwards printed in Latin. He published in 1691 his Athenæ Oxonienses, 2 vols. folio. It is a valuable collection of the lives of writers and bishops educated at Oxford. A second edition, considerably improved by bishop Tanner, appeared in 1721. Bishop Burnet having attacked this work, it was vindicated by the author in an octavo volume. He died in 1695.—Gen. Dict.

WOOD (Robert), a native of Ireland, who travelled through Greece with Messrs Boswerie and Dawkins. He afterwards became under secretary of state, and died in 1771. Mr. Wood is known by a very classical and ingenious Essay on the Original Genius of Homer.

WOODALL (John), a surgeon in the reigns of queen Elizabeth and James I. born about 1560. He was author of "The Surgeon's Mate," and "Viaticum," books of instruction to young surgeons. He died in 1638.

WOODCOCK (Robert), was born in 1632. He quitted a place he held under government, that he might not be interrupted in his favourite pursuits of music and painting. He played on the hautboy, and composed some pieces which were published. As a painter he excelled in sea-pieces. He died in 1728.—Pilkington.

WOODFORD (Samuel), was born in London in 1636, and educated at Wadham college, Oxford, after which he entered of the Inner Temple, but at the restoration he became a member of the royal society, and was ordained. He obtained the living of Hartley Mauduit, in Hampshire, and a prebend in the cathedral of Chichester. In 1677 the archbishop of Canterbury conferred on him the degree of D.D. and in 1680 he was preferred to a prebend of Winchester. He died in 1680. His works are, a Paraphrase on the Psalms, 8vo.; another on the Canticles; to which are added several Poems of little merit.—Wood.

WOODHEAD (Abraham), a Roman catholic writer, was born at Maltham in Yorkshire, and educated at University college, Oxford, of which he became fellow, and entered into orders. He was deprived of his fellowship in the rebellion, but was restored at the restoration. Having however embraced the Roman catholic religion he settled at Hoxton, upon a small pension allowed by the college, and died there in 1678. He wrote the Guide in Controversies, and several other books in favour of popery, but all under disguised names.—Wood.

WOODVILLE (Elizabeth), widow of sir John Grey, who was slain in the battle of Barnard's Heath. After his death she applied to Edward IV. for the restoration of his estate, when that monarch fell in love with, and married her. The princess Elizabeth was the fruit of this marriage, who married Henry VII. and thus united the houses of York and Lancaster.—Rabin.

WOODWARD (John), a physician, was born in Derbyshire in 1665. He was bred up by Dr. Peter Berwick, and in 1692 became professor of physic at Gresham college. In 1695 archbishop Tenison conferred on him the degree of doctor of physic. The year following he published an Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth, 8vo. This volume was intended to be the precursor of a larger work which never appeared. It contains many curious and some fanciful things. Dr. Woodward died in 1728.

WOODWARD (Henry), a celebrated comedian, was born in London in 1717. He was apprenticed to Mr. Rich, the manager and celebrated harlequin; and he became so excellent in low comedy as to be the favourite of the town. Having realized by his profession 6000*l.* he embarked it in a theatre at Dublin, and lost the whole. As he was jumping on a table in the character of Icarus, he met with a fall which occasioned his death in 1777. Woodward wrote a comedy called "The Man's the Master;" and "Marplot in Lisbon," a farce.—Biog. Dram.

WOOLSTON (Thomas), a deistical writer, was born at Northampton in 1669, and educated at Sidney college, Cambridge, where he proceeded to his degree of B. D. In 1705 he published "The Old Apology for the Truth of the Christian Religion against the Jews and Gentiles revived," which was little noticed; but his "Six Discourses on the Miracles of Christ," were written with so much freedom as to occasion several answers and a prosecution against the author, who was sentenced to be imprisoned a year and to pay a fine of 100*l.* He died in the rules of the king's bench in 1733.—Gen. Dict.

WOOTON (John), a painter of landscapes, horses, and dogs, who died in 1765. His price for a picture was regularly forty guineas.—Pilkington.

WORLIDGE (Thomas), a portrait-painter and engraver. His etchings after Rembrandt are peculiarly excellent. He published a book of gems from the antique, and died in 1766.—Walpole.

WORMIUS (Olaus), a Danish physician, was born in Jutland, in 1588. After travelling into different countries he became professor of medicine at Copenhagen, in 1624, and was appointed physician to the king. He died rector of the University in 1654. His works are, 1. Antiquitates Danicæ, Litteraturæ Runicæ, Fasti Danici, &c. folio; 2. Danica Litteratura Antiquissima Vulgò Gothica Dicta, folio; 3. Monumentorum Danicorum; 4. Duplex Series Antiqua Regum Danicæ, &c.; 5. Lexicon Runicum, &c. There was another of this name who was professor of eloquence, history, and physic, at Copenhagen, where he died in 1708. He wrote, 1. De Glossopetris; 2. Viribus Medicamentorum Specificis; and other works.—Moreri.

WORDSALE (James), a painter and dramatic writer. He was pupil to sir Godfrey Kneller, whose niece he married. He was author of several dramatic pieces, in one of which, "The Assembly," he performed the character of Lady Scandal. He died in 1767.—Biog. Dram.

WORTHINGTON (John), a pious divine, was a native of Wales, and educated at Emmanuel college, Cambridge, and afterwards became master of Jesus college in that university. He was also rector of St. Bennet Fink, London, till the fire of London, when he obtained the living of Ingoldby, in the county of Lincoln, and a prebend in the cathedral of that see. He died in 1671. He wrote, 1. A Form of Sound Words, or a Scripture Catechism, 8vo.; 2. The Great Duty of Self-reignation, 8vo.; 3. The Doctrine of the Resurrection considered, 8vo. &c.—Wood.

WORTHINGTON (William), a learned divine, was born in Merionethshire in 1703, and educated at Jesus college, Oxford, where he took his doctor's degree. Archbishop Drummond gave him a prebend in York cathedral. He died in 1778. Dr. Worthington published Sermons at Boyle's Lecture, 2 vols.; an Essay on Redemption; and the Scripture Theory of the Earth, 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

WOTTON (Edward), a learned physician, born at Oxford in 1492. He was very eminent in his profession, and became member of the college of physicians, and physician to Henry VIII. He died in 1555.

WOTTON (Sir Henry), an eminent writer and statesman, was born at Bocton-hall in Kent in 1568. He received his education at Winchester school, and at New-college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Queen's college, where he took his degree of M. A. and read a lecture on optics. After leaving the university, he went abroad, and became so intimate with the duke of Tuscany, that he sent him with letters to James VI. of Scotland, under the name of Octavio Baldi. When that monarch came to the English throne, he conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and sent him ambassador to the republic of Venice, and other states. In 1623 he was made provost of Eton, being all the reward he received for the great services he had performed. He died in 1639, and was buried in the chapel of Eton college. He wrote the Elements of Architecture; Parallel between the Earl of Essex and the Duke of Buckingham; Characters of some of the Kings of England; Essay on Education; and Poems printed in the Reliquia Wottoniana, 8vo.—Life by Walton.

WOTTON (William), a learned divine, was born at Wrentham in Suffolk, in 1666, of which place his father was rector. At the early age of ten years he was admitted of Catharine-hall, Cambridge. In 1679 he took his first degree, and afterwards obtained a fellowship of St. John's college. On entering into orders he obtained the rectory of Middleton and the sinecure of Llandrillo in Denbighshire. He died in 1726. Dr. Wotton published, 1. Reflections on Antient and Modern Learning, which book was ridiculed by Swift in his Battle of Books; 2. An Abridgement of the Roman History; 3. Memoirs of the Cathedrals of St. David's and Landaff; 4. Letter to a Student of Divinity.—Gen. Diß.

WOUTERS (Francis), a Dutch painter, who was a disciple of Rubens, and came to England with the imperial ambassador in 1637. He chiefly practised in landscape, with small naked figures as Cupids. He died in 1659.—Vertue.

WOUVERMANS (Philip), a landscape-painter, was born at Haerlem in 1620. He enriched his pictures with huntings, encampments, or other subjects where horses could be introduced. He died in 1668. His brothers, Peter and John, were both distinguished artists.—Houbraken.

WRANGL (Charles (Gustavus), a marshal and constable of Sweden, who distinguished himself as a naval and military commander. He defeated the Danish fleet in 1644, and the imperial army near Augsburg in 1648, and the Dutch fleet at the passage of the Sund in 1658. He died in 1676.—Mær.

WREN (Matthew), a learned bishop, was born in London, and educated at Pembroke-hall, Cambridge, where he took his doctor's degree. He became master of Peter-house, and vice chancellor of the university; and in 1628 dean of Windsor; afterwards bishop of Hereford, and in 1633 bishop of Norwich, from whence in ten years he was translated to Ely. At the beginning of the rebellion he was committed to the Tower, where he remained till the restoration without being brought to trial. He died in 1667. He wrote a book against the Socinians, and some of his letters have been printed in different collections. He was uncle to sir Christopher.—Wad.

WREN (sir Christopher), a celebrated architect, and nephew of the above, was born at East Knoyle in Wiltshire in 1632. At the age of fourteen he was sent to Wadham college, Oxford, and in 1653 was elected fellow of All-souls. In 1657 he was chosen professor of astronomy at Gresham college, but removed to Oxford in 1660 on being appointed Savilian professor of astronomy. The same year he was created doctor of the civil law. In 1663 he became a fellow of the royal society, to which he communicated many valuable papers and observations. In 1665 he was nominated architect for rebuilding St. Paul's cathedral; and immediately after the fire of London, he drew the plan of a new city, which he presented to the king, but it was not adopted. This plan was engraved in 1724. In 1668 he succeeded to the office of surveyor general of his majesty's works. The variety of business in which he was now engaged, induced him to resign his professorship in 1673, and the year following he received the honour of knighthood. In 1680 he was chosen president of the royal society. He sat twice in parliament; first for Plympton in Devonshire, and afterwards for Melcombe Regis in Dorsetshire. He died in 1723, and was buried in St. Paul's cathedral, which is the greatest effort of his genius. His other works are, the theatre at Oxford; Bow church; St. Stephen, Walbrook; St. Magnus, London-bridge; and St. Dunstan's in the East.—Biog. Brn.

WRIGHT (Edward), an English mathematician, was educated at Cambridge, and afterwards accompanied the earl of Cumberland in his expedition to the Azores in 1598. In 1599 he published his excellent book, called the Errors of Navigation corrected, in which he lays down the true method of making a sea chart, which goes by the name of Mercator. He also constructed a Table of Meridional Parts and Tables of the Sun's Declination. His other works are, a Treatise tise on the Sphere, another on Dialling, and a book of Navigation, called the Haven-finding Art. He died about 1620.—Martin's Biog. Phil.

WRIGHT (Joseph), an excellent painter, was born at Derby in 1734. He studied under Hudson, and in 1773 went to Italy, where he resided two years, and improved himself by studying the works of the greatest masters. On his return to England he settled in his native town, where he died in 1797. His landscapes are beautiful, and many of his historical pictures are painted in a fine taste.—Monthly Mag.

WURMSER (Dagobert Sigismund, count), field-marshal in the Austrian service, was born in Alsace, and in his youth served in the French army, from whence he passed into that of the emperor, and rose to the highest military rank. In 1793 he was sent against the French, whom he defeated, and compelled to retreat in disorder into Upper Alsace. He then took Haguenau and some other strong places: but being opposed by superior numbers, he was obliged to abandon all that he had taken, and was defeated at Teischweiler. The year following he commanded the army of the Upper Rhine, and made himself master of Mannheim. In 1796 he commanded in Italy, where he defeated the French in two actions, but was at last obliged to throw himself into Mantua, which he defended till the extremity of famine obliged him to capitulate 2d Nov. 1797. He died in Hungary the same year at the age of 80.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

WYATT (Sir Thomas), an accomplished gentleman, was born in Kent of an ancient family, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, from whence he removed to Oxford. Henry VII. conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and employed him in several embassies. He died suddenly in 1541. He wrote some elegant songs and sonnets, printed with those of his friend the earl of Surrey. He also translated David's psalms into English verse.—Wood.

WYCHERLY (William), an English poet and dramatic writer, was born in Shropshire in 1640. He spent some years in France, where he embraced the Catholic religion, which he afterwards renounced, but again abjured the protestant faith, and entered the Romish communion. In the reign of Charles II. he was distinguished by his wit and personal accomplishments, and was taken into the particular friendship of the duchess of Cleveland. He afterwards married the countess of Drogheda, whose fortune he squandered in extravagance, and was thrown into prison for debt, from whence he was released by James II. who gave him a pension. In his old age he married a young woman, and died eleven days after the ceremony in 1715. His comedies are, "Love in a Wood;" "The Country Wife;" "The Plain Dealer;" "The Gentleman Dancing Master." A volume of his poems was printed in 1728.—Biog. Dram.

WYCKE (Thomas), a painter, was born at Haerlem in 1616. He spent several years in Italy, where he drew many fine views of sea ports. He died in 1686. His son, John Wycke, was an excellent painter of battles and animals. He lived many years in London, where he assisted Kneller. He died in 1702.—Pilkington. Vertue.

WYKEHAM (William de), an illustrious prelate, was born at Wykeham in Hampshire, in 1324. He owed his greatness to Nicholas Uvedale, lord of the manor of Wykeham, and governor of Winchester; who gave him an education, and made him his secretary. He was afterwards introduced to Edward III. who appointed him surveyor of the royal buildings, and chief justice in eyre. By Wykeham's advice that monarch built the castle of Windsor. In 1359 he was constituted chief warden and surveyor of the royal castles; and in 1363 warden and justiciary of the king's forests on this side Trent; keeper of the privy seal in 1364; two years after secretary to the king; and in 1367 he succeeded Edyngdon in the see of Winchester, and the same year was appointed chancellor, in which office he continued till 1371. He repaired the palaces and houses belonging to his see at a great expense, and was zealous in establishing strict discipline and reforming abuses.—He founded New College, Oxford, and that at Winchester. He died in 1404.—Life by Lowth.

WYNANTS (John), a painter, was born at Haerlem in 1600. His landscapes are scarce and valuable. He died in 1670.—Pilk.

WYNHAM (Sir William), a statesman, was born about 1687. On his return from his travels, he was chosen knight of the shire for the county of Somerset; in 1710 he was appointed secretary at war; and in 1713 chancellor of the exchequer. He was dismissed from his place on the accession of George I. and falling under suspicion at the breaking out of the rebellion in 1715, he was committed to the Tower, but was never brought to trial. He died in 1740.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

WYTMAN (Matthew), a painter, was born at Gorcum in 1650. His subjects were landscapes and conversations. He died in 1689.—Pilkington.

X.

XACCA (Erasmus), a native of Sicily in the 17th century. He wrote a history of the eruption of mount Etna in 1669 in Italian; a Latin poem on Fevers; and a translation of Tasso's Jerusalem into that language.—Tiraboschi.

XANTIPPE. See SOCRATES.

XANTIPPUS, a Lacedemonian general, who was sent to the support of the Carthaginians, and by his good conduct restored their affairs, and defeated the Romans under Regulus. Notwithstanding his services, the Carthaginians ordered the captain of his ship to throw him into the sea.—Mor.

XENOCRATES, a philosopher of Chalcedon. He was the disciple of Plato, and taught at Athens with such reputation that the judges dispensed with his oath when he appeared in court as a witness. He died B. C. 314.—Diog. Laertius.

XENOPHANES, a Greek philosopher, who was contemporary with Socrates. He held that the moon is inhabited. His philosophy was written in verse.—Ibid.

XENOPHON, a celebrated general, philosopher, and historian, was born at Athens, and became the disciple of Socrates, with whom he was a favourite. He entered early on the military course, and accompanied Cyrus in his expedition against Artaxerxes. He immortalized himself by his famous retreat after the battle of Cunaxa, at the head of ten thousand Greeks. After his return he attached himself to Agesilaus king of Lacedemon, and died at Corinth B. C. 360. Xenophon wrote the Cynopædia, or Life of Cyrus the Great, in eight books. It is a performance of great exactness, and in a chaste style. His other works are, 1. History of the Expedition of Cyrus the Younger, and of the celebrated Retreat of the ten thousand. 2. A History of Greece, beginning where Thucydides ends. 3. The Memorable Sayings of Socrates. 4. An Apology for this Philosopher, &c. All his works were printed at Paris in 1628, folio; at Oxford in Greek and Latin, 5 vols. 8vo. 1703. He is not to be confounded with Menophon who wrote the Lives of Abrocomas and Anthia. He lived at Ephesus in the 4th century.—Paffus de Hist. Grec. Stanley.

XERXES, the fifth king of Persia, and second son of Darius Hystaspes. He conquered Egypt, and then turned his arms against Greece with an army of 800,000 men, and 1000 ships. He threw a bridge over the Hellespont, and cut a passage through mount Athos; but at the straits of Thermopylæ he was encountered by Leonidas, who with 300 Spartans made a prodigious slaughter of the Persians. The Athenians shortly after defeated their fleet near Salamis, on which Xerxes was obliged to return to his own country, leaving Mardonius in the command of the remains of his army. Disgusted with the war, he abandoned himself to luxury, and was slain by Artabanus the captain of his guards, B. C. 465. When Xerxes viewed his prodigious army from an eminence, he wept on the reflection that in a few years not one of that vast multitude would be existing.—Plutarch.

XIMENES (Francis), a celebrated Spanish prelate and statesman, was born at Torrelaguna, in Castile, in 1437. He studied at Salamanca, and afterwards at Rome. Cardinal Gonzalez made him his grand vicar, and queen Isabella made him her confessor. In 1405 he was preferred to the archbishopric of Toledo, where he reformed many abuses, and instituted many excellent charities. Pope Julius II. made him a cardinal in 1507, and at the same time he was appointed minister of state, in which he conducted himself with great wisdom and integrity. On the death of Ferdinand he became regent during the absence of prince Charles in Flanders. The cardinal died in 1517. He founded the university of Alcalá, where he caused to be printed the great Polyglot Bible, called the Complutensian, which is now extremely scarce.—Life by Flebier.

XYLANDER (William), a learned critic, was born at Angsburg in 1592. He became professor of Greek at Heidelberg, where he died in 1576. He gave an edition of Strabo in Greek and Latin; and of Dion Cassius and Marcus Aurelius.—Melch. Adam.

XYPHILIN (John) patriarch of Constantinople, where he died in 1075. He is commonly called John of Trebisonde, from the place of his birth. We have by him an abridgment of the History of Dion Cassius, 1392, folio.—Moreri.

Y.

YALDEN (Thomas), a poet, was born at Exeter in 1671, and educated at Oxford, after which he entered into orders, and in 1707 took the degree of D. D. He obtained two livings in Hertfordshire, and was very intimate with bishop Atterbury, on which account he was taken up and his papers seized, when that prelate was sent to the Tower. Dr. Yalden, however, was soon discharged. He died in 1736. His poems have been printed in one volume sea—Gibber's Lives of Poets.

YOUNG (Patrick), a learned Scotchman, was educated at St. Andrews, and incorporated M. A. at Oxford in 1606. He was keeper of the king's library at St. James's. He published St. Clement's Epistle to the Romans, Greek and Latin, 1637, and was engaged to print the Septuagint after the Alexandrian MS. given to Charles I. by Cyril Lucar, but did not execute it. He was a profound Grecian, and died in 1639.—Life by T. Smith.

YOUNG (Edward), a divine and poet, was born at Upham, in Hampshire, in 1681. His father, who was an eminent clergyman, died in 1707, and left two volumes of excellent sermons. The son was educated at Winchester school, and All Souls college, Oxford, where he studied the civil law, after which he stood candidate for a borough, but was unsuccessful. He then turned his thoughts to divinity, was ordained, made chaplain to the king, and presented to the living of Welwyn in Hertfordshire, where he died in 1766. Dr. Young married lady Elizabeth Lee, daughter of the earl of Litchfield, and widow of colonel Lee, by whom he had a son who survived him. As a poet he shines in his Night Thoughts, which abound with sublimities, but are often very obscure. His poem on the Last Day is also a performance of great merit. Besides these works, he wrote the Revenge, and the Brothers, tragedies; The Centaur not Fabulous, a moral satire; Estimate of Human Life, a sermon; Conjectures on Original Composition; The Love of Fame the Universal Passion; some papers in the Spectator; and miscellaneous poems.—Life prefixed to his works.

YRIARTE (Don John de), a learned Spaniard, was born in the isle of Teneriffe, and educated at Rouen and Paris. After completing his studies he went to Madrid, where he became librarian to the king, member of the academy, and interpreter to the secretary of state. He died in 1771. He wrote miscellaneous works in Spanish, 8 vols; Catalogue of Greek MSS. in the royal library; and another of Arabic MSS. in the Escorial, 2 vols. folio.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

Z.

ZABARELLA (Francis), a celebrated cardinal, was born at Padua in 1399. He became a famous professor of the canon law in different universities, and was honoured with the cardinalship by pope John XXI. who sent him ambassador to the emperor Sigismund. He assisted at the council of Constance, where he advised the deposing of the pope in hopes of succeeding him. He died there in 1417. He wrote a treatise on schism, and other works.—Morri.

ZABARELLA (James), of the same family, was born at Padua in 1593, and died in 1589. He was well acquainted with the Aristotelian philosophy, and became professor at his native place. He wrote Commentaries on Aristotle; and a treatise de inventione aeterni motoris, &c.—Ibid.

ZACUTUS, or Lusitanus, a Jewish physician of Portugal, who retired to Amsterdam when Philip IV. issued an edict against the Jews. He died in 1641. His medical works have been collected into 2 vols. folio, 1649. He had a grandson who distinguished himself by his skill in mathematics, and was the author of a book called Juchefin, a Jewish chronology, from the creation to the year 1500.—Ibid.

ZALEUCUS, a famous legislator among the Iocrians, a people of Italy, B. C. 500. One of his laws was, that every adulterer should lose his eyes. It happened that his own son was taken in the crime: on which Zaleucus, to satisfy the law, and in some measure save his son, had one of his own eyes taken out, and one of the culprit's.—Ælian.

ZAMOSKI (John), the son of Stanislaus, castellan of Chelm, a city of Red Russia, was a man of great talents and virtue. Being sent to Paris, and afterwards to Padua, he studied with such reputation as to obtain the rectorship of the latter university. It was in this situation that he wrote his Treatises of the Roman Senate, and the Perfect Senator. On his return to Poland he was employed in the highest offices of the state. Stephen Battori gave him his niece in marriage, made him grand chancellor of the kingdom, and afterwards general of his armies. He distinguished himself equally as a military commander and a statesman, by delivering a great part of the Polish dominions from the yoke of Muscovy. On the death of Stephen Battori the Polish nobles offered him the crown, which he refused, and caused Sigismund, prince of Sweden, to be elected. Zamoski died in 1606, honoured justly with the titles of defender of his country and protector of the sciences.—Morri.

ZANCHIUS, or ZANCHY (Jerome), a learned reformer, was born at Alzano, in Italy, in 1516, and entered among the canons regular of Lateran, but becoming intimate with Peter Martyr, he embraced Lutheranism, and quitted Italy. He retired to Strasburgh in 1553, but left that place afterwards, and became professor of divinity at Heidelberg, where he died in 1590. The works of Zanchius were published in 8 vols. folio, in 1613. He was a man of considerable learning, distinguished piety, and of great moderation.—Bayle.

ZANNICELLI (John-Jerome), an Italian physician, was born at Modena in 1669. He fixed his residence at Venice; where he gained a great reputation, and died in 1729. He wrote, 1. Catalogus Plantarum terrestrium, marinarum, &c. 2. Promptuarium remediumum chymicorum, 8vo. 3. De Myriophyllo Pelagico. 4. Lithographia duorum montium Veronensium, &c. 5. De Rusco ejusque preparatione. 8vo. 6. Opuscula Botanica, 4to. 7. History of Plants growing around Venice, folio.—Halleri Bibl. Botan.

ZANNONI (James) a physician and botanist of Bologna. He discovered many plants, and died in 1682. His works are, 1. Historia Botanica, fol. 1675. 2. Rariorum Stirpium Historia, folio.—Haller.

ZANOTTI (Francis Maria Garazzoni), an eminent philosopher, was born at Bologna in 1692. He was educated among the Jesuits, after which he studied the law, which profession he renounced, and applied to the mathematics under Beccari. In 1716 he was appointed secretary to the senate of Bologna, and two years after professor of mathematics in that university. He introduced the Newtonian system instead of the Cartesian. He was also made librarian of the Institute, and compiled two catalogues of its library. In 1766 he became president of the Institute. He died in 1777. He wrote several poetical and philosophical works.

ZARATE (Augustin), a Spanish writer, was sent to Peru in 1543, as treasurer-general of the Indies; and on his return to Europe was employed in the Low Countries. He wrote a History of the Discovery and Conquest of Peru, Antwerp, 8vo. 1555. A French translation was printed at Amsterdam in 1700, 2 vols. 12mo.—Nic. Antonio Hisp. Scrip.

ZACHARIAH, one of the minor prophets, son of Barachiah, and grandson of Iddo. The place of his birth is uncertain. His style resembles that of Jeremiah. He flourished B. C. 520.—Gray.

ZEGEDIN (Stephen), a Lutheran divine, was born in Hungary in 1505. He propagated the protestant religion with great zeal in his native country, for which he was severely persecuted. He died in 1572. His works are, "A Commentary on the Scriptures;" "A Defence of the Trinity," &c.—Moreri.

ZELOTTI (John Baptist), an Italian painter, was born at Verona in 1582, and died in 1592. He was the disciple of Titian; and distinguished for the beauty of his colouring and the elegance of his design.—De Pile.

ZENO, founder of the sect of Stoics, so called from his opening a school in the portico of Stoa, at Athens. He was born at Citium, in Cyprus, but being driven by a storm on the coast of Attica, he settled there, taught philosophy and was the first who brought logic to perfection. He held the principle of fatal necessity, and defended the right of suicide. Zeno one day beat his servant severely for a theft, on which the fellow exclaimed, "It is my fault is it thief." "Yes, firrab," says his master, "and be drubbed for it too." Zeno died B. C. 30 aged 94.—Diog. Laertius.

ZENO, called the Isaurian, emperor of the East, married the daughter of Leo I. in 451. His conduct was so odious, that in 475 he was driven from his throne by Basiliscus, but the year following he recovered it. He died in 491.—Univ. Hist.

ZENO (Apostolo) the father of the Italian opera, was born at Venice in 1659. He established the academy of the Amintori at his native city in 1696, and commenced in 1713 the celebrated periodical work called, Giornale de Letterati. He afterwards became poet-laureat to the emperor Charles V. He wrote Observations on the Italian Historians, 2 vols. 4to; and his dramatic works were printed in 1744, in 11 vols. 8vo. He died in 1750.—Tiraboschi.

ZENOBLA, queen of Palmyra, married Odenatus, a Saracen prince, and contributed to the victories he gained over the Persians which rendered such essential service to the Romans, that she was honoured with the title of Augusta. After the death of her husband she conquered Egypt; but the emperor Aurelian marched against her and laid siege to Palmyra. Being taken she attempted to make her escape, but was conducted to Rome in triumph, and died near that city.—Univ. Hist.

ZEPHANIAH, one of the minor prophets lived in the reign of Josiah, about 624 B. C. He exhorted the Jews to repentance, and predicted the destruction of Nineveh.—Gray's Key O. T.

ZERUBABEL, the son of Salathiel, and of the family of the kings of Judah. He gained the esteem of Cyrus, king of Persia, who gave him the sacred vessels of the temple, with which he returned to Jerusalem, where he rebuilt the temple, which was dedicated B. C. 515.—Prideaux's Connections.

ZEUXIS, of Heraclea, a famous painter. Pliny relates his dispute with Parrhasius for the prize of painting, as follows: Zeuxis painted some grapes so naturally, that the birds used to peck at them; and Parrhasius represented a curtain so artfully, that Zeuxis ordered it to be drawn aside, that he might see the painting behind it; discovering his mistake, he confessed himself outdone, since he had only imposed upon birds, whereas Parrhasius had deceived those who were judges of the art. Zeuxis painted a boy carrying grapes which the birds flew to eat: but the boy was not so well executed as the fruit. His greatest performance was a picture of Helena. He died of laughter on looking at the representation of an old woman which he had made, B. C. 350.—Pliny.

ZIEGLER (James), a mathematician and divine of Suabia, who died in 1524. The principal of his works are, 1. Notae of particular Passages of Scripture, 1548, folio; 2. Description of the Holy Land, 1596, fol.; 3. De Constructione Solidæ Sphæræ, 4to.—Melch. Adam. Vit. Germ. Theol.

ZIGLER (Gaspard), professor of law at Wittenberg, was a native of Leipzig, and died in 1690. His principal works are, De Milite Episcopo; De Diaconis et De Diaconissis; De Episcopis.—Moreri.

ZIMMERMANN (Mathias), a protestant divine, was born at Eperies in 1625. He became minister at Meissen; and died in 1689. His works are, 1. Aménitates Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ, 4to.; 2. Florilegium Philologico-Historicum, 4to.—Ibid.

ZIMMERMANN (John George), a celebrated physician, was born at Brug, in the canton of Berne, in 1728. He studied at Göttingen under Haller, and afterwards attended the lectures of Gaubius. On his return to his own country he applied principally to literature, but without neglecting his profession. His writings recommended him to the friendship of the king of Prussia, and he was appointed, by the regency of Hanover, physician to his Britannic majesty. He died in 1795. His works are a poem on the Earthquake at Lisbon, 1755; a Physiological Dissertation on Irritability; an Essay on Solitude; this has been translated into French and English; an Essay on National Pride.—Life by Tissot.

ZINCK (Christian Frederick), an enamel painter, was born at Dresden about 1684, and came to England in 1706, where he studied under Boil, whom he surpassed. He painted portraits of many of the royal family, and died in 1767.—Pitt.

ZINZENDORF (Nicholas Lewis, count), was born of a noble family in Saxony, and rendered himself remarkable as the founder, or rather reviver, of the religious society commonly called in this country Moravians, abroad Herrnhuters, and by themselves the United Brethren. They settled first in Upper Lusatia in 1722; and becoming considerable, formed a village called Herrnhut in 1732. A few years afterwards they came to England, having been persecuted in their own country; and by means of general Oglethorpe and other distinguished persons, they obtained a settlement here under a particular act of parliament, by which they were distinguished from other sects. Their government is episcopal, their doctrine sound, and their manners irreproachable; but what renders them particularly deserving of respect is, the pains which they have successfully taken in the propagation of the gospel in heathen countries. Count Zinzendorf died in 1760, and was succeeded in the government of the Brethren by count Dolina.—Spangenberg's Hist. of the Unitas Fratrum.

ZISKA, or Ziska (John), a gentleman of Bohemia, who became the leader of the Hussites, and rendered himself very formidable by several victories. He lost an eye in one action, and the other at the siege of Rabi, but still continued to oppose the emperor Sigismund, who sent ambassadors to offer him the government of Bohemia. Amidst the negotiation Ziska died of the plague in 1424. The story of his ordering his skin to be made into a drum to animate his followers, is a fable.—Moreri.

ZOX, the fourth wife of the emperor Leo VI. and mother of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, during whose minority she governed the empire with discretion, quelling the revolt of Constantine Ducas, obliging the Bulgarians to return to their own country, and making a peace with the Saracens: Constantine, when he came of age, sent her into exile, where she died. There was another of this name, who was daughter of Constantine XI. and wife of Argyrus, whom she murdered, and married Michael the Paphlagonian. She died in 1050.—Univ. Hist.

ZOILUS, a rhetorician of Thrace, who flourished about 270 years B. C. He criticized the Iliad with such virulence as to be called Homeromastix, and the dog; and his name has become so familiar as to be applied to all snarling critics.—Vossius.

ZOLLIKOFFER (George Joachim), a protestant divine, was born in Switzerland in 1730; and educated at Bremen and Utrecht. After officiating in the Pays de Vaud, he obtained a settlement at Monstein in the Grisons, from whence he removed to Isenbourg; and in 1758 to Leipzig. He died in 1788. He wrote a book of Devotions, and two volumes of Sermons, both translated into English.—Preface to his Sermons.

ZONARAS (John) a Greek historian, was employed in state affairs at the court of Constantinople, but afterwards turned monk. He compiled a Chronicle or Annals from the Creation to A. D. 1118. He was also the author of Commentaries on the Apostolic Canons.—Moreri.

ZONCA (Victor), an able mathematician of Italy in the 17th century, who published a collection of curious inventions in mechanics, entitled Novo Teatro di Machini et Edificii, Padua, 1621, folio.—Ibid.

ZORRO (Mark), an historical and portrait painter, was born at Bologna in 1451. He was the disciple of Andrew Mantegna, whose style he imitated. He died in 1517.—De Piles.

ZOPYRUS, one of the courtiers of Darius, the son of Hystaspes. He cut off his nose and ears at the siege of Babylon, and went over to the Babylonians, pretending that Darius had exercised this cruelty upon him. In hopes he would be stimulated by revenge, they gave him the command of their army, which he treacherously betrayed to Darius.—Herodotus.

ZOROASTER, or Zerdusht, a philosopher of antiquity, is supposed to have lived in the reign of Darius Hystaspes. He has been by some called the founder, and by others the reformer, of the Magian religion. Others consider him a Jew, or that he received his education in Judea. He taught that nothing could render men unworthy of the divine favour but vices. Of all virtues, he esteemed what the Greeks called philanthropy, for which reason he exhorted his followers to acts of beneficence. He gave his disciples a form of devotion, which they affirmed was brought from heaven. The Magi, or priests, were of three ranks, over whom was an archimagus, which office he assumed himself. He lost his life at Balck, when it was taken.—Bayle.

ZOSMUS, an ancient historian in the beginning of the fifth century. He wrote the History of the Emperors from Augustus to his own time, part of which is extant, and was printed at Oxford, in 1679, 8vo. He declaims with great asperity against the Christians.—Ibid.

ZOUCH (Richard) a civilian, was born at Andley in Wiltshire, and educated at Winchester school; from whence he removed to New-college, Oxford, and afterwards became an advocate in Doctors' Commons. He was also chancellor of the diocese of Oxford, principal of Alban-hall, and judge of the high court of admiralty. He died in 1660. He wrote some books on jurisprudence, in Latin; and Cases and Questions Resolved in the Civil Law, 8vo. 1652. But his principal work is, a Vindication of the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, against Sir Edward Coke, 8vo.—Wood.

ZOUVE (Gerard) a German painter, who was celebrated for his portraits of men, in which he had more success than in painting ladies. He lived in London, where he had Riley for a pupil. He died in 1681.—Verrius. Granger.

ZUCCHERO (Taddeo), a painter, was born in the duchy of Urbino, in 1539. He studied the works of Raphael, and by his acquaintance with anatomy excelled in painting human figures. He died in 1566.

His brother Frederic was a good artist, he was obliged to quit Rome for painting a picture in which several officers of the papal court were represented with asses' ears. He afterwards went to Spain, France, and England, and was employed by persons of the highest rank. The pope recalled him, erected an academy for him at Rome, and gave him the title of prince. He died in 1609.

ZWINGLIUS (Ulric), an eminent reformer, was born at Wildhausen, in 1487. While he officiated as preacher at Zurich, he declaimed against the church of Rome, and produced a reformation in Switzerland. He published a book on the Eucharist, in which he denied the Lutheran doctrine, which occasioned great controversy, and his followers were called Zwinglians. He afterwards took up arms against the Catholics, and died in the field of battle in 1531. His works are extant in 4 vols. folio.

ZUMBO (Gaston John), a sculptor, was born at Syracuse in 1656. He resided at Florence, where he was employed by the grand duke. He afterwards removed to Paris, and died there in 1701.—Morri.

ZWINGER (Theodore), a learned physician, was born at Basil in Switzerland. He compiled a great work, called The Theatre of Human Life, 8 vols. folio. He died in 1589, aged 54.—Morri.

ZWINGER (Theodore), a descendant of the preceding, and professor of eloquence, philosophy, and medicine, at Basil, died in 1724, after having published, 1. A Botanical Theatre, 1690, folio; 2. Fasciculus Dissertationum, 4to.; 3. Dissertatio de acquirenda vitæ longevitate, &c.—Morri.

ZYPSEUS, or VANDEN ZYP (Francis) a learned writer, was born at Malines in 1630. The bishop of Antwerp appointed him canon and archdeacon of his church. He died in 1680, aged 75. He wrote, 1. Analitica enarratio juris Pontificii novi. 2. Consultationes Canonice. 3. Notitiz Juris Belgici. 4. De Jurisdictione Ecclesiastica & Civili.—Ibid.

CORRIGENDA.

In article ATTERBURY, for "died at Paris in 1732" read 1731.

———— BURGH (James), in the list of his works, "The Answer to Mr. Lindley's Apology" should have been omitted, as it was not written by him, but by a learned lay gentleman, William Burgh, LL. D. of Yorkshire, who is still living.

———— CHAPONE (Sarah) for Sarah read Hester.

———— FRANCE, line 12, for 510 read 540.

* * * Notwithstanding the immense labour which has been employed to give to the second Edition of this Dictionary every possible degree of completeness and accuracy, the learned Reader may perhaps discover trivial omissions and imperfections, which, in printing ten thousand Articles, and above seven thousand Dates, it was impossible totally to avoid. Notices of such, and hints for any kind of improvement, will be thankfully received, if addressed post-paid to Mr. Phillips, No. 6, Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

*. The English language has hitherto been without any popular view of Universal History. It will be immediately confessed by every competent Judge, that Bossuet is too short and unsatisfactory; that Voltaire, whoever may be his merits in other respects, is too gay, unelaborate, and desultory; and that the great English Universal History is rather to be consulted like a Dictionary than to be perused as an Analysis of the subject to which it relates. The author of the present work has been solicitous to avoid the extremes of prolixity and brevity, and to be at once clear, distinct, and comprehensive; he hopes, therefore, that his work will prove a desirable acquisition to young persons, to public schools, to libraries, to circulating libraries, to all private collections, and in general, to all persons to whom the great Universal History, in sixty-six volumes, is either too voluminous, or too expensive.

THE HISTORY of MODERN EUROPE, or a complete HISTORY of the States and Kingdoms of EUROPE, from the time of Charlemagne; in a series of letters to a young nobleman. By WILLIAM RUSSELL, M. D. In five large volumes, 8vo. 2l. 5s. boards.

MEMOIRS of the LIFE of the late LEE LEWES, the comedian, written by himself, and containing anecdotes of the English, Scottish, and Irish Stage during a period of forty years. Published by his son, JOHN LEE LEWES, Esq. in four volumes, small 8vo. price 16s. in boards.

BOOKS recently published by R. PHILLIPS.

MEMOIRS of the LIFE of the late SAMUEL FOOTE, commonly called the English Aristophanes, with anecdotes of his contemporaries and a collection of his bons mots, CHIEFLY ORIGINAL. By WILLIAM COOKE, Esq. in three elegant volumes, small 8vo. price 13s. 6d. boards.

PUBLIC CHARACTERS of 1805—6, consisting of biographical memoirs of eminent living persons, faithfully and impartially compiled from authentic sources. In one large volume, 8vo. price half-a-guinea, boards.

Also new editions of the SEVEN preceding volumes, each at the same price.

"This work proceeds according to its first design, and it improves as it advances. The volumes contain a considerable number of memoirs of our contemporaries, who figure in the moral, the political, and the scientific walks of society. The discussion of living characters is a difficult and delicate task, but in the execution of it, the authors of this work have acquitted themselves with as much success as can reasonably be expected."

"A spirit of candour and moderation evidently pervades the present publication. Some of the characters are drawn with great discrimination, and display an acuteness of powers, and a felicity of expression, not to be found in the fleeting productions of the day. In short, the work abounds in moral and critical observations, that evince correctness of judgment and delicacy of taste."

"The memoirs contained in these volumes are full and accurate in point of information; judicious in their literary and critical strictures; and exhibit well-drawn and appropriate characters of their respective subjects. They are not written under the uniform influence of any particular theological or political bias."

"This work excites much curiosity, because it professedly treats of living characters, and we infer that its information is impartial and correct. It is but justice to own, that we have been altogether amused by the publication."

"This work discovers respectable traits of discrimination, and has the merit of being uncontaminated by the virulence of party spirit. We perceive in the successive volumes, superior spirit, more extensive information, and in many of the lives, no common precision and elegance."

A BIOGRAPHICAL INDEX to the PRESENT HOUSE of COMMONS, containing correct notices of the lives, the family and party connections, parliamentary conduct, and other particulars, relative to all the members of the Commons house of parliament; intended as a companion to Debrett's and Kearsley's Peerage. Closely printed in one large volume, royal 18mo. with plates, price 10s. 6d. in boards, or 12s. bound and lettered.

WALPOLIANA; consisting of original bon mots, apophthegms, observations on life and literature, with extracts from unpublished letters of the late HORACE WALPOLE, EARL OF ORFORD. In two elegant volumes, foolscap 8vo. embellished with two vignette titles, and with fac similies of the hand-writing of MR GRAY, and MR. WALPOLE, price 9s. in boards.

ADDISONIANA; a work relating to the life, times, and contemporaries of MR. ADDISON, on the same plan as the Walpoliana: embellished with portraits, &c. and with seven letters of MR. ADDISON never before published, exactly engraved from the originals. In two elegant volumes, price 10s. 6d. in boards.

SWIFTIANA; relating to DEAN SWIFT, on the plan of the two preceding, with portraits and with fac similies of Swift, Bolingbroke, Voltaire, and others of his contemporaries. In two elegant volumes, 10s. 6d. boards.

BROOKIANA; consisting of original anecdotes, papers, and observations of HENRY BROOKE, Esq. the celebrated author of the Fool of Quality. Gustavus Vasa, &c. &c. compiled by CHARLES WILSON, in two volumes, 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.

N. B. The editors consider it as a duty which they owe to themselves to state, that these works do not consist of mere selections, or of "the beauties" of their respective authors, but are an attempt towards the production of a limited series of genuine English annals, which they hope will excite as lively and permanent an interest among the lovers of English literature, as works on the same plan have long excited in the literature of France.

THE SPIRIT of the FRENCH ANAS, or Selections from the best of the French Anas, interspersed with biographical sketches, and forming one of the most interesting and entertaining books in our language. In three elegant volumes, small 8vo. with portraits, price 15s. boards.

THE LETTERS and other WORKS of the RT. HON. LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU, now first published, by permission, from the original manuscripts in the possession of the Most Noble the Marquis of BUTE; none of which had hitherto been printed, excepting an imperfect copy of the letters from Constantinople. To the whole are prefixed authentic memoirs of her life. By the REV. JAMES DALLAWAY, M. B. interspersed with letters hitherto unpublished, from Pope, Young, Fielding, and other distinguished characters. In five volumes, foolscap 8vo. price 11. 5s. in boards, decorated with a portrait, by Caroline Watson, and with fac similies.
